It required patience, perseverance and self-sacrifice, and she possessed these virtues in a rare degree also. It required system, and of this she made a specialty. Each member of the family had his separate duty, and he was required to perform it. No one was allowed to avoid or shirk a duty. Though she had had but meager opportunities in youth, she was a well-informed woman, a great reader, and was possessed of a strong and vigorous intellect, and was a strong believer in the force and effect, oneness of an education. To this end she bended every energy of her being, and there was simply no sacrifice which she would not make in order to educate her children. As long as she could teach them herself she would work until midnight, if necessary, to aid them in their studies; and when they were advanced beyond her power to teach she procured the best teachers to be had, regardless of cost or what it meant in the way of sacrifice to her own comfort.

Knowing the baleful effect of evil associations, she erected around her home a barrier against the intrusion of evil associates, and on this matter, as well as most others, there was with her no compromise or half-way ground. More than once have I longed for the opportunity of attending or inviting what appeared to me then innocent amusements, but she saw them differently, and that was the end of it. It looked hard to me then, but I know better how to appreciate it now.

Her own life was absolutely merged into that of her children; and with a firmness which knew no yielding, and yet a love which was as boundless as the ocean, she set about her duties to them without ever as much as a thought of herself. Her one aim in life was to be a perfect mother for her fatherless children, and there is but one opinion among those who knew her upon that subject.

While her family claimed her first love and attention, she was not unmindful of the larger sphere of her duty to humanity as well. Charitable to the poor, loving and tender to the distressed, she became the counselor and comforter of many a poor widow and orphan who came to her for advice. Her old neighbors loved and honored her to the end, and were among the most sincere mourners who stood around her bedside and grave.

Without cant or public ostentation she was deeply religious. She took the "Man of Sorrows" as her guide, and followed that leadership to the end. During all of her trouble and sorrows I have never known anyone else who had such implicit confidence as she felt in the efficacy of prayer. She carried her burdens to the "Husband of the widow" and "Father of the fatherless" without any question as to whether in so doing she would find relief. I have never known anyone else who studied the Bible as she did. Without any extraneous aids or helps she read and studied it for what she found in it. She had committed it largely to memory, and there was hardly a condition possible for which she would not find a parallel and a word of comfort in the Bible; and in her last days, when her mental faculties were less acute, she never forgot the teachings of her Bible—a well-marked copy of which she has left us as a legacy—and could quote passage after passage applicable to her condition. Next to her Bible she loved the Methodist hymn book. Charles Wesley was her favorite poet. Her favorite song began, "Jesus, I my cross have taken," and I have heard her sing it a thousand times as she bore the cross of her new and trying responsibility. Her faith never wavered for an instant, and she talked of death with the resignation of a saint. She had expected it for years, and while she willingly waited God's providence in that as in all other things, it possessed for her no element of terror. She was deeply grateful for the evidences of that love and affection which formed a part of the very being of all those among whom her precious life had been spent, and it was a "labor of love" to minister to her wants in her old age. There were many who stood about her dying couch who felt that her life had been to them a constant benediction, and whose fondest recollections are coupled with her memory.

She has gone from among us, and has passed beyond the call of human voices, but the world is better for her having lived in it and having her example left. She entered the "valley of the shadow of death" in the full hope that there was light and life beyond; and I have no doubt that as the death-damp gathered upon her aged, but lovely brow, there arose on her vision the sunrise of the eternal morning.

AS AN EDUCATOR

Rev. C. W. Carter, Pres.

Jackson, La.

Something Good in Dixie.

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures this affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "verilable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

The Head is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

Needle Bar is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

Improved Automatic Bobbin Winder which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

Self-Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Nearly 80,000 barrels of California flour were sent to England this year.

A tornado struck Perry county, Ala., last week, and did much damage. Fifteen persons were killed.

Rev. Sam Small has offered his services to the Democratic Campaign Committee for Bryan speeches during September and October. They were accepted.

Mr. Bryan, in his speech at New York, last week, accepting the Democratic nomination to the presidency, made a detailed and extended argument in favor of the free coinage of silver.

A great rainstorm burst over Pittsburg and vicinity on Aug. 13, deluging a territory of several miles in area, swelling streams into torrents, sweeping away bridges and buildings, and sending lives into eternity.

The woodenware establishment of J. C. Morris Company, Limited, in this city, was burned on Aug. 14, and adjoining stores were badly damaged. The loss will reach one hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

The Democratic State Central Committee met in this city on Aug. 13, and endorsed Bryan and Sewall. Gov. Foster made an address, in which he said that party success means more for Louisiana than the triumph of any financial theory.

A party of Spaniards are in the city for the purpose of buying 3,000 mules for the use of the Spanish troops in Cuba. Kansas City, St. Louis, New Orleans and elsewhere will supply the mules. The purchase price is $100,000, which will be paid in gold.

FOREIGN.

The trouble which has been in progress in the Island of Crete, for some months past, has assumed an international phase which elevates it to the rank of highest importance.

Dr. Nansen, the Norwegian Arctic explorer, who sailed from Christiana, Norway, June 24, has reached Norway on his return home. He did not find the pole, but claims to have approached a little nearer than was ever accomplished by anyone before him.

It appears settled that the Czar will leave St. Petersburg on Aug. 24 for a European tour, and that he will return home on Nov. 1, the programme being Vienna, Breslau, Copenhagen, Balmoral, Paris and Darmstadt. The French are already working up the excitement.

DO NOT EXPERIMENT in so important a matter as your health. Purify, enrich and vitalize your blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla and thus keep yourself strong and healthy.

HOOD'S PILLS are the best after-dinner pill; assist digestion, cure headache. 25 cents.

The Spanish government is preparing a big bill of damages to be presented to the United States on account of the numerous expeditions alleged to have gone from our shores to the relief of the Cuban insurgents. In support of its claim to reparation it intends to invoke the precedent established by the United States against Great Britain in the celebrated Alabama claims awards made by the Geneva arbitration tribunal.

Here's a Chance to Make Money!

I have worked hard all my life and never had a streak of good luck till the past year, and I think my experience may be beneficial to many others. I have cleared more than $20 a day for over a year selling Climax Dish Washers, and I think any man or woman can do as well as I have, if they only WILL, as I had no experience. It don't take long to get rich clearing $20 a day. Every family wants a Dish Washer, and you can sell them at home; no canvassing. That is why a lady can do as well as a man. I put a notice in the papers, and people send after the washers. The Climax is far superior to any other Dish Washer. Everybody knows of the Climax now. For particulars address the Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio, and they will start you in business, if you will only push.

SCRATCH AND SCREAM

My baby broke out with a rash. He would scratch and scream. It would take two to hold him, and one to put medicine on him. We had to hold him sometimes an hour before we could get him quieted down. All said that they never saw such a face or body on any baby as on him. I had to tie his hands tight in a cloth, night and day, for five months. My sister had used CUTICURA, and I began to use it. After only one application, he lay down and slept as he had not for a month, poor little fellow. He has not a scar on him now, and is as fair and his flesh is as soft as any baby While he had this disease I had to cut the sleeves out of his clothes, and put gauze underwear on him to keep him cool. I had to keep pieces of soft cloth around his neck, it was so wet with moisture from the sores, and I had to change the cloths sometimes ten or twelve times a day. MRS. A. HAYNES, Llaben, N. D.

MY WORK.

BY ELIZA J. CARR.

I can not labor in the harvest field,
Ne'er sow the seed, nor watch the fruitful yield,
So in my lonely room I bow in prayer,
"O blessed Lord, thy labor let me share,
The lowliest task that my weak hands can do
Grant me, so I may share thy blessing, too."

The Lord gave answer to my earnest prayer:
"Thou surely shalt my labor also share.
Do first the work that ever lieth near,
Thy heart make pure, so that thou mayest cheer
All those whom I may send to thee for aid,
Nor let thy comfort ever be delayed."

And now I strive for what I long deferred,
"To grow in grace and knowledge of his word."
My doors are ever open, all may share
Each blessing, and my tender, loving care,
And thro' my happy tears I oft can see,
This is the work my Lord hath given to me.

Duty of the Church to Its Young People.

BY STEWART BROOKS, ESQ., OF MOBILE, ALA.

(Concluded.)

VIII.

We have now a little book which is found in the hands of the youth of many of our churches about as frequently as is a copy of the Koran. It is not a very new book, being about a hundred years old, but to many of our youth it would be as new as the latest work on Roentgen rays. It is not very mysterious, either, but for many of them it contains as many wonders as are sung of in the Niebelungenlied. And yet this little book has probably run through more editions than "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is called the Discipline, and we should see to it that it is studied intelligently by our youth. The Epworth League can help much in this work, and does in some churches. In the Government Street Church, Mobile, the League has had a Committee on Discipline study almost from its foundation, and the work of the committee has been productive of great good. Meetings have been held for the study of the Discipline, and members have been prevailed upon to make personal study of it. But this is not enough. The Sunday-school should make the Discipline a regular part of its curriculum, and should insist upon its systematic study, using especially those parts on the cardinal points of church law and doctrine, and the pronouncements against worldly amusements contained in the fifth division of the appendix. There is no reason why this work should not be commenced with the pupil of ten or twelve years who has completed the course of the primary and intermediate departments, and be continued through the junior and senior departments into the adult department. Especially should the Discipline be taught in the normal class, for one of the very drawbacks to Sunday-school instruction on the Discipline now to be met with is the ignorance of the teachers themselves on the subject.

IX.

A great drawback to this line of work in the Sunday-school is the misuse of the International Lesson system. That system, like fire, is an excellent servant, but a very bad master. It assumes this latter character when it monopolizes the whole time of a Sunday-school to the exclusion of all other branches of study. In many instances the lesson papers have actually run the Bible out of the Sunday-school. If we will hold the International Lessons in their proper place, we will have time not only for Bible study, but also for the suggested line of work on church doctrine and polity.

X.

As heretofore suggested, the training in polity should include training in the practical every-day administration of affairs in each particular congregation. On this point our youth, as they attain manhood or womanhood, too often find a great gulf fixed between them and the more settled members of the congregation. These more settled members pray in public and lead in the various church meetings. They are officers in the various organizations of the men and women of the church, and in the different assemblies of the people in the church they are seen discharging their respective functions. But how about the youth? All too often they have been given no real opportunity to lead a meeting; no systematic effort has been made to train them to lead in public prayer, or otherwise to make themselves useful. In the great congregation, in the prayer meeting, in the woman's society of the church, they occupy back seats, if present at all, and feel, as they sit there, the wide gulf that separates them from the others. This condition of things we can change, and we must change. Many of the officials positions in the church, Sunday-school, League, and other organizations in our congregations, can be efficiently filled by the youth. Furthermore, by a little judicious management, we can create many other offices and positions in which to utilize the energies of more of our youth, and by which to bind our youth to the church. With such a condition of things, they will move about in the discharge of their allotted functions feeling that they are being useful; that they are men among men and women among women. Occupied with their duties in the church, they will have less time to listen to the siren songs of the servants of sin. Busy with the Master's work, they will have no time for hair-splitting investigations as to how near they can walk to the chasm of sin without falling in.

XI.

Just a few words, before closing, on public prayer. How many churches have you seen in which there was an abundance of members who would lead in prayer? We may safely assume, then, that the church is badly in need of more praying members. And, aside from this, did you ever think what a steadying influence to a young person is the fact that he prays in public? All other things being equal, he is very much more likely to remain faithful to his church than the one who does not pray in public.

And this applies to girls as well as boys. Without going into the question of whether women should be expected to pray in the general prayer meeting, there are other meetings in the church in which, without doubt, they should be prepared to pray. Again, it is a shame and a reproach for a mother not to be able, if necessary, to lead her children in prayer around the family altar; and the Sunday-school girls of to-day will be the mothers of to-morrow. That girls can be thus trained in the Sunday school, I have demonstrated by actual experiment. When the Government Street Church, in Mobile, was founded in December, 1890, I was placed in charge of a small class of girls, ranging in age from fourteen to sixteen years, all of them strangers to me. We were given a class-room later on, and in about a year the membership of the class had grown to seventeen. Then, after preparing the ground very carefully, I laid before the class a plan to open our class-room work with prayer each Sunday, explaining the whole matter to them carefully, and appealing to their reason in favor of the plan. That Sunday I led myself, and the following Sunday called on one of the girls. From that time on our class exercises were regularly opened with prayer. I delayed calling on some of the more backward members until I could develop them more in other lines of work. Of that large class, only two that I asked declined, and one of those was a communicant in a church that does not believe in extempore prayer. Some months later, when the superintendent called me to a broader field of work and divided our class, it contained about ten members who were in the habit of leading in prayer, and of discussing their spiritual experience in class. Six of those girls have become faithful teachers in the Sunday-school, eight have assumed the duties of wifehood and motherhood, and one has gone to her rest. I can assure you that I look back with pride to the faithful attention to duty and the extraordinary intellectual development of that class. But with far greater gratification do I dwell on the knowledge that their souls are better for that work, and that in their various walks they are still disseminating the spiritual influence of our class.

My friends, if this can be done with girls, it can certainly be done with boys, and it is a service that the Master will accept.

XII.

Allow me to say, in closing, that I have addressed you in plain terms, and without any effort at oratory. I could not play the orator if I would, and I would not on such an occasion as this. The subject is not one for oratory, but for prayer and thought—for close, prayerful study. In addressing you I have tried to select from the vast realms of the subject allotted me a few cardinal points on which my experience, in a measure, justifies my speaking. What has been said is necessarily condensed, and is only intended as suggestive. We can address one another on great principles, but when it comes to the application of these principles in detail we should depend largely on our own efforts for plans. God gave us our individuality, and we should not ignore this fact in our efforts to serve him.

The study that I have done in preparing for this occasion has been of much benefit to me. My prayer is that God will bless the effort to his service.

In the Living Present.

Have read of marriages in moving trains, in ascending balloons, etc., but now comes the news from Europe of one contracted in an iron cage, containing six large lions. The officiating clergyman declined to enter the enclosure, and performed the ceremony in front of the iron bars. It was during the public performance of a circus. Thousands of attendants. The bride was gaudily attired, though the groom wore his usual uniform. The ceremony over, at a given signal the lions, elephants, etc., furiously roared. The boisterousness of the audience can be imagined.

Filled cheese is an artificial product, the same as oleomargarine. Recently Congress has enacted laws regulating its sale. Europeans had been complaining of fraud. The laws enacted will be in force on September the fourth. All filled cheese has to be appropriately stamped. Vendors of same must in their store exhibit a sign stating the fact. Heavy penalties fixed in case of transgression.

Mohammedanism advocates total abstinence from alcoholic beverages. For several years capitalists endeavored to obtain from the government in Constantinople the concession of starting a brewery in Jerusalem. It has been refused, though the applicants offered liberal payment for same. The local government of Palestine can and does give license to sell, but not to manufacture intoxicants. Is it not high time for Christian governments to give this matter serious thought?

The Salvation Army, we are afraid, sometimes courts opposition. In Belleville, Ill., the Roman Catholic and infidel rabble attacked the same during divine service. While we deplore the excessive demonstrativeness of the Army, the attack has aroused intense indignation among Protestants. But what are we going to do about it? Political demagogues need the rabble in carrying their self-seeking plans.

Without love life is a burden—the incipiency of hell. At death love will not cease. Faith and hope will retire to oblivion; but love will continue to animate, to charm, and to bless. Then exercise a loving disposition here below! Love. Not only the lovely. That is natural. Love for Christ's sake. He died, the just for the unjust. He loved even his enemies. Yes,

"The saints of God have found Heaven begun below."

Where love is, there is heaven. Hate belongs to the vocabulary of hell.

The Japanese are denominated the Frenchmen of the East. The appellation correct as to the utter indifference in matters of religion. Ito, the prime minister, is a professed atheist. High and low embraced infidelity. That being so, the present prosperity will be of short duration. Our missions are but as the golden fringe of dark, threatening clouds at sunset.

Ohio follows the example of New York, electrocuting convicted murderers instead of hanging them. It is said to be more humane. Well, penitentiary for life would be even more humane. Repetition of his crime would also be impossible. Termination of life as a punishment can be insisted only in creating terror among the lawless element. Public hanging or decapitation would, it seems to us, answer the purpose best.

Letter from Asheville, N. C.

BY REV. CHAS. F. EVANS, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: This letter, you will observe, hails from Asheville, N. C., where my part on the programme of the Southern Biblical Assembly has drawn me for the past two weeks. It may interest your readers to know that this particular assembly is one feature of the work of the American Society of Religious Education, which is non-sectional and interdenominational. Its object is to promote interest in the subject of religious education as it may be prosecuted at the Sunday-school, fireside, and the colleges, or other literary institutions, either orally or with aid of textbooks. It seeks also to enlist scholars in the investigation of biblical, philosophical, historical, and other themes, as they affect religious education, and to make that study available to the public by discourses and the printed page. In addition, it seeks a better training for Sabbath-school teachers, and provides a noble course of instruction on the English Bible at these assemblies as supplementary to a course of home reading and investigation according to a syllabus which is issued from year to year. The excellent quality of this instruction is well certified by some renowned names on the programme this year, among whom are observed Dr. James H. Carlisle, of Wofford College; Rev. Dr. A. T. Robertson, of the Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., and Rev. Dr. H. A. White, of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va. The lectures of Dr. Carlisle will need no word of commendation to our Sunday-school teachers who have read their Sunday-school Magazines; and the mention of his themes—Saul, David, Absalem, and Solomon—will awaken the sharpest regret among hundreds who failed to hear his lectures. It was no small privilege to hear Dr. White in a series of ten lectures on the Old Testament, part of which were historical, part expository, and part critical. Though much younger and of less fluency and scholarship than Dr. Carlisle, his fine taste, learning and tender Christian spirit united to make the daily study of the Bible a means of grace. "The Study of the Apostolic College," rather homiletical than critical, by Dr. Jas. I. Vance, of Nashville, Tenn., was a rare treat. He divided his subject as the Savior did the apostles when he sent them forth in pairs, and gave us six discourses on the following topics, viz.: "Peter and Andrew; or, The Extremist and Conservative;" "James and John; or, Old Age and Youth;" "Philip and Bartholomew; or, The Dullard and the Sage;" "Thomas and Matthew; or, Doubt and Conviction;" "James and Thaddeus; or, Duty and Doctrine;" and "Simon and Judas; or, The Zealot and the Traitor." Doubtless one purpose of the Savior in sending them forth "two and two" was that each might be the complement of the other, and thus not only double the number of persons reached, but as never could be done apart, that each might count in the measure of his efficiency a full unit.

Among other notabilities on the programme, whom it was a pleasure to meet, were Gen. Jno. Eaton, late United States Commissioner of Education, and Rev. Dr. J. E. Gilbert, the urbane and gifted secretary and ruling spirit of the national society, both resident in Washington; and Rev. Hugh Johnston, D. D., the bright, witty and eloquent Canadian, now pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. Church of the same city. I must not forget to mention also Rev. Dr. J. C. Kilgo, the brilliant preacher and lecturer, now president of Trinity College, North Carolina, and Dr. H. F. Chreitzberg, our worthy pastor at Asheville.

The next assembly will be at Asheville in August, 1897, and pastors who desire to combine improvement and recreation will be glad to hear of arrangements for board at four dollars per week at this famous health resort. Louisianians and Mississippians will find many of their own people here. One good sister, a little near of sight and dull of hearing, from Carondelet Street Church, came to the altar after my sermon to inquire if I was related to the Dr. Evans who used to be in New Orleans. It did me good to meet my old friend, Hon. Judge E. C. Fenner, of your city, though I regretted to see his splendid physique so reduced.

Leaving Morristown, on the S. R. R., and about forty miles north of Knoxville, and traveling west with many a winding bout, in less than three hours we arrived at this lovely spot, called "The Land of the Sky." Without exception, this was the grandest ride of my life. According to the map, in the early afternoon we crossed the Blue Ridge, but according to the facts in the ride, we were all the way in mountain gorges, through which the French Broad river for sixty miles poured its panting torrents. The river is, I suppose, about 400 feet wide, and has a floor of solid rock. On either side mountains, also of solid rock, rise sheer from the water's edge hundreds and hundreds of feet, and while generally clad with foliage, were frequently bare and rugged, sometimes shaping themselves like towers of a vast cathedral hoary with age, and again shapeless, as if torn by some mighty convulsion of nature out of all relationship to surroundings. At one place I was particularly impressed with the construction of the rock, which, from an elevation of probably 200 feet, receded at an angle of forty-five degrees to a point a mile distant in such a way as to show separate laminations from four to six feet thick that lay upon each other to this great height. It looked like a huge piece of masonry without any special shape or use; but at other points the same masonry looked like brickwork, excepting in point of color. For fifty miles our road ran with scant privilege between the river and the mountains; and as the river for thirty-eight miles had a fall of 800 feet, and was always in view, we had a scene of rare beauty and sublimity. It would be vain for me to attempt any description, and yet the adjectives "mad" and "boisterous" and "rapid" and "flashing" and "foaming" and "whirling" and "splashing" make a strange medley in my recollection of the ride.

This little city is 2,376 feet above tide water, and claims a population of 15,000, though occupying space enough to quarter ten times that number. I asked the carriage driver, on my way from depot, what supported the town, and the sable gentleman replied, "Its delightful climate." It has every appearance of thrift in its finely appointed residences, stores, and public buildings. My genial host, Col. J. M. Ray, who has watched the town's growth for forty years, says that one hundred thousand visitors annually pay tribute to the salubrity of its climate.

Through courtesy of Dr. Chreitzberg, our brainy and popular pastor, I was permitted to survey the country from some of its historic eminences. I stood on one peak 3,800 feet high, and looking southwest saw twenty miles off Mount Pisgah, 5,757 feet high, and in opposite direction Mount Mitchell, 6,700 feet high, thirty miles distant, and yet neither seemed too far away for an easy morning drive. I presume no country is in higher state of cultivation, for there were luxuriant corn-fields one to two thousand feet above the city level on mountain sides, where a horse could not walk or man hardly stand. Some one asked how the farmer managed to get his seed planted on such heights, and was told, "Some were planted with a shot gun and some with a mountain howitzer."

Of course, one great object of interest here is the Vanderbilt estate, called "Biltmore," after his father and mother. It comprises 120,000 acres of land lying between the French Broad and Swannanoa rivers. Already he has spent from six to eight million dollars, and yet continues at the rate of a million annually. Seventy-five miles of macadamized road, as good as the government road on Missionary Ridge, runs through his grounds. Twelve miles of this, called his Arboretum, is fringed with six million of propagated plants of multiplied varieties. Indeed, everything that will grow in this climate he is carefully cultivating, and has made arrangements for exchange with the great florists of all lands. He has four tree-ferns which are said to have cost him $40,000. His palace is in the style of the Gothic renaissance, and is built principally of sandstone and marble, with framework of steel, and inside finishings of mahogany and other hard woods. Its total length is 700 feet, and greatest width 192 feet, while from basement to turret it is 190 feet high. It has ample provisions for entertainment in banquet, concert, and dancing-halls, an art gallery, libraries and apartments for indoor games, and courts for outdoor exercises, together with lakes for fishing and boating, and preserves for hunting, not to mention his well-stocked stables for driving, and a herd of some 300 fine Jersey cows. I was told that he also ran a nursery of shrubs, plants and trees, a truck farm, a brick and tile factory, a lumber and planing-mill, and a sash and blind factory. By means of a written permit I was admitted to these grounds and privileged to drive through them, but not allowed to go through the palace. Mr. Vanderbilt pays liberal salaries to all of his servants; very liberal to the superintendents of the several departments, and to the chief superintendent twenty-five thousand a year. There is one abatement to Mr. Vanderbilt's happiness—he is a bachelor. I feel sure it is not his misfortune, but his fault, and yet he is in good repute as a Christian gentleman of literary habits and benevolent impulses. I have bought a glass paper-weight, in which is a picture of a rude log-cabin that is named "The house Mr. Vanderbilt could not buy." It is situated in the midst of his estate, and has about it five acres of ground, and is the property of a negro man. He was offered five hundred, then a thousand, then two, three, four and five thousand dollars for his place; but he declined it all bravely, saying he did not care to sell, as Mr. Vanderbilt was a clever gentleman and a good neighbor. He was offered ten thousand dollars, and this he also declined, saying if it was worth so much to Mr. Vanderbilt, it was worth that to him, and so he holds possession, and lives on good terms with his rich neighbor.

LEAD ME, O LORD!

BY ADELAIDE A. PROCTER.

I do not ask, O Lord! that life may be
A pleasant road;
I do not ask that flowers should always spring
Beneath my feet;
I know too well the poison and the sting
Of things too sweet.

For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead—
Lead me aright,
Though strength should fail and though heart should bleed,
Through peace to light.

I do not ask my cross to understand,
My way to see;
Better in darkness just to feel thy hand,
And follow thee.

Joy is like restless day, but peace divine
Like quiet night;
Lead me, O Lord! till perfect day shall shine
Through peace to light.

Letter from California.

I have just returned from a day's "outing." Mrs. Oats, Coral, Coleman and myself got us up some fruit, a beefsteak, and some bread, tea, and so forth, after our breakfast this morning, and drove about six miles to "Gage's Wells," when we spent the day enjoying a family picnic. "Gage's Wells" consist of 150 artesian wells sunk in the basin of the Santa Ana river, out of which a vast volume of water flows, with which many hundreds of acres in the vicinity of the city of Riverside and in Riverside county are irrigated, and a vast country, that would otherwise be bleak and barren, is made to blossom as the rose. These wells are just below where the river emerges from the mountains. The water flowing out of these wells is what is called the underflow of the river. The river basin is about an average of a half mile wide, which, with the exception of a small stream a few inches deep and a few feet wide, is a dry-looking sand-bed. Every mile or two ditches penetrate this stream and carry all the water away to irrigate the farms, leaving a perfectly dry bed below, apparently; but within a few hundred yards enough water collects to form a stream similar to the one above the ditch. These ditches extend from several miles above the mouth of the canyon, from which the river issues, to the ocean, a distance of, perhaps, 100 miles. Each ditch carries water to hundreds of acres, containing numerous ranches of various sizes. Each ditch is controlled by a corporation composed of those who own or those who lease the lands, each acre of land being entitled to a certain amount of water called "a water right," and the sale, or lease, of the land carries with it the water right, which makes the purchaser, or lessee, a member of the corporation. After all the water of the river had been exhausted by these ditches, there were still vast portions of the adjacent country without water. Observation taught the people that the sand in the river basin, extending hundreds of feet in depth, was full of water, and some enterprising man induced capitalists to engage in a scheme of sinking these wells. They secured a charter and rights from the State, sank the wells and now sell the water to the ranchers. The system we visited today is owned by a syndicate in London, England. There are other similar enterprises lower down the river, and plans are on foot for new companies to open up others still.

Picnics of all sorts are the order of this season all over California. Our church gave one for the Sunday-school a few weeks since, and we all went to Rabel Springs, about five miles from town. These are numerous hot springs, where the water boils up from the earth so hot and in such a quantity as to form a considerable stream, which continues its thermal properties for some miles below, and is known as "Warm Creek." These springs are fitted up with beautiful shaded pleasure grounds, numerous bath-houses, and an artificial lake, where one can enjoy a warm swim. This lake is three hundred feet in circumference, nearly circular, and the water from one to six feet deep. There were over two hundred of us in our picnic, and many of them from five years old up to fifty were all in the swim. It was quite an interesting sight.

About a week ago some of the young people of the church made up a party for a moonlight picnic at Rabel Springs, and the preacher and family were invited to join it. At 7:30 P. M. the crowd gathered at the church, and a ranch wagon, drawn by four stout horses, carried twenty-two of us. We were indeed a jolly party. We had a number of well-filled lunch-baskets along. After such of the crowd as so desired had enjoyed a swim, we ate our lunches and returned home.

These moonlight picnics are numerous, but this is the only one I have participated in, and, therefore, it was a novel experience to me. This is the camping and pleasure season of California. Everybody expects to spend some time in this sort of life during the three Summer months. They go, some into the mountains, and some to the sea-coast. One traveling along the beach would see the white tents of the campers on almost every available spot from San Diego to British Columbia, and one in the mountains would see the same thing in every canyon possible to get into. The result of this is that there is very little business done, and the habitations in town and country are to a large extent tenantless. It causes the churches to be empty, and no progress is possible in religious work. Many of the churches close up entirely. In some cases two congregations will unite, and their pastors will each take turns in having an "outing," the one remaining at home doing the preaching for both congregations. I have been a party to this plan in some of my charges. This year six churches of the city (Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Baptist, Campbellite, and two Methodist) are uniting during July and August in the Sunday evening services, each preacher taking his turn in the preaching. The services are all held in my church, it being the most central, and having next to the largest seating capacity, and being the best appointed church in the city.

I suppose I had better close, as I have already made my letter too long for space and editor's good temper, though I know the latter is well-nigh inexhaustible. I have not written as I intended when I began, but trust it will be satisfactory to a large class who may be interested in the peculiarities of California life. My former letter contained a misstatement, which, I presume, was a slip of the pen. It stated that the thermometer in Summer often goes up to 120. I should have said it sometimes goes up that high. The average temperature is not higher than 80. It has not gone above 113 this year, and that was only for two or three days. Q. A. OATS.

Delhi District, Louisiana Conference.

I am in the midst of my third round of quarterly meetings. I can report spiritual growth generally. Up to date over two hundred converted and joined the church. I believe that the Rayville charge leads in numbers, and Floyd next. Bro. Evans expects to have the new church in Monroe enclosed by Conference, if not finished. Bro. Riggs, on the Floyd work, will complete a real nice new church at Oak Grove very soon, and when completed will have it paid for.

The drouth is probably as bad in my district, generally, as in any part of the State. We will not average more than one-seventh of a crop in corn or cotton; and the drouth, continuing so late, the pea, potato and hog crops, together with Fall gardens, will be almost an entire failure.

Our pastoral claims were in advance of last year, generally, down to the first of July. Since that time they are falling off. Our general collections will probably be very short. Some of the pastors have subscriptions about covering all claims; but whence the ability to pay? It may be that the government will be called on for help; but it should be the last resort, as there is quite a tendency to idleness and spendthrift all the time, expecting government aid in case of great scarcity. The health of the country this far is good. "We trust in God and do good;" thus "we dwell in the land, and verily we shall be fed."

Can You Help?

MR. EDITOR: I enclose you a sample of letters often received by college presidents. Our hearts are made to bleed for young ladies longing for an education. They beg to be allowed to work their way through, at any sort of work. We assist many worthy young ladies, but thousands are begging for an opportunity. Will our wealthy laymen not help the girls of the land? They endow male schools, but what about our girls, who are to be the mothers of the coming generation? Somebody will have to give an account for this neglect. The letter is as follows:

"DEAR BROTHER: I have a favor to ask of you, and for humanity's sake I hope you will grant it. I have a niece, Miss ——, at ——, Ala., who should, by all means, be at college. She is a bright, energetic, ambitious girl, but is poor. Her parents are utterly unable to send her without help. They could furnish her books and clothes. Now, my request is, that you take her and finish her education, and allow her the privilege of paying you afterwards. This she will gladly do, I think. I myself will become personally responsible for the obligation. It may be that she can teach during vacation and pay you in part at least each year. I myself may be able to pay some each year. But to school she must go, somehow, somewhere. I would like for you to have her—you know the family. Can you help me in the matter? Yours sincerely, etc.,

I will take a few girls of this kind if some brother will recommend them and be responsible.

Rev. David Merchant.

The subject of this sketch was born in Lawrence county, Miss., Feb. 21, 1834, and died at his home near Ellisville, Miss., March 31, 1896.

Bro. Merchant was blessed with Christian parentage. His father was a local preacher. Our brother was born of the Spirit, and joined the Methodist Church when quite young. The exact date is not known to the writer.

He was married to Miss Eliza Reed, Dec. 10, 1865. Four children—three boys and one girl—were the fruit of this marriage, all of whom, with the mother, survive him.

From Bro. R. B. Downer I learn that Bro. Merchant entered the Mississippi Conference on trial some time during the war. After traveling a number of years, failing health compelled him to locate. He was readmitted into the Conference in 1884, but, on account of physical infirmities, he was soon placed upon the superannuated list.

Bro. Merchant never professed to be a ten- or even a five-talent servant. He felt that he possessed, at least, one, and he did all he could to improve it. He was thankful that he was counted worthy to labor even in the hyways and hedges of his Master's vineyard. He served scanty fields and hard circuits, where his consecration to the Lord was oftimes severely tested; and, so far as this writer has been able to learn, he never flinched, or asked the Bishop or presiding elder to change his appointment. The following are some of the charges he served, viz.: Ponchatoula, Baton Rouge circuit, Louisville, Carthage, Coleville, Williamsburg, State Line, Marion, Walker, and others. These circuits were very large in those days, and the pastor was compelled to be continually on the go in order to do the pastoral work and fill his appointments, which the following, copied from Bro. Merchant's diary for January, 1874, will show: "Sabbath, 18th, preached at Enon; Monday, 19th, traveled, and spent the night at Bro. H.'s; Tuesday, 20th, traveled, and spent the night at Bro. Harper's; Wednesday, 21st, saw Bro. E. J. Taylor, went with him to Bro. L.'s, spent the night; Thursday, started to Zion's Seminary, was caught in a hard rain, stopped and spent the night; Friday, 23rd, went with Bro. T. to Z. S., and from there to Bro. Jno. Napier's; Saturday, 24th, went to Williamsburg, spent the night with Bro. Holloway; Sabbath, 25th, preached from St. Luke xv, 18, rode eight miles and preached again, spent the night at Sister McR.'s; Monday, 26th, went to Bro. W.'s, spent two nights; 28th, went to Ellisville and preached at night; 29th, went 16 miles, and preached, and spent the night with Mr. B.," etc.

Bro. Merchant loved the institutions of the church, and contributed freely for their support. Once at Conference a collection for foreign missions called from him a subscription of $25, and at the time he served a $100-mission himself; yet in due time the subscription was paid.

While a superannuate, he cheerfully out of his meagre allowance contributed towards "Conference claim-ment fund," "Millsaps College," and the various Conference collections. He loved the brethren, and was always willing to sit at their feet and learn. Humble and meek, he passed through life hopeful, and trusted in the Lord to supply all his need.

For many years he endured great bodily suffering, and over a year before his death he lost the sight of his right eye from intense pain. He was confined to his bed several weeks before he died, but he bore his afflictions patiently—yea, even joyously. His favorite expression during his last illness was, "Glory! Glory!" He realized for some time that his active mission was ended, and, therefore, death was a welcome messenger to both soul and body. His end was peace. He sleeps near a little schoolhouse where he loved so well to preach, near Ellisville, Jones county, Miss. In due time the Master will give him his reward. F. M. K.

P. S.—I thought surely some one who knew Bro. Merchant better would have furnished the ADVOCATE with a sketch of his life ere this, or I would have had this published sooner. K.

Rev. J. P. Moore.

"Man that is born of woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not." We were forcibly reminded of this fact as we stood around the bedside of Rev. J. P. Moore and saw him breathe his last.

Bro. Moore, of Okolona circuit, Aberdeen district, North Mississippi Conference, is no more. He died Aug. 5, at seven o'clock P. M., at the Methodist parsonage in Aberdeen. His death was triumphant, and his end was peace. His wife had just preceded him about a month. So in death they were not long separated. They leave one little girl, the heritage of the church. Truly a good man has gone from his work.

More Laborers.

Sisters, the Master has come and calleth for thee! By him "who spake as never man spake" we are not only encouraged, but commanded to "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." The report from the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions and the Conference societies all show that never before was there a more urgent need for laborers for mission work than the present.

(The middle wall of partition between Foreign and Home Missions we believe has been broken down by the all consuming love of our Savior, and together they stand as one—"His harvest.")

Many splendid resolutions have been recently adopted by the Plan of Work Committees of the W. F. M. Society and P. and H. M. Society of our church. It remains for us now to do that which we resolved.

With an enthusiasm born of faith in God, at the W. B. F. Missions, recently held in Washington, D. C., we pledged an effort on our part to enroll for the coming year one hundred thousand members for the foreign work. Our faith takes hold of the promise: "Ask what thou wilt in Jesus' name, and it shall be given unto thee."

With new work opened in Sang Kang, and a determination to enter, if possible, Japan next year, the need for more laborers is very great. Those "at ease in Zion" must be aroused, and, believing God's way to be the best way at all times, let the M. E. Church, South, as a unit pray for more laborers in his harvest.

The late Mr. Neeshima, of Japan, when planning an evangelistic tour, said to his followers, "Advance on your knees." Prayer without work is idle presumption; but when joined together and blessed of God, forms a "combination" that will unlock the vaults of heaven and enable us to remove the mountain of difficulty now rising before us. Then as quickly as the voice of one is heard, "Here am I; send me," the church will respond with means and shouts of praise that shall bring honor to God and bring to his Son the promised "heathen for his inheritance."

From our own Mississippi Conference we have one consecrated to this work—Miss Lelia McNemar, who for the past few years has been seeking an education at E. M. F. College preparatory to mission work. At the recent Conference of the W. F. M. Society, at Natchez, it was deemed best to have her enter next year the Scarritt Bible and Training-school at Kansas city. To do this we desire the scholarship offered by them for six hundred subscribers to the "Evangel," organ of the school, which is ably edited by Miss Elizabeth E. Holding—monthly, for 25 cents per annum. In our Conference we have as members of the church 35,061. When we remember the fourfold blessing that will follow—a blessing to the editor and school, a blessing to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, a blessing to our candidate, and a blessing to every home that the "Evangel" enters—how quickly should the six hundred subscribers be obtained! Who will not deny themselves twenty-five cents to aid so many?

We trust our presiding elders will aid our district secretaries of the W. F. M. Society in their efforts to obtain during the month of August (school opens Sept. 10) the required number to secure this scholarship.

In our woman's work the office of district secretary is as important as that of our presiding elders in our church; it being the duty of the district secretary to organize auxiliaries and use every available means to promote the advancement of the work. To secure these subscribers seems at present the most urgent need to advance the work in our Conference. If the ministers will aid us in this, the cash pledged by the delegates at Natchez can be used for necessary outfit and traveling expense.

Since the meeting of the W. B. F. M. in Washington, D. C., Miss Lily Stradley, of Northwest Texas Conference, has been appointed by the local board to work in Brazil, and will go on the steamer with Miss Ida Shaffer, about Aug. 4. Miss E. Leveritt, of North Georgia; Miss Lizzie Martin, of North Carolina; Miss Jennie Saunders, of South Carolina, and Dr. Margaret K. Polk will sail for China about the twentieth of August.

While we pray for more laborers, let us remember these. May their lives be precious in God's sight, and as they turn their faces from native land and loved ones here, may the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit comfort, cheer and guide them, crowning their efforts with abundant success—all to the glory of God!

Cleansed as She Went.

A young lady was deeply concerned about her spiritual interest, and after a severe struggle started to visit her pastor to ask him to show her the way of life. As she entered the horse car, in carrying out her purpose, she saw seated there several of her friends, who asked where she was going. The tempter immediately said: "Don't tell them where you are going, but answer them in some evasive way." At the same time the Spirit whispered to her: "Be brave and conscientious about this. Tell them of your purpose, and ask them to go with you." She obeyed the latter voice. Her friends declined to accompany her, and she went on alone. When she came to the minister's house he came to the door to meet her. She paused from embarrassment for an instant, and then said: "Doctor, I started to come to see you to ask you to lead me to Christ; but now that I am here I have come to tell you I have found Christ." "As they went they were cleansed."—The Rev. B. Fay Mills.

This truth comes to us more and more the longer that we live, that on what field or in what uniform or with what aims we do our duty matters very little, or even what our duty is, great or small, splendid or obscure. Only to find our duty certainly and somewhere, somehow do it faithfully, makes us good, strong, happy and useful men, and tunes our lives into some feeble echo of the life of God.—Phillips Brooks.

The best things in the divine life, as in the natural, will not come to us merely for the asking; true prayer is the whole strength of the whole man going out after his needs, and the real secret of getting what you want in heaven as on earth lies in the fact that you give your whole heart to it, or you can not adequately value it when you get it.—R. Collyer.

The greatness of small things is seen in the fact that the hens of the country produce forms $125,000,000 of wealth each year. That exceeds the product of all the gold and silver mines put together, and even if they do cackle a little, they do not make half the commotion made in the battle of the "standards."

Everything which befalls us is part of our heaven and education. Every event and condition of life is a lesson which is to be turned to account to make us more worthy of Him who by suffering was made perfect, who Himself entered not into joy until first He had suffered pain.—Dean Stanley.

The love we have to God is realized in our love to men. It can not abide alone. They who have thought to gain it by retirement and meditation have found it only a will-o'-the-wisp, save as it has issued in the love that seeks men and tries to do them good.—Herman Packard De Forest.

God hides some ideal in every human soul. At some time in our life we feel a trembling, fearful longing to do some good thing. Life finds its noblest spring of excellence in this hidden impulse to do our best.—Robert Collyer.

The only fountain in the wilderness of life, where man drinks of water totally unmixed with bitterness, is that which gushes for him in the calm and shady recess of domestic life.—William Penn.

If I ever feel like envying anyone, it is not the world-famous author, but some serene, devout soul who has made the life of Christ his own and whose will is the divine will.—J. G. Whittier.

Too many sermons would have no Bible in them, if it were not the fashion to take a text.

Happiness is not found in getting the world, but in giving it up.

The happiest heart that ever beat
Was in some quiet breast,
That found the common daylight sweet,
—Chaney.

It is the house of God—go in,
It is the Christian's home by right;
There seek some nook, confess thy sin,
And then go forth in Jesus' might.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. B. Cassity, Rayville circuit: "I have held within the last month three protracted meetings. Did all the preaching myself. Results: Eighty-two accessions, and probably about the same number of conversions."

Rev. M. L. White, Montrose, Miss., Aug. 12: "Held protracted services at Holder Church the fourth Sunday in July. It lasted seven days. Rev. D. C. Langford came Sunday night; did some fine preaching. Several conversions, nine accessions to the church; church greatly revived. The good Lord is with us in great power. We are expecting great things on Montrose circuit."

W. R. P. Jones, Steward, Cockrum circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Independence, Miss., Aug. 2: "We have just closed a great meeting at my church, led by the pastor, O. L. Savage. His preaching for seven days was in demonstration of the Spirit and power, clear and scriptural. He is one of the greatest workers I ever saw. Dr. H. T. Gaines came in at the close and preached with great power. Bro. Gaines is one of the foremost young men of our church. Our church was greatly blessed. Several conversions and accessions."

Laura L. Chevalier, Vidalia, La., Aug. 11: "Rev. J. W. Davis addressed a good congregation Aug. 9; the evening service at 8 o clock. Rev. H. J. Harris addressed the Sunday-school. The Discipline was read by the pastor; Rev. J. Davis commented on it. The Sunday-school well attended; two accessions to the church; baptized two children. Quarterly meeting will be held here the second Sunday in September; protracted to the third. We ask the prayers of the Christians for a revival in the Vidalia Church, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon our town."

Rev. W. J. Porter, P. C., Indian Bayou, La., Aug. 14: "On Sunday night, the ninth instant, we closed a nineteen-days' meeting here. The Lord was with us in convicting and saving power. I received fifteen into the church, and other applicants yet to be received. Forty-seven professed conversion, and three sanctification. Bros. Walker, Manley, Smith, Cheney and Saunders preached for me during the meeting. Bro. Vail, of the Union Gospel Mission, New Orleans, was with me from beginning to close. I go to Garland to-day to hold a meeting with Dr. Frazer, of Crowley."

Rev. E. S. Lewis, Shaw, Miss., Aug. 12: "Despite the hot, dry weather our preachers are moving around, holding meetings and looking after the Master's work. Crowe, Countiss, Spraggins, and, in fact, nearly all in the Greenville district have had good meetings. Some are having them now. Bolivar county is to have a local option election, Aug. 28. We are going to win. Madison and Claiborne have pitched the time. At Shaw we are more than holding our own. We have recently purchased blinds for the parsonage, and every now and then we pick up a member."

Rev. E. T. Breland, Washington, Miss.: "Have just closed a remarkable meeting at this place. As the brethren who have served this work well know, Washington has not had a real revival for a long, long time; but God has smiled upon us again. Bro. Hopper was with us a few days and did all the preaching. He has changed his manner of preaching somewhat, and is now very bold, but gentle and tender. God approved his labors by slaying several sinners during the first sermon and by saving souls at every service. There were about 20 clear conversions, 10 accessions and 5 or 6 professed entire sanctification and testified to the same. Praise the Lord."

Rev. R. E. Rutledge, P. C., Barlow, Miss., Aug. 14: "Barlow circuit—We have held revival services at Lebanon, Rehoboth and Brandywine with the following results: At Lebanon—The Christians were revived and went to work. Family altars were erected. One accession. At Rehoboth—The Lord greatly blessed us. Rev. M. L. Burton could not be with us but one day on account of getting sick. The Holy Spirit was with us in the first service, and seemed to remain. A number of the saints shouted praises to God. Fifteen or twenty were converted, and about forty reclaimed. Young men begun praying in their homes. Seven accessions. Our beloved presiding elder, L. S. Jones, was with us four days at Brandywine, and, being baptized with the Holy Ghost, his words were 'the power of God unto salvation.' Many were brought into the light and peace of God. Both old and young told what a dear Savior they had found. Ten accessions. Our hearts are overflowing with joy. Hallelujah!"

Rev. L. J. Jones, Raleigh, Miss., Aug. 13: "We continued our meeting at Trinity five days, beginning first day of August. The last service was the best. We had a precious time. Many were heard to praise God in the highest. There were several conversions; twelve accessions to the church. We have a good prayer meeting, a large Sunday-school and some good workers in Trinity Church. We have just returned from Polkville. I had the pleasure of being with Bro. J. H. Foreman in a meeting at that place. Oh! what a good time we had. Many praised God. During the services a few days before the meeting started some one started the report that Bro. J. H. Foreman was dead. His friends came far and near to see if the report was true. Some visited the parsonage, his home in Trenton. Some came to Polkville during the meeting to see if the brother was dead, and when they saw it was a mistake there were many glad hearts. I wish to say Bro. Foreman is not dead, but is doing a fine work on the Trenton circuit. May God continue to bless his labors, and may his people that seem to love him so dearly continue to appreciate him as their leader in spiritual things!"

Rev. D. P. Bradford, Shubuta, Miss., Aug. 11: "On Sunday night, the second instant, we closed a very delightful meeting in Shubuta. Sister Snell was with us during the meeting, which lasted ten days. We found that in spiritual force she had perceptibly grown since she was with us two years ago. An old sinner, in expressing himself concerning her, gave the secret of her power and success when he said, 'She is thoroughly in earnest, and her whole soul is enlisted in the work of saving souls.' There were no shallow presentations of the Word in any of the messages she delivered. Genuine repentance would be evidenced by its fruits. Every dishonest dollar in the hands of the truly penitents would be disgorged if possible. The religion of the Lord Jesus means just balances, an honest yard-stick. It means a life that the house servants, the employees, in every business of life, will see the Christ in you. In other words, to accept the Lord Jesus Christ, as she presents him, means a new creature. Sometimes when we have seen her stand for five hours a day and plead with sinners as she moved among them in the vast congregations, our sympathies have been enlisted, thinking surely she can't stand this another day such weather as we are having; but the next service would find her as fresh apparently as if she were just beginning the meeting. She urges her hearers to reach after the highest possible attainments in the divine life; and, although I was not prepared to accept in every particular her mode of obtaining this great blessing, yet there was a manifest desire on the part of our people to reach after loftier things than we had yet attained unto. In our invitation we did not restrict her as to her manner of presenting the truth as she understood it; and yet only in one service did she present the doctrine of sanctification in a way that we could not accept it. The church was made stronger by her visit, while many a soul will date its spiritual birth from this meeting. It was no trouble for her to keep an audience three hours at night, and no complaint. It was impossible to obtain the number of conversions in such large congregations. But there were many very bright conversions. We received six applicants for church membership. Several additional family altars."

BAYOU SARA CIRCUIT.

My Summer vacation has been spent on the Bayon Sara circuit, preaching, visiting, etc. This appointment is one of the works that come to us from the Mississippi Conference in the accession of the Florida parishes. Bayon Sara, the only town on the work, is a very old town, and is so situated as to be important as a commercial centre. There is a large brick Episcopalian Church at St. Francisville, also an Episcopalian Church at Laurel Hill and St. Mary's. These two latter places were once strongholds of Methodism, but our church has dwindled in members, the cause has languished, and these appointments have been entirely abandoned by us. Methodism seems to have gained some prestige in the parish of late—only this year the police jury has ceded a piece of ground to our church in the town of St. Francisville (upper Bayou Sara) for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon a house of worship. There is some promise of improvement on the work. We have held two protracted meetings with some good accomplished. Had Rev. J. F. McClellan and Rev. Thos. Carter with us at Concord Church. The Star Hill people have recently completed a new church, which is very prettily situated and is neat and commodious.

Many women are as unprepared for the birth of their babies as if they were found on the doorstep in the good, old-fashioned way. Nine-tenths of all the suffering incident to the coming of baby is absolutely unnecessary. It is unnatural that this great function should be fraught with so much danger and distress. This was Dr. Pierce's conviction thirty years ago, and he set about to find a way to set the trouble right. The result was the preparation and introduction of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the only medicine of its kind devised by a regularly graduated, experienced and skillful specialist in the treatment of the diseases of women,—the only medicine in the world that frees the period of gestation from its discomforts, and makes parturition safe and practically painless. It is an absolute specific for all forms of female weakness and disease. It may be obtained at drug stores, and any woman who would like to know all about it, or who would like to have advice about her health, should write to Dr. Pierce, chief consulting physician at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.

Any woman who is sallow and bilious and headachey, who does not sleep well, and who is troubled with any form of indigestion can do no better thing than to try the effect of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They are the only positive and permanent cure for constipation. They stimulate the action of the liver and assist Nature in getting rid of impurities. You do not become a slave to their use. Take them until the regular, healthy action of the bowels has been restored, and then quit. They are the only remedy of their kind that is a real remedy. They do not cause griping or any other unpleasant feeling. Don't let your druggist impose upon you and substitute something which he says is "just as good."

Emory College
Oxford, Georgia.

THE FALL TERM of this old and honored institution begins Sept. 16, 1896.

The Equipment of the College was never so good in its history. Full courses are offered in English, Philosophy, Greek, Latin, Chemistry, Biology, Physics, Engineering, French, German, Hebrew, Political Economy, History, Theology and Law.

The Expense for a year in Emory College is very low—much lower than in most Southern Colleges of like grade. Board can be had in Helping Halls as low as $8 per month and in private families at from $12 to $15.

The Location of the College is one of healthfulness and moral security. Saloons and other such demoralizing agencies are forever excluded from the town of Oxford by the provisions of the charter. The society of the place is cultured and religious. Oxford is emphatically a college town, and students at Emory College are not only free from the temptations to immorality which prevail in larger towns, but from the distractions of a commercial community and the unwholesome social excitements common in such places. It is forty miles east of Atlanta, and about one mile north of the Covington depot, on the Georgia Railroad, from which it is reached by a horse-car line.

The Steel Trial.

In our issue of last week we gave the result of the Steel trial, but had not space for the report of the committee. We present below the official statement of the result of the trial:

"After all the evidence was in and before the verdict was finally rendered, Dr. Steel appeared before the committee and, after talking the matter over with them, he was presented with the following agreement, drawn in his presence—in fact by himself and a member of the committee—which he signed:

"I hereby agree and covenant that I will most earnestly endeavor to perform the duties of my office as editor of the Epworth Era in such manner as may command the approval and sympathy of the constituted authorities of the church and the hearty co-operation of all the brethren. I, furthermore, agree to accept the action of the Committee on Trial as expressing the mind of said authorities and brethren, and shall defer to their counsultation of all the several points involved in the premises and will carefully avoid all the matters complained of in the bill of charges and specifications.

"Witness my hand this 17th day of August, 1896. S. A. STEEL.

"In consideration of the fact that Dr. Steel assures this committee that he will avoid the things complained of in his editorial management of the Epworth Era, therefore,

"Resolved, That we reconsider our action in sustaining the complaints of inefficiency and misconduct, and adopt the following as our verdict in this case: In view of all the evidence, written, oral and printed, which we have considered in connection with each of the specifications, we, the committee of trial in the case of Dr. S. A. Steel, find the charges largely sustained, and approve the course of the Book Committee in the matter, and yet in the spirit of charity, taking fullest account of all extenuating circumstances, we feel that the ends of justice and good government may be sufficiently secured and Dr. Steel have an opportunity to redeem himself and measure up to the demands and possibilities of his high office, and as Dr. Steel in a formal interview has given all assurances required by the committee touching the future conduct of his official work, the decision of the committee is that he be continued in office. Passed by a unanimous vote."

The distinguished English painter, Sir John Millais, president of the Royal Academy, died on the thirteenth instant. He was born in 1829, and won his first medal at the Society of Arts when only nine years of age. He is better known as a commercial draughtsman and colorer of "popular pictures" than as a true artist. Lady Millais was formerly the wife of John Ruskin, the celebrated writer and art critic, from whom she divorced herself to marry the man whose name she now bears. It is stated that after a period of banishment lasting about forty years, Lady Millais has just been privately received at court, the rule of Queen Victoria's court having been to receive no divorced woman, whether innocent or not.

To make a business of anything is equivalent to devoting one's best energies to the matter in hand. Nobody expects to see a dawdler achieve honor or fortune, unless it is by the merest chance. The successful business man is almost always the one who, having a distinct aim, gives himself wholly to the work in hand. Many a man has ruined himself by not sticking to one thing.

The same singleness of purpose and earnest devotion to duty ought to characterize the Christian in all the relations of life. Without these two elements personal religion will be a failure. Deficiency at either point will bring disappointment and defeat. Of what a vast number of Christians it may be said that they are cold and unfruitful! The great secret of their lack of zeal and usefulness is that they are not wholly given up to God. Not having made an unreserved consecration of themselves, they have not been "transformed by the renewing of their minds;" and so they are continually running after the world and its pleasures. Or, if once they made an entire surrender, such is not true of their present experience.

The temptation to make religion a secondary thing is an ever recurring one, and it is thus that Satan oft gets the advantage of us. Many will not "seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness first;" but still they are foolish enough to think that God ought to fill their storehouses and barns with plenty, forgetting that the promise of abundant temporal blessings is conditional. Weakness and vacillation are as sure to attend those who do not place God first in their affections as that an empty sack will not stand upright. The secret of spiritual stability and power is letting Jesus reign as King. They who do not serve him with all their heart are as unstable as water. How deeply expressive is the testimony of the Psalmist: "I have set the Lord always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall never be moved."

Despite the many warnings of Scripture, people persist in believing that they can serve God acceptably without an entire consecration. Church members frequently make compromises with Satan, and then imagine that God approves. The man who does not make religion his chief business can not remain a converted man, for God will not abide in a divided heart. We often hear nowadays of "Sunday religion." Alas! that there is so much of it. Not that people worship the Lord overmuch on the Sabbath, but they dishonor him by not serving him more through the week. It is a sad fact that a good many church members are never devout save at church. Some close-fisted business men who resort to dishonorable methods in money making think to atone for such practices by contributing liberally to the church or to charity, as if we are to do evil that good may come! Men like to be counted pious, and labor in many ways to keep up the appearance of righteousness; but ofttimes in the heart selfishness and vanity are exalted above self-denial and humility.

It is even true that men and women may be active and prominent in church work without having the genuine piety which commends itself to all within the home. Unselfishness and suavity elsewhere will hardly make up for selfishness and sharpness of tongue within the family circle.

According to the world's idea, religion and business should ever be divorced, and not a few men act upon this principle. Yet if we follow Christ truly, we must apply his teachings to everything we do. There is no relation of life to which the ethics of the gospel do not reach. Our constant prayer should be:

"Teach me, my God and King,
In all things thee to see;
And what I do, in anything,
To do it as for thee.

"If done t'obey thy laws,
E'en servile labors shine;
Hallowed is toil, if this the cause,
The meanest work divine."

We often smile at the crude ideas most negroes have of the connection between religion and daily conduct. Many of them seem hardly to connect the two at all. Not a few members of the Caucasian race, however, display a similar weakness. They believe in a theoretical honesty, but do not scruple to beat their way on a railroad train, if the conductor happens to overlook them; or to overcharge for goods where it is possible to do so. The Sabbath, they think, ought to be respected; yet, in order to save a few dollars, they will travel on a Sunday excursion. They proclaim themselves the friends of sobriety and personal purity; but mingle unhesitatingly in society with the dissolute and dissipated.

Making a business of religion is quite a different thing from "making gain of godliness," as is done by those who join the church in order to be supported, or in order to win patronage, position, or a higher place in society. Nor does it mean, as was once supposed, that a man must renounce the world in the sense of forsaking all secular employments. It is now seen that Christians are to be "in the world, but not of the world." Even yet there is a lingering superstition that Christians ought to be "peculiar" in dress, etc., the word "peculiar," as it occurs in the Scriptures, being supposed to mean "strange" or "striking;" whereas it simply means "his own."

Although the day of monasticism has about passed away, the notion still abides that holiness is, in a measure, incompatible with a life of ordinary toil. Some imagine that if they were only preachers or religious teachers, serving God would be easier, and their usefulness would be increased. Wishing to be in other places than their own, and sighing for grander opportunities, such persons oft slight heaven-sent duties and opportunities. We would do well to remember the Scripture injunction, "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called." Whatever our lot may be, God's purpose is that we should honor him in it. As the Rev. James Denny, one of the contributors to the "Expositor's Bible," expresses it:

"Perhaps some of us crave leisure, that we may be more free for spiritual work; and think that if we had more time at our disposal, we should be able to render many services to Christ and his cause which are out of our power at present. But that is extremely doubtful. If experience proves anything, it proves that nothing is worse for most people than to have nothing to do but be religious. Religion is not controlled in their life by any contact with realities. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred they do not know how to be quiet, but are vain, meddlesome, impracticable, and senseless. The man who has his trade or profession to work at, and the woman who has her household and social duties to attend to, are not to be condoled with. They are in the very place in which religion is at once necessary and possible; they can study to be quiet, and to mind their own business, and to work with their own hands, and in all this serve and please God. But those who get up in the morning with nothing to do but be pious, or to engage in Christian works, are in a position of enormous difficulty, which very few can fill. The daily life of toil, at the bench or the desk, in the shop, the study, or the street, does not rob us of the Christian life; it really puts it within our reach. If we keep our eyes open, it is easy to see that this is so. If we can not be holy at our work, it is not worth taking trouble to be holy at other times."

A Sensation in Church.

Mulberry Street Church, Macon, Ga., witnessed a very sensational occurrence on last Sunday, the twenty-third. On the Sunday previous the pastor, Dr. Monk, preached a sermon in which he paid his respects in his vigorous style to the saloons and the concert halls. The saloons, long accustomed to such things, do not seem to have been much stirred up over the attack. Not so, however, with the concert halls. A report of the sermon having been published in the city papers, Demetrius and his fellow-craftsmen made much noise. A newspaper reporter called upon Dr. Monk for an interview. Dr. Monk received him graciously, but asked that no report should be made of what he said. This request was disregarded. So last Sunday Dr. Monk in his sermon referred to what had been published and spoke of it in a way not very complimentary. The aforesaid reporter was in the audience, and as soon as the benediction was pronounced he rushed to the pulpit and used very violent and abusive language to Dr. Monk. About this time the reporter ran against the fists of some of the church officials who were present. It is said that the matter is likely to get into the courts. The above we gather from a special dispatch to the Picayune.

An Outrageous Conflict of Authority.

On Saturday, the twenty-second, certain parties in this city who desired to sell liquors on Sunday applied to Judge Theard of the Civil Court for an injunction restraining the police from interfering with them while engaged in such sale. The mayor, however, acting under the advice of the city attorney, issued orders to the chief of police to disregard the injunction and arrest every man who violated the Sunday law. Under these instructions, two arrests were made. On Tuesday the mayor and the chief of police were summoned to appear, on Monday next, before Judge Theard to answer to a charge of contempt of court. They will doubtless be fined and imprisoned. The case will then go before the Supreme Court under a writ of habeas corpus. A decision will be rendered immediately.

Says the Times-Democrat:

"An association, by means of an injunction granted ex parte, on the mere representation of the applicant, and without any hearing of the opposition, is authorized to suspend or violate the statute as far as it is concerned. The mayor insists upon the enforcement of the law as it appears to him, and is arrested as a law breaker, and sentenced to imprisonment as such. Positions, it will be seen, are completely reversed. The man who breaks the law becomes plaintiff; the officer who enforces it is converted into a defendant, and is called on to show cause why he should not be punished for carrying out a statute. It will be seen that this is quite a change from the old system, an innovation introduced in the last twenty years. Then the officers of the picnic association would have been arrested for alleged violation of the Sunday law, and on their trial the question would have come up whether the law applied to picnics or not, whether it was valid and constitutional, and just how far it extended. Now the mayor is the man to be arrested for enforcing the law, and the constitutionality and meaning of the statute are tested on the issue of a habeas corpus to release him from imprisonment."

It is a travesty upon justice and an outrage upon civilized society for such a state of things to exist. Injunctions are a good thing in certain cases, but their use to prevent the regular enforcement of just laws, as in the present instance, is an abuse of power and a menace to good government. The continuance of this sort of thing will soon bring the lower courts into contempt, and make our police officers mere figure-heads, without the power to enforce laws enacted for the protection of public morals. The way things have been going, it would seem that injunctions are granted in the interest of lawlessness. It is high time for this matter to be taken to the highest court for adjudication, that there be no more hurtful conflict of authority.

The Picayune pertinently remarks:

"If the Civil Court can paralyze the police authorities and prevent the enforcement of a criminal law of the State in one part of the city, it can do so in any part of the city; and if such Civil Court can authorize persons to defy and violate one criminal law, it can accomplish a like result with any criminal law. Apparently an injunction issued from a Civil Court can stop anything except a riot."

Destitution in Louisiana.

A few days ago a mass meeting was held at Ruston, La., in Lincoln parish, to ascertain the amount of destitution prevailing in the parish as the result of the drouth, and to take steps toward relieving those in distress therefrom. A committee, previously appointed, reported having found twenty-one white and four negro families in the western part of the parish living on bread and water, with no prospect of a harvest later on to relieve their dire need. In another place sixty-eight families are asking for help. In other sections the situation is about the same, some families having enough to run them for about a month, others being already in want. The sad part about it is that these people are industrious and thrifty, and hitherto have been independent. All the crops in that part of Louisiana are said to be almost a total failure. We are glad that systematic effort is being made to administer the needed relief. Now is the time for true charity to flow.

Death of Rev. James M. Wright, D. D.

It is with profound regret that we announce the death of this veteran soldier of the cross and prominent minister of the gospel. He died at Hobson Chapel parsonage, near Nashville, on the seventeenth instant, being nearly sixty-seven years of age. Dr. Wright spent nineteen years of his ministry in educational work, and twenty-one in the active pastorate. He joined the Tennessee Conference in 1854. During the past five years he has served as literary editor of the Tennessee Methodist in connection with his pastoral work. He was a gifted editor, a strong and earnest preacher, and a scholar of no mean order. His death is a great loss to the church and to humanity. A pure, lovable and faithful man has gone to his reward.

These young preachers can not return to college without some aid from us. Will not those who can do so send at once a contribution for this worthiest of causes to Dr. C. G. Andrews, Vicksburg, Miss. A little from many will help us much.

NOTES.

Let your friends and neighbors who are not subscribers know about our $1 offer.

Have you read our new price list for the Holman Bible? If not, do so, and order at once.

Col. O. J. Moore, of Winona, Miss., a leading layman in our church, died at his home in that city on the twenty-second.

Rev. H. W. May, of the Louisiana Conference, is making a sojourn in the city for the purpose of procuring medical treatment for his daughter.

The Baptists of one Missouri town are said to be lying awake nights trying to select a pastor from a list of forty who are "willin'."—Mid-Continent.

Miss Mary Abigail Dodge, familiarly known as "Gail Hamilton," died at Hamilton, Mass., on the seventeenth instant. She was a writer of considerable ability and fame.

Rev. F. N. Parker, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, this city, has gone on an outing with his mother to Asheville, N. C. They will spend several weeks sniffing the mountain air.

A liberal-minded gentleman of Brooklyn, N. Y., provides one thousand bottles of sterilized milk daily for the sick children of the poor of that city. A noble deed.—Exchange.

Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, is now lecturing in Maine in the interest of the W. C. T. U. She is being greeted with large and enthusiastic audiences, and the papers of that section speak in high praise of her addresses.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth, after several weeks sojourn in Mexico, looking after mission interests, returned to the city last week. He holds up remarkably well considering the amount of hard work he performs.—Nashville Advocate.

The manager who has charge of Ian Maclaren's lecturing tour in this country in September says that he is in greater demand than any foreigner who has ever come here, not even excepting Stanley. Already most of the fifty-five appointments for the lectures which he will give on this side the water have been made.—Pittsburg Advocate.

The New York Board of Health has ordered fifteen of the worst tenement-houses in that city to be vacated and destroyed. The work of regenerating the districts occupied by that kind of buildings is thus begun.—Exchange.

We take pleasure in publishing the following extract from a letter written by a member of the faculty of Johnston Collegiate Institute, Greensburg, La: "We expect a good attendance the coming session. The demand for catalogues has been large. We had to have a second lot priuted."

We are sorry to learn that Rev. C. M. Lyons, paster of Louisiana Avenue Church, New Orleans, has had to give up his work on account of ill health. We sincerely hope that he will soon be restored to soundness of body. It is a pity to lose such a faithful and promising worker from the active ranks.

Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly, of New York City, publishes in the current issue two very timely and practical articles for women, "How to Become Self-Supporting" and "How Cheaply Can a Woman Go to College?" and a host of other matter that appeals to woman and all her needs. Sample copy mailed for only ten cents.

Rev. Thos. L. Lallance, city missionary, has moved his tent to Carrollton, corner of Oak street and Carrollton avenue, where services are being held every night. Rev. L. A. Reed, the Carrollton pastor, and other resident ministers are helping in this good work. The attendance is said to be increasing, and we devoutly hope that great good will be done. The meeting will probably continue several weeks.

It is announced, in the secular papers, that Mr. Robert Post, of Nashville, Ohio, has made an unsolicited donation of $5,000 to Wooster University. Mr. Post lately visited the University, and was so much impressed with the prospects of the institution and its claims to the support of its friends, that, after his visit, he hunted up the Rev. Mr. Donaldson and handed him the cash.—Exchange.

Probably the largest single collection ever raised for foreign missions was taken at Old Orchard Camp Ground, Maine, on the ninth instant, the immense sum of $101,500 being the total of the offerings and pledges. Ninety-five per cent. of the latter, it is said, are as good as gold. Truly the Lord is opening the hearts and purses of his people. Would that such a spirit of liberality could be aroused among Southern Methodists.

That old and stanch firm of J. Morris, Co., Ltd., since their recent misfortune in being burned out, has opened up again with an entirely new stock of goods just two doors below their old stand, namely: 314 and 318 Tchoupitoulas street, and 413 and 419 South Peters street. They are now ready to fill all orders promptly, and we bespeak for them a continuance of the same liberal patronage with which they have hitherto been favored, and of which they are in every way worthy.

Mr. J. R. Bingham and wife, of Carrollton, Miss., are sojouraing for the season at Monteagle. They will come down to Nashville on Saturday, the fifteenth. They are interested in everything that pertains to the church and its institutions, and, of course, are interested in Vanderbilt University and our Publishing House. They visited both institutions, and though their time was limited, they looked over six floors of our House and got a pretty good idea of the magnitude of the establishment.—Nashville Advocate.

We take pleasure in directing the attention of the readers of the ADVOCATE to the handsome advertisement of the long-established music house of Phillip Werlein, which appears on the last page of this issue. On account of removal Mr. Werlein is offering great reductions on all musical instruments and sheet music, as will be seen from his advertisement, and as he is a great believer in doing just what he advertises, we heartily recommend him to our readers, with the assurance that they will save a great deal by purchasing from him before his removal.

It has all the Oxford helps and the self-pronouncing feature besides. Everyone, whether educated or uneducated, needs help in pronouncing Bible names. Moreover, the pronunciation is given, not in appendix where it has to be hunted up, but in the book itself wherever the name occurs. Paper and binding are excellent. See offer.

HOME CIRCLE.

Where the Plough Shall Fail to Go, There the Weeds Will Surely Grow.

In my young days farmers used to leave broad headlands; and, as there were plenty of good-for-nothing hedges and ditches, they raised a prime crop of weeds, and these used to sow the farm, and give a heap of trouble.

Weeding is wanted now, for ill weeds grow apace, and the hoe must always go; but still, lands are a fine sight cleaner than they used to be, for now farmers go a deal closer to work, and grub up the hedges and make large fields, to save every bit of land. Quite right, too. The less there is wasted the more there is for us all.

"To clothe the fields with plenty and all our barns endow,
We'll turn up every corner and drive the needful plough.
No weed shall haunt the furrow, before us all shall bow,
We'll gaily yield our labor to guide the useful plough."

It would be well to do the same thing in other concerns. Depend upon it, weeds will come up whenever you give them half a chance. When children have no school to go to they will pretty soon be up to mischief; and if they are not taught the gospel, the old enemy will soon teach them to thieve and lie and swear. You can tell with your eyes shut where there's a school and where there's none; only use your ears and hear the young ones talk.

So far goes the plough, and where that leaves off the docks and the thistles begin, as sure as dirt comes where there's no washing, and mice where there are no cats. They tell me that in London and other big towns vice and crime are sure to spread where there are no ragged schools and Sunday-schools; and I don't wonder. I hope the day will never come when good people will give up teaching the boys and girls. Keep that plough going, say I, till you have cut up all the charlock. Don't leave a rod of ground for the devil to sow his tares in. In my young time few people in our parish could either read or write, and what were they to do but gossip, and drink and fight, and play old gooseberry? Now that teaching is to be had, people will all be scholars, and, as they can buy a Testament for a penny I hope they will search the Scriptures, and may God bless the Word to the cleansing of their souls. When the schoolmaster gets to his work in downright earnest, I hope and trust there will be a wonderful clearance of the weeds.

The best plough in all the world is the preaching of the gospel. Leave a village without Christ crucified, and it soon becomes a great tangle of thorn, and brier, and brake, and bramble; but when sound and sensible preaching comes, it tears all up like a steam plough, and the change is something to sing about. "The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose."

Inside a man's heart there is need of a thorough ploughing by God's grace, for if any part of our nature is left to itself, the weeds of sin will smother the soul. Every day we have need to be looked after, for follies grow in no time, and come to a great head before you can count twenty. God speed the plough.—Spurgeon.

If there is a stranger at your table be careful not to let the conversation dwell upon local or personal topics of which he knows nothing. There is no more refined torture to a sensitive person than the sense of isolation created by being ignored in this thoughtless fashion.—Exchange.

Keep the altar of private prayer burning. This is the very life of all piety. The sanctuary and family altars borrow their fires here; therefore let this burn well. Secret devotion is the very essence and barometer of vital and experimental religion.

Longevity of Brain Workers.

BY M. CORA BLAND, M. D., IN HEALTH CULTURE.

It is a popular truism that the laws of health are but imperfectly understood by even the learned. But it is also true, that the obviously important rules upon which health and longevity depend are so entirely self-evident that thoughtful persons of all ages and countries have recognized them, and some have obeyed them, reaping the reward thereof in vigor of body, clearness of mind and prolonged life. Yet many of the world's intellectual giants have yielded to the demands of unrestrained appetite, unbridled passion and unregulated ambition to so great an extent as to seriously impair the powers and invite disease and premature death.

Examples of the first class are rare, of the latter numerous. The reason for which must, I think, be found in the dominant power of the senses over the intellect and the moral sentiments in those of full physical endowments.

During what we term the Dark Ages under the universal reign of the Pope the masses of the people were serfs, living as best they could upon the most meager fare and in the most wretched habitations, while the church dignitaries, the nobility and sovereigns reveled in all sorts of luxury and dissipation. The result was that the average length of life in Europe sank at one time as low as seven years; yet among the most learned and devout monks there were examples of men who, for religious reasons, lived simple and abstemious lives, enjoying almost uninterrupted health down to a great age.

In modern times no class of people show so many examples of long life in proportion to numbers as the various types of brain-workers. Those who follow intellectual pursuits under the guidance of the moral sentiments are exceptionally free from the dissipations of fashionable life, not only, but they live earnest, industrious, devoted and happy lives. Constant occupation saves them from ennui and the consciousness that they are promoting the progress and happiness of the race is a constant source of enjoyment; and there is no factor in the whole range of sanitary or hygienic agents so potent as virtuous contentment resulting from the consciousness of being in line of noble duty.

Whittier, Longfellow, Emerson, Bancroft, Geo. Ripley Carlyle, Ruskin, Gladstone, Tennyson, Lydia Maria Child, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony and Charlotte Fowler Wells, are notable illustrations of my proposition.

Rev. Dr. Sawyer, of Boston, is in excellent health, and still quite actively engaged on occasion in the ministry at the age of 91. In a recent conversation relative to his health habits he said: "Something over fifty years ago my health gave way from overwork. I then adopted the Graham diet which restored my wasted energies, and I have enjoyed excellent health from that time to the present." Prof. Alva Curtis, founder of the Physio Medical College of Cincinnati, and a famous medical and hygienic reformer, reached the age of 84. In an interview with him only two years previous to his transition this illustrious octogenarian said: "I have never used tobacco or any form of intoxicants or taken any poisonous medicines; my diet is very simple, I seldom eat meat of any kind, I exercise systematically and have always made it a rule to stop all mental or physical effort short of absolute fatigue. The result is I can do better work and more of it in a given time than I could fifty years ago."

Mr. S. C. Hall, editor of the London Art Journal, wrote at the age of 80: "I am entirely free from the bodily ailments to which age ordinarily subjects humanity. I attribute my physical and mental vigor entirely to my temperance habits."

William Cullen Bryant, who died at the age of 84, furnishes in his life a fine illustration of brain workers who maintained the equilibrium of their forces. Mr. Bryant began life with a feeble constitution, his father and his father's mother having died of consumption. Writing to a leading health journal relative to his habits of life he said, "I breakfast on milk with brown bread or oat meal or wheaten grits and baked sweet apples, when I can get them. My dinner is composed largely of vegetables. I never drank tea or coffee; have never meddled with tobacco except to quarrel with its use. I abominate all drugs and narcotics and have always carefully avoided everything which spurs nature to exertion which it would not otherwise make. My lungs were delicate in youth and it was feared that I might become consumptive. I was once subject to dyspepsia also, but since I have practiced chest exercise with some diligence it has entirely left me. Whether I owe my good health, which is rarely interrupted even by slight ailments, to these habits I leave the reader to judge."

Notwithstanding the evident fact that intellectual labor is so promotive of health, I am aware that Bayard Taylor and Charles Dickens and a host of lesser lights have passed off the stage of action in middle life or before. But allow me to respectfully suggest that the health habits of these short-lived literary men were not those of Bryant or Socrates or Seneca.

The majority of the race seek happiness in the realm of the sensuous to the neglect of the higher sources of perennial joys which lie hid in the possibilities of the mind and tax all their powers of body and brain in the interest of foolish pleasure and unholy ambition. The thoughtful minority, in contrast with these, study the laws of their being and obey them; live healthy, harmonious lives, fill up the measure of faithfully finished work, and enjoy the constantly increasing happiness of health of body and content of mind to a ripe old age; and then from the summit of the mount of terrestrial wisdom they view with calm delight the dim outlines of the illimitable realm of perennial youth and unlimited possibilities.

Something Good in Dixie.
Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; do right to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes at times unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this cure, I received by mail that watch enabled me to talk with much ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures this affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and highly recommended in church circles, and by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which every cripple can do, and those needing the benefit of it GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the afflicted.

In Memoriam.

REV. WILLIAM BRADFORD JOHNSON.

At twelve o'clock on the twenty-first day of July, 1896, at the residence of his son, Mr. L. B. Johnson, one of the best men that ever lived in Jefferson county, Miss., was transferred from the church militant to the church triumphant. He had been in declining health for some time, and, though in his eighty-eighth year, showed wonderful tenacity for life; but the weary wheels of life at last stood still, and Bro. Johnson passed to his reward in heaven.

He was born of godly parents near the place where the town of Fayette is now situated, on the eleventh day of November, 1808. His father was a minister of the gospel, and at the time of his death a member of the Mississippi Conference. His mother, a saintly woman, lived to an extreme old age, and is remembered by many of the present generation as a woman of decided force of character. He began life with a frail body, and my recollection is that he attributed his health and longevity to the exercise of his lungs in preaching. Doubtless we may add to this, "a good conscience," which contributes to health as well as to happiness.

Bro. Johnson was converted and joined the church at a watch-night service, Dec. 31, 1829. He was then twenty-one years of age. He was married to Mrs. Mary Ann Hunt (nee Osborn), Nov. 10, 1831, with whom he lived happily until a few years ago, when she preceded him to the better land. God blessed them with six children, four of whom survive, all worthy members of the church of their parents. Soon after his conversion he was licensed to preach. Being a man of good natural and acquired abilities, he soon developed into one of the best preachers in the country. For some years he remained a local preacher, devoting much of his time to secular business, in which he enjoyed a good degree of success. He was much esteemed by his fellow-citizens as a man of affairs; was elected sheriff of his county at one time, and made a faithful and an efficient officer. Soon after this he joined the Mississippi Conference, and continued in the pastorate for some eighteen or twenty years. Having some property and a growing family, he never broke up his home, but served circuits adjacent to his place of residence. He was a popular preacher and a faithful pastor, and his services were not only acceptable, but much in demand. For reasons satisfactory to his own mind he finally returned to the local ranks. I knew him best as a local preacher; was for several years his pastor; enjoyed his confidence, and esteemed him highly in love for his work's sake. As a local preacher he was very useful in many ways. His pure life and deep devotion made him a tower of strength in the church and circuit. He was wise in counsel and helpful in revival meetings. He had no peculiarities, was not hard to get along with, and gave his pastor his hearty support and co-operation, even when he was younger and less talented than himself, which was often the case.

He grew old gracefully. Pure in heart, upright in life, godly in conversation, he ripened for the good world, and shed a benign influence all around. Nearly all of his old comrades had gone before, and a new generation had grown up about him; and, with a heart all aglow with love, and with mental faculties unimpaired, he never lost his interest in, or his hold upon, the present generation.

The following tribute to his memory by the Rev. J. Perry Drake, one of his former pastors, is as beautiful as it is just, and will be read with interest:

"Dear Bro. Wm. B. Johnson's name is sweet to my memory, both as a child under his ministry, and afterwards as his pastor. This was indeed an honor and a privilege to me. He was always so gentle and loving, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. Few, if any, uncharitable words ever fell from his lips, for the law of love was graven on his heart. Intimately associated with about all of his neighbors for four years, I never heard a word of criticism against him. All seemed to look on him as a saint beyond reproach. His business integrity was also subject of commendation. Once, talking to me on the much-discussed theme of sanctification, he said in substance: 'My wife professed the blessing, and lived it. I have never been able to see it as some do; but, Perry, don't ever be afraid of yourself or of anybody else getting too much religion.' He was a great reader of the Bible. Much of his time was thus spent. He used to say to me: 'Each time I read it, it becomes more precious and comforting, and I find new beauties in it every day.' I had the privilege of burying his sainted wife and mother at old 'Bethel' ground. He endured these great sorrows with Christian grace and fortitude. He seemed to live for his grandchildren, doing all in his power for them. They were all devoted to him at the old home. The kindly eyes so dimmed with age and tears of earthly sorrow are now opened wide to clear visions of heavenly glory. May all his posterity follow him thither! I feel a personal bereavement in his removal."

Our dear brother's remains were laid to rest by the side of his wife at old "Bethel," near Fayette; his pastor, Rev. J. W. Crisler, assisted by Rev. J. G. Galloway, officiating. He was buried with Masonic honors by Thomas Hines Lodge No. 14, of which he had been a member since the twenty-second of June, 1844.

OBITUARIES.

COBB—CHARLES M. CLAYTON COBB, son of Willis M. H. and Elizabeth Cobb, was born in Newton county, Ga., in January, 1847, and died July 22, 1896, at his home in Panola county, Miss. His father moved to this State in the Spring of 1858. Here the family has been well and favorably known to this day.

Bro. Cobb was married to Elisabeth Lively in 1879. God blessed this union with one daughter. Bro. Cobb joined the church several years back, and loved the Methodist Church. He had his foibles, as other men. For several years he has been afflicted, and has had a great deal of trouble. He was a good neighbor, always ready to help the widow and the orphan. He was a man who had many friends. We are informed that he died in great peace. This should be a source of great comfort to his sorrowing kindred and friends. He leaves in this country his mother and his wife, one sister and precious daughter to mourn their loss. To all these we extend our sympathy, and pray that they may so live that they shall meet their loved one by and by in heaven. W. M. YOUNG, P. C.

TATOM—Mrs. CAROLINE A. TATOM (nee Tomblinson) was born in Lawrence county, Miss., March 25, 1813, and departed for heaven on Sunday, Aug. 2, 1896, at the home of her son, Bro. James W. Ratliff, Sr., in Edwards, Miss. She joined our church when very young, and continued a faithful member to the ripe age of eighty-three years. When about eighteen years old she was married to Mr Simpson Ratliff; later in life to Mr. J. W. Tatom. She became the mother of ten children, several of whom, with many grandchildren, remain to bless her memory. She has lived in Hinds county, Miss., ever since her first marriage, honored and revered by a large circle of friends. A long and painful illness was endured with characteristic patience and resignation to the Master's will. A few days before her transition, while alone communing with her Savior, she was heard to burst forth in rapturous shouts of praise. The peaceful end of the upright was hers. Like a shock of ripe corn in his season, she has been garnered above. J. P. DRAKE.

The New Hook Spoon Free to All.

I read in the Christian Standard that Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A., St. Louis, Mo., would give an elegant plated hook spoon to anyone sending her ten 2-cent stamps. I sent for one and found it so useful that I showed it to my friends, and made $12.00 in two hours, taking orders for the spoon. The hook spoon is a household necessity. It can not slip into the dish or cooking vessel, being held in the place by a hook on the back. The spoon is something that housekeepers have needed ever since spoons were first invented. Anyone can get a sample spoon by sending ten 2-cent stampt to Miss Fritz. This is a splendid way to make money around home.

LETTERS that we heard of was from a woman who said that Pearline hurt her hands! We knew that this couldn't be—looked into the matter, and found that she was using one of the poorest and most dangerous of bar soaps with Pearline. When we induced her to use Pearline alone, without this soap, everything was lovely. Use no soap, when you do any washing or cleaning with Pearline. It's needless, expensive, and it may do harm. 470 James Pyle, N.Y.

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling an imitation object that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some lines of staple, but I never make less than $8, and often $5 a day. The object is nice and small (of pocket size); a novelty; a fine seller; a first-class warming pan, and a pile measure. These eight objections will make the object such a necessary article that it will sell at nearly every house, as it is to cheap. You can get a sample by sending 25 cents, 10 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburgh, Pa., and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Anyone can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere.

Gray Hair Made Dark.

I saw in your paper a statement that Zulu Voller would restore any head of hair to natural color in three weeks. As I was very gray I sent for a sample package, and in less than three weeks my hair was perfectly restored to natural color. My wife's hair was a light red, and by using Zulu Voller, her hair is now a beautiful auburn. Anyone can get a sample package of Zulu Voller by sending 21 two-cent stamps to Wilton & Co., New Concord, Ohio, and if it does not restore the hair to natural color in three weeks they will return your stamps. It is not only restores the hair to natural color, but will stop the hair falling out immediately and is one of the best hair tonics made, and you take no risk, and if it does not satisfy you perfectly, they will return your stamps.

A Wife Equal to a Gold Mine!

Will some of your readers give me a good recipe for making cold starch? I am selling self-heating flat irons and iron a little at every house and have to use some starch every place and want to know how to make good cold starch. My husband was in debt and I being anxious to help him thought I would sell self-heating flat irons, and I am doing splendidly. A cent's worth of fuel will heat the iron for 3 hours, so you have a perfectly even heat. You can iron in half the time and no danger of scorching the clothes as with the old iron, and you can get the most beautiful gloss. I sell at nearly every house, as the iron saves so much fuel everybody wants one. I make $7.50 on each iron and have not sold less than ten any day I worked. My brother is doing well and I think anyone can make lots of money anywhere selling irons. The J. F. CASEY & CO., St. Louis, Mo., will start anyone in the business, as they did me, if you will address them.

One of the outrageous exactions imposed upon the city was the practice by the old boodle Council of making no deduction, as the contract required, for the defective electric lighting such as lamps that did not burn, but of paying the contractor in full, as if the lights had been all they should be. The new Council has determined to put a stop to this sort of robbery, and on last Thursday night the Council Lighting Committee reported that there should be a reduction on the July bill for electric light.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,610 clear money in 87 days, and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer. I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to perfection. You can wash and dry the dishes in two minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now, and I am sure I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A, Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money it's your own fault.

MRS. W. M.

Something like two months ago there was a considerable sentimental commotion stirred up in various parts of the country by the planting in the grounds of Yale University, at New Haven, Ct., by the graduating class of 1896, a sprig of ivy taken from the grave of Gen. R. E. Lee, at Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Va. The ivy has since been removed.

Did You Ever Make Money Easy?

MR EDITOR: I have read how Mr. O. E. B. made so much money in the Dish Washer business and think I have beat him. I am very young yet and have had little experience in selling goods, but have made over eight hundred dollars in ten weeks selling Dish Washers. It is simply wonderful how easy it is to sell them. All you have to do is to show the ladies how they work and they can not help but buy one. For the benefit of others I will state that I got my start from the Second City Dish Washer Co., St Louis, Mo. Write to them and they will send you full particulars.

I think I can clear over $3,000 the coming year, and I am not going to let the opportunity pass. Try it and publish your success for the benefit of others.

Making Money—Butter Made in Two Minutes.

EVERYBODY KNOWS what a fortune there is for a man that can sell a churn that will make butter for him in two minutes instead of the long hour's work that the ordinary dasher churn compels. Now any of our readers who want to make money, should write the Queen Butter Maker Co., 21 East 3d St., Cincinnati, for circulars. Everyone who keeps cows must have a churn and how easy it will be to sell a churn as the above. Anyone can sell from a day and make $150 a month easy. Take it into any farmer's house on churning day and they will not let you take it away after you have churned their butter for them in two minutes. Will. T. Isor, Batavia, sold five machines the first day and made $12.50, and only worked in the morning; this will give him $75 a week. Any person can do this, as the Butter Maker sells itself.

100 Students.

Iuka Normal Institute flourished last year. Prospects are for a boom in '96 and '97. This prospect forces us to close out our primary and intermediate departments that we may accommodate a greater boarding patronage. We can receive 100 more boarders by doing this. We want this 100. Our plan is, for $80 ($40 on entrance and $40 Jan. 19, '97) to give meals, coal oil, fuel, furnished room except bed clothing, and tuition in any of our literary departments 10 months to any student who has never attended the Normal, until 100 have applied. Students who accept will board with the President.

BEYOND.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

It seemeth such a little way to me
Across to that strange country, the Beyond;
And yet not strange, for it has grown to be
The home of those of whom I am so fond.
They make it seem familiar and most dear,
As journeying friends bring distant countries near.

So close it lies that when my sight is clear
I think I see the gleaming of the strand;
I KNOW, I feel that those who've gone from here,
Come near enough to touch my hand;
I often think, but for our veiled eyes,
We should find heaven right round us lies.

I can not make it seem a day to dread
When from this dear earth I shall journey out
To that still dearer country of the dead,
And join the lost ones so long dreamed about.
I love this world, yet shall I love to go
And meet the friends who wait for me, I know.

I never stand about a bier and see
The seal of death on some well-beloved face,
But that I think: "One more to welcome me
When I shall cross the intervening space
Between this land and that one over there;
One more to make the strange Beyond seem fair."

And so for me there is no sting to death.
And so the grave has lost its victory;
It is but crossing with deep, bated breath
And white, set face, a little strip of sea,
To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
More beautiful, more precious, than before.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

La me, man; I have nearly melted this year. It has been hot, hotter, hottest. In the hall in this roomy parsonage, far removed from the sun, the mercury has ranged from 82 at daylight to 99 in the afternoon for full thirty days in succession. It has been sweltering heat; hard on man and beast, and very trying on crops of all kinds. All crops will be short this year. Now and then a farmer manifests surprise that I am interested in the farms and farming. Well, all I get comes out of the ground. I look to the land for my living, and so does the lawyer, the doctor, the teacher, and the merchant. It all comes out of the ground. If the crops fail, we all suffer. The preacher often suffers first and most. He has no way of forcing his claim. He lives by faith, and not on mortages. His claim can be put off. It is voluntary and not legal. No wonder, then, that the preacher is personally interested in the success and prosperity of the farmers. If they live, he lives; if they suffer, he suffers; if they are short, he is short. In this ship we all sink or swim together.

Meetings are being held all over the country. They are pretty successful everywhere. The church is revived, sinners convicted, mourners converted, and the cause of God advanced. In every place some souls are going on to perfection. They grow in grace and in the knowledge and love of God. Our Lord grew in stature, in wisdom, in grace, and in favor with God and man. This is the normal method of increase. It accords with the laws of nature, mind, and spirit. It is the law of the kingdom of God in the human soul. A mustard seed, a lump of leaven—the one to grow, the other to work. In some soils the mustard seed germinates quickly and grows rapidly, and under favorable conditions the leaven works more rapidly than in others. A babe for milk, a strong man for meat. The prize set before us is to attain to the measure of the stature of full-grown men and women in Christ Jesus. We were apprehended by Christ that we might lay hold of this prize.

Well, Conference is not far off. The time will soon be here. May we all be ready for it! It seems to me we could very well divide out the charges and dispense with one presiding elder's district in the North Mississippi Conference. We employ too many men, and pay out too much money for supervision. We do not need so many men nor so much money to run this machine. When the law will admit of it—as I doubt not it will at the next General Conference—four presiding elders' districts will be all we will need in North Mississippi. I think this, and I mean no offense to any person when I say so. If others think differently, why, all well and good. They have the same right to think for themselves that I have to think for myself. I knew of one good brother who has been gathering up some statistics as to the number of men and the amount of money it takes to superintend the work of Southern Methodism. If any man, who knows our territory fairly well, will take the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference, and try, he can absorb one district and have the whole work supervised just as well as it is now. It will pay to think on this a little between now and Conference. The Bishop will need all the help and light he can get on this subject. He is specially charged with the work of forming districts. This year we have a Bishop who knows our territory about as well as any man among us. If I am not mistaken, he is powerfully opposed to wasting men and money—specially so for overseers on the Lord's farm. This is the age of small farms and intensive farming—not intensive overseeing.

Our territory is, comparatively, small, and, with the present facilities for travel, every part of it is easily reached. It is less labor and expense to reach twenty pastoral charges now than it was to reach twelve or fourteen a few years ago. The conditions are all changed. They are not what they used to be. Our preachers begin now with far more knowledge and more experience than they used to have. They are better able to run the farm in the absence of the superintendent. If a beginner should not know what to do in any given case, there are laymen in every charge who could tell him what ought to be done. The presiding elder is not absolutely indispensable in every place every day in the year.

It is not proposed to do without him, nor to minify him, but rather to increase his dignity and the importance of his work by enlarging his sphere of operations.

Let the brethren think on these things; talk them over, confer, consult, take counsel together.

GILDEROY.

Our Church Schools.

The schools of the country are soon to open their doors for another session of work. How manifold are the elements that enter into this work and into the effect it shall have on the hundreds and thousands of young lives that fill these schools! Each pupil is to be affected by the complex forces that operate on his vital being during his stay in school. Body and soul are to be affected; the interests of this life and that which is to come are involved. The "bread-and-butter" side of the matter, though important, is yet small compared with the proper training and equipment of the being itself.

On this account the church must, and does, take hold of the school question, and makes some effort to provide for the scholastic life of her children. Much more must be done, not to multiply colleges, but to equip adequately those we have. Just now the season is upon us for filling our colleges and seminaries with students for the next year. This ought to be a labor of love and of patient continuance, and Methodists certainly ought to patronize the schools authorized and endorsed by their own church.

I feel interested in the two schools which have a special claim on the North Mississippi Conference—Millsaps College for young men, and Grenada Collegiate Institute for the daughters of our Conference. I write with the stronger emphasis in their favor because it was my good fortune to witness the exercises of their last commencements. I am sure that both these schools afford to our people the conditions of a thorough scholastic training, together with that attention to the physical, the moral and the religious life which moves towards a complete education. Millsaps College has completed four years of labor with demonstrations of markod success. The wisdom of its foundation is vindicated. The trustees are earnest men sincerely striving to make this institution a noble blessing to our young men in all departments of their life-work in both Church and State. The faculty is able, earnest, Christian. The young man who is willing to mind his business there will find competent aid for his success, whether his strivings be in the departments of study, or of the social concerns, or in the development of the religious life.

The full audiences which Jackson gave to the public exercises of the college in June last were a high testimonial of the worth of the institution and of its influence in that community. Why should not the Methodists of the State combine to push this school to the fullest measure of service in the Christian education needed by our young men? Let no one slack his hand from doing his might.

Grenada Collegiate Institute holds her claim on the North Mississippi Conference especially, if not exclusively. The school is located in an excellent community, and shows a health record for ten years unsurpassed in the Southwest, if surpassed anywhere. The buildings are superior, and the management of the school secures every attention that can be reasonably asked, either in the departments of instruction, or that of domestic and social culture, or in that of moral and religious training. President J. W. Malone and his corps of assistants are enthusiastically devoted to their work, and have a conscientious care over the pupils committed to their trust. The prices are very moderate indeed for the service rendered. This institute has for many years done a noble work for the North Mississippi Conference, and has won her title to pre-eminence in our regard and support. Shall we meet the call which our own obligations lay upon us to unite in pressing this noble enterprise to complete success? Send the girls, and ask for catalogues.

Let me commend to the readers of this ADVOCATE an article, "Entering College," by Dr. Charles Foster Smith, in the Nashville Advocate of this Aug. 27.

Aug. 29, 1896.

Look Out!

A short communication from "Layman," in the ADVOCATE, of Aug. 13, suggests thought along lines involving most closely the weal of all social institutions. There is a wrong at the point suggested by "Layman" which ought to be righted in some way, but "Layman's" method is not, in my way of thinking, the way to right up wrongs. It seems to me that "Layman" proposes to do wrong in order to punish a wrong done by another. "Layman" has taken a solemn vow to "support" the "institutions" of the church, of which the ministry is one.

Now, if a preacher fails to do his duty, what is the remedy? Starvation by "Layman's" suggestion? But what is the law? What does the church say is the right thing in such cases? If "Layman" is to be the judge, then any other layman may sit in judgment, and a half dozen or more laymen may, for mere whims, virtually nullify the whole machinery of the church, e. g.: This layman does not want a certain "official organ," but an unofficial one. If the preacher refuses to assist him in obtaining the paper of his choice, he pouts, and, on taking the judgment seat, proceeds to condemn the preacher as unworthy of his support; but if he assists, then the other condemns him on his private personal judgment.

Judgment is with the Conference, and not with an individual. This preacher about whom "Layman" writes has done wrong, but "Layman" should take the case to the Conference with proper complaints, and let that regularly constituted judiciary pass upon it. Any other method is anarchical, however offensive such an expression may be. The trouble in all such cases as "Layman's" lies in the fact that there is no appeal from judgment rendered ex parte by an unauthorized judge. Moreover, whims, more often than otherwise, constitute the motive power in all such conclusions.

Let us suppose a charge with ten heads of families who have to support the preacher, and see whether or not on the plan suggested by "Layman" any man may not be "starved out."

No. 1 objects to the preacher "because he preaches too loud," contrary to the Discipline.

No. 2 objects to paying anything because the preacher talks "so easy nobody can hear him."

No. 3 refuses to pay the preacher because he "dresses too fine," or because "he wears a 'hickory' shirt."

No. 4 ties up the purse-strings because the preacher "does not preach the right doctrine"!

No. 5 exempts himself from payment of church dues because the preacher condemns his unholy methods in his transactions, in commerce or in politics.

No. 6 adopts the starvation plan because the preacher "spends more time at one place than is necessary."

No. 7 violates his church vows because the preacher takes public conveyance to his Sunday appointment instead of working his own broken-down horse.

No. 8 considers the preacher unworthy of his support because "he does not visit from house to house" as No. 8 thinks he should.

No. 9 ostracises the preacher because he resents hyper-criticism; says "he is too vain and hard headed" to be supported by him.

No. 10 finds an excuse to keep his money in his pocket "because the preacher uses tobacco."

It may be that none of these things are true, or, if true, viewed in a proper light, are no transgression of any law, human or divine. However, under this self-authorized judicial proceeding a hearing by a competent and impartial judge or jury is impossible. The "accused" is denied a hearing, and condemned according to the whims of the "accuser." This is not law. It is not religion. It is anarchy gone to seed. If any man is to be judged and condemned by another man who may be so disposed, it is "the law of the strong against the weak." I do not know what it is if not this.

Our church has regularly constituted courts, and regularly authorized judges and juries, for the determination of all disputed questions; and whoever has a knowledge of one's having violated any law is himself a party to such violation if he withholds such knowledge from the authorities.

"Layman" will not argue that because a tax collector does some wrong act, he will not, for that reason, pay his taxes. He owes certain duties to his country, and no conduct of the official with whom he deals can exonerate him from these duties. So he owes his church something, and conformity to its rules and regulations is required upon his part as much as on the part of others. "Who art thou that judgest another?" If your preacher goes wrong, follow him up to the Annual Conference, and lay your case, with the evidence of it, before that body as the Discipline directs, and you will not have to violate your sacred vow to "support the institutions" of the church in order to punish some real or supposed derelictions of the preacher.

Another monstrously cruel thing about this plan of "Layman" is this: It indiscriminately punishes innocent women and children for wrongs which they never did. The wife and children are not yet held responsible for the conduct of the husband and father. Such a course is worthy only of heathens, "who, being without law, are a law unto themselves." I am surprised that "Layman" should have fallen upon such error. The principle is a bad one, the spirit is worse, and the consequences outrage every law, both human and divine. The divine law says, "Judge not." "Tell it to the church" as a last resort, and then you may treat him as a "heathen and a publican." The human law says, "All men are esteemed innocent until proven guilty," and courts of suitable jurisdiction are established in Church and State for such objects.

President J. W. Beeson.

MR. EDITOR: It occurs to me that it may be of interest to many of your readers to know something of the character and ability of the new president of your East Mississippi Female College, located in Meridian, Miss. While a Presbyterian, I have for four years past been intimately associated with President Beeson, both in educational and religious work. When he was president of the Marengo Female College, at Demopolis, Ala., I was principal of the Marengo Male Academy for three years, and the fourth year I was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Demopolis. The newly elected president has always been an earnest, progressive and successful educator. He has had charge of the Marengo Female College during the past three years, so trying upon institutions of like character from a financial standpoint. The maintenance and growth of the college has rested entirely upon the energy and ability of its president. It has no endowment, and is just what its president makes it in every respect, while its location brings it in contact with as much competition possibly as any college in the State. President Beeson, by his untiring energy and executive ability, not only maintained his college in the face of these difficulties, but steadily advanced it in the extent of its patronage, the scope and thoroughness of its curriculum, the capacity, beauty, and equipments of its buildings, and in its general usefulness. In his careful selection of teachers he has an eye not only to intellectual proficiency and attainments, but also to their Christian character, and their experience and success in the past. He controls his household of teachers and young ladies with tact, but firmness, thus obviating any friction that may occur, and making school life as home-like as possible. It has often been my pleasure to note the contentment and happiness of the young ladies under his charge. Those mothers who intrust their daughters to Prof. Beeson to educate may rest assured that every attention will be given to the comforts of their home life, while they will be most strictly guarded from hurtful influences and associations. He has made his profession his life-work and study. He adopts, and has his teachers adopt, the most progressive and successful methods of teaching, and the thoroughness of his work is well attested by the standing and accomplishments of his graduates. He was superintendent of the Methodist Sunday-school in Demopolis, which became during his administration by far the largest and most progressive in that section. He has also always been a loyal Methodist, devoted to his church, bold and fearless in his stand against wickedness in all places, and ready to meet the strongest demands upon him in the Christian work. It is his purpose not only to educate the young ladies in his care, but to lead them also to Jesus Christ. Organized and aggressive Christian work is always maintained in his school through the systematic study of the Sunday-school lessons, Bible training-classes, etc. I think I am correct in saying that for the past two years every young lady in college had accepted Christ as her Savior, and united with some church by the close of the session. Under the guidance and blessing of God's Spirit, Prof. Beeson is sure to make the East Mississippi Female College one of large usefulness and great prosperity.

Very sincerely,

A. G. IRONS,
Formerly Pastor Presbyterian Church, Demopolis, Ala.

In the Living Present.

A Little Rock paper informs our political preachers that abuse is not argument. In Quebec, Canada, the Roman Catholic hierarchy used all its influence during the recent election to defeat the liberal ticket. But it was elected nevertheless. Now Cardinal Gibbons advises the clergy of our country to abstain from politics. Bishop Newman, of the M. E. Church, on the other hand, requests the preachers "properly" to inform their hearers in matters of politics.

The Washington Post has a poetical writer whose satire, irony and wit are inimitable. As proof of this read his following character sketch of the professional politician:

"He drank, chewed an' smoked, an' was likewise profane;
He got angry at small provocation
So he give up the job of reformin' hisself,
And went to reformin' the nation."

Sing Sing Camp Meeting has been annually held for sixty years. This year Rev. Thos. Harrison, the boy preacher (an old boy, though), has been the attraction. As an innovation several days were given to specialists for exclusive service. So the Salvation Army had their entire day. So had the temperance cause, the children, and also the old folks. Wonder if "Old Folks at Home" was sung on the last-named day!

Rightly Longfellow says:

"We can make our life sublime."

Li Hung Chang, the hoary statesman of China, who is now the much-honored guest of our nation, was the son of a poor and illiterate villager. And you complain of inherited poverty. That you are the slave of unfortunate circumstances. Fie! A freeman is not a slave. Create your circumstances! Up, and doing!

On Sept. 23 it will be sixty years that Queen Victoria has reigned over Great Britain. Appropriate celebration is designed. Virtue and honor, peace and good-will, prosperity and happiness, have been promoted by her wise counsel and example. She had the good sense of selecting sensible advisers.

Dr. Arthur T. Pierson is no longer a Presbyterian. Summoned before the Philadelphia Presbytery, he was requested to explain his course in being immersed by young Spurgeon. After patiently listening to the explanation, the Doctor was, without discussion, unanimously expelled from the Presbyterian Church. Where, now, is the eccentric evangelist? A Baptist he declines to be.

A celebrated European statesman had publicly expressed himself depreciatorily about the Cretan revolutionists. Whereupon an indignant Scotchman sent him a letter expressing dissent, etc. The statesman replied that, from consular reports and statements of missionaries, he had learned that St. Paul's statement of the Cretans' characteristics was true to this day. Said apostle says in Titus i, 12, "The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies."

Rubens was indeed a great painter. With one stroke of his brush he could change a laughing child into a weeping one. But some of our pedagogues are his equal, if not his superiors, using the rattan instead of the brush.

FAITH.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

I will not doubt though all my ships at sea
Come drifting home with broken masts and sails;
I shall believe the hand that never fails,
From seeming evil worketh good for me;
And though I weep because those sails are tattered,
Still will I cry, while my best hopes are shattered,
'I trust in thee"

I will not doubt, though all my prayers return,
Unanswered, from the still, white realms above,
I shall believe it is an all-wise love
Which has refused these things for which I yearn
And though, at times, I can not keep from grieving,
Yet the pure ardor of my fixed believing
Undimmed shall burn.

I will not doubt, though sorrows fall like rain,
And troubles swarm like bees about a hive;
I shall believe the heights for which I strive
Are only reached by anguish and by pain,
And though I groan and writhe beneath my crosses,
I yet shall see, through my severest losses,
The greater gain.

I will not doubt: Well-anchored in this faith,
Like some staunch ship, my soul braves every gale;
So strong its courage that it will not quail,
To breast the mighty, unknown sea of death.
Oh, may I cry, when only parts with spirit,
"I do not doubt" so listening worlds can hear it,
With my last breath.

Unity of the Church.

We believe in the unity of the church of God. To our mind there are many convincing texts of Scripture to prove that the church is one, both in the old and new dispensations; and whether called Abrahamic, Christian, Roman, Greek, or Protestant, so they were, or are, true believers in Christ. In the old dispensation they looked forward to Christ; now we look backward, but to the one Savior. "For if the firstfruit be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches. And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert graffed in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree; boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee." (Rom. xi, 16–18.)

The Jews who believed in the promised Messiah, and accepted him when he came, remained in the true church, or passed in the church from the old to the new externals of God's one church. The Gentiles who became believers were graffed in, and became partakers of the promises made to Adam, Abraham and others down to the coming of Christ, and fulfilled by him.

"Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone: in whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together, for an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. ii, 19–22.)

This shows the spiritual unity of all who have built on this chief corner-stone, which is Christ.

"Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, That the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, can not disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise." (Gal. iii, 16–18.)

"There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. iii, 28, 29.)

As sure, then, as we are Christ's, we are Abraham's seed according to the promise: "And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." (Gal. iii, 8.)

In Mark xii, 1-12, the parable of the vineyard shows the unity of the church before and after the coming of Christ.

"Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee." (Heb. ii, 12.)

"This is he, that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us." (Acts vii, 38.)

Here we have New Testament authority that there was a church both in the time of David and Moses.

"And did all drink the same spiritual drink; (for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ)." (I. Cor. x, 4.)

They were then Christians in spirit, but not called by that name.

"Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." (Heb. xi, 25, 26.)

Moses was with the people of God, and a believer in Christ in the best sense.

"For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free: and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." (I. Cor. xii, 13.)

"There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." (Eph. iv, 4-6.)

One body is here spoken of. It is spiritual, having a common hope and faith, and God manifesting his love through and in them. If any claiming to be Christians, and have God working through them for good to others, and have God in them in satisfactory experiences of grace, they must be a part of the body of Christ. If Christ calls men of any sect to preach the gospel, and men are regenerated, and a reformation follows their work, they must be of God. If God did not call young men of any of our denominations to preach, in a generation or so we would cease. God puts his seal on us in perpetuating our ministry and blessing our work in his name.

We do not find Bible testimony that the church was organized by John, Christ, or the apostles. On the day of Pentecost those who were baptized were "added" (Acts ii, 41), and in verse 47 were "added to the church." Was it organized on the day of Pentecost? Or was the church organized when Christ spoke to Peter about the rock? Was Christ, the great Head of the church, preaching and working miracles, saving souls, and having disciples follow him, and he not yet in the church? Some people believe that John the Baptist baptized Christ into the Christian Church as an example for us to follow. If that is a fact, John must have set up the church, or some one previous to his time. Please give us the proof. For convenience, give us the book, chapter and verse where John set up the church.

Several branches of the church unchurch all Christians except themselves. This decision is based on one or the other of the three phases of "succession"—church, apostolic, or baptismal. If we had been excluded for the lack of true religion, or because we did not have the divine approbation, there would be more justice in the judgment rendered against us. Intelligent men, with the Bible in their hands and live consciences in them, are apt to be right. The most religious people are the most charitable. I am glad Christ is to be the judge.

There may be divisions on non-essentials in the externals of religion, and yet unity on the essentials. We give some proof of this.

"Now this I say, that everyone of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollus; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" (I. Cor. i, 12, 13.)

Even in the apostles' day there were "contentions" in the church.

"And certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye can not be saved. When, therefore, Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question." (Acts xv, 1, 2.)

These Christians were divided as to circumcision, yet belonged to the same church

"But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed." (Gal. ii, 11.)

Here was a division of opinions, and both apostles and workers in the same spiritual kingdom. The sure test is to have the spirit of Christ (Rom. viii, 9), and the bringing forth "the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." (Gal. v, 22, 23.)

"I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." (John x, 9.)

Some Statistics.

MR. EDITOR: Looking over the Minutes of the late session of the Louisiana Conference, I find some very suggestive facts, to which I desire to call the attention of the preachers, and, through them, the attention of our congregations also. And in connection with these details from the Minutes, I want to present other details, which, from a missionary point of view, properly belong to the same vital interest.

First of all, there are 9 charges in the Conference to which no assessments were made by the district stewards, or, if made, were not reported. Every charge should be assessed for something, even though it be a mission. Self-support is an essential basis, and no mission is too poor to pay something for itself as a contribution to a common cause.

Secondly, there are 10 charges which paid nothing for missions, or, if so, it was not reported at the Conference session. One of these charges paid the pastor $500, and the presiding elder $100. Another of these charges reported 250 members—250 nothings for missions (?). Still another, which paid the presiding elder $60, and the pastor in charge $387.70, reports nothing for missions. Another paid for ministerial support $463.70, but paid nothing for missions. Only 22 charges in the entire Conference paid the assessment "in full." Sixty-two charges paid less than one-half the assessment. Twenty-seven charges paid less than one-fifth of the assessments. Most of these charges are in the older part of the Conference, and, as the figures show in some instances, are on a self-sustaining basis.

Surely these people do not know that there are three "white" parishes in South Louisiana where there is not a place at which the Word of God is read and expounded to the people! There are eight parishes in our State (Louisiana) having a majority of white inhabitants, with a population of 132,098, and only five resident preachers of our church! In these eight parishes, among this 132,098 people—most of them white people—there are only twelve places where the gospel is preached as Methodists understand it and accept it. In 16 parishes, which contain nearly one-fourth of the population of Louisiana, we have 1,178 members, 13 preachers, 28 preaching-places—1 preacher to every 21,528 of the population!

These people must be served by the people of Louisiana, if served with the gospel at all. The total population depending on these 13 preachers and 28 preaching-places is 279,868! Poor as this showing is for Methodism, we are very far in advance of other evangelical churches.

"Men of Israel, help."

Revivals.

MR. EDITOR: Your excellent editorial this week (Aug. 13) on "Emotionalism" commends itself to the thoughtful as food convenient for the times. We are in an age of protracted meetings and great revivals.

I feel emboldened after a ministry of five years in the local ranks and nineteen in the traveling work—making twenty-four in all—to offer a few suggestions in regard to revival work, for I began my ministry in a revival, and a scarce let up from that day to this has been my experience. My suggestions are for the benefit of brethren younger than myself in this cause, not presuming to teach those who have the advantage of me in years and experience.

I suggest, first, what to preach. Preach nothing but the Word of God. Second, how to preach. Preach as for God. Remember that you stand in his place. It is his Word and his cause, and should be presented as such, and not as our own. Seek the Holy Ghost to guide and to inspire the message with peculiar directness. Deliver the message in pure language that will commend itself to the intelligence and the consciences of men. Trust the Holy Ghost for power in your ministry. Preach in your own style, and not in another's. Let your English be pure, and not the low slang so common to this age. Preach to "hit," and not to miss. As the old-time hunters would say, "Chow your bullets," that they may tear their way through. Be sure to proportion your powder and shot—not too much of the one for the other. Preach fearlessly, but lovingly. Fear neither man nor woman, but respect the angels and fear God. Fear not to expose sin, though it may cut your meat and bread short. Compromise the truth with nothing. But we are confronted with another matter in our revival work of magnitude rather large for the writer to handle—that is, who shall help in the meeting. Of course, the Discipline puts the pastor in the lead, but who shall be his helper? I would suggest that he call his church together for prayer and fasting, and make his best workers his helpers. Let the pastor do the preaching. Let his own choir and congregation do the singing, and his own members and workers do the praying and the altar work—the preacher in the lead. If he must have ministerial help, let him call one of his brethren in the pastorate to his help. Let that helper be a man full of the Holy Ghost and common sense—a man adapted to revival work (for some good preachers are not). Let an evangelist be the last resort, and in no case get a man who is in the habit of abusing the pastorate to the people. Let the pastor, in selecting help, consult his presiding elder when convenient to do so. In fact, no discord should exist at any station on the line, from the Bishop down to the Official Board. If we are not loyal to those over us in authority, what can we expect of our members? This fraternal spirit all along the line is conducive to successful revival work. If we must differ, let it be in love. Let converting and sanctifying power be stressed. Let the people have a chance to tell what God has done for them, that God may have the glory, and that all may get the benefit of direct experience of saving grace.

Correspondence.

To "Layman or Sextus."

DEAR BROTHER: Your communications in the ADVOCATE are always read by me, and usually with approbation; but one sentence in your article, of July 30, must have been hastily penned by you, and without due thought: "The brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile." If that be true, then the brain is mind, and mind is matter, and the old Sadducees were right in saying there is no angel, nor spirit, nor resurrection of the dead. "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." (I. Cor. xv, 13, 14.)

A Card of Thanks.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference desires, through the columns of this paper, to express their earnest appreciation of the faithful work of their former treasurer, Miss Mollie A. Clark, and to return to her their heart-felt thanks. For eleven years she has occupied the most laborious post in our Conference society, and without one cent of remuneration has transacted all our business interests with unswerving fidelity. We can not fail also to include in this tribute of appreciation and thanks her worthy brother, Mr. E. W. Burton, who has so faithfully assisted her, and under all circumstances shown such genuine interest in our work. Too much could not be written in their praise, and the North Mississippi W. F. M. S. will ever hold them in grateful remembrance, and prays that God, the great Rewarder of all good deeds, will one day recite out to them their rich deserts.

This card was delayed owing to Miss Clark's holding over as treasurer a short time after the annual meeting of the Conference Society.

(Signed) Mrs. T. B. Hargrove, president; Mrs. S. M. Thames, vice-president; Mrs. S. E. Dean, corresponding secretary; Miss Ella Grider, recording secretary; Mrs. Clara Fant, treasurer; Mrs. J. F. Evans, auditor.

The members of the Woman's Board have long been anxious to open work in Japan, but not having the money to purchase property, or to pay salaries, they have not been able to make a beginning. They have recently appropriated $1,000 to defray the expenses of two young women who are missionaries of the General Board, a committee having been appointed to confer with them in regard to establishing regular work. We hope that this is our beginning.

Let each president stress the contingent fund at her monthly meeting. It is needed to enlarge the work. At the late annual session of the Woman's Board the members pledged themselves to secure new members enough to get the whole number up to 100,000, if possible. This needs the strength of every individual in the societies. Can't you get one new member and one more dollar? We have heat and dust and drouth and inertia and hard times, and "it is with difficulty that burthened Christian runs because of this load on his back; but the highway is fenced on either side with a wall, and that wall is called Salvation. So I saw in my dream that just as Christian came up with the cross, the burthen loosed from his shoulders, and fell from his back. The sight of the cross eased him from his burden."

To the Auxiliaries of the North Mississippi Conference W. P. and H. M. Society.

DEAR SISTERS: This is the last quarter of the Conference year. The early part of October is the time appointed for our "going up" to plan ways and means for another year's work and to retrospect the past year. This is essential to our success. Nothing can be accomplished without thinking, planning, and working. Yet many of the women who are appointed to carry on this part of the machinery are preachers' wives, and women who can ill afford the time and means to go to Oxford in October. At the last annual meeting a contingent fee of ten cents was asked of each member of each auxiliary, per annum, to defray this expense. We have heard from two auxiliaries and have one dollar and forty-five cents in the treasury. You see by this that the most of us are asking for "a little more sleep, a little more slumber, and a little more folding of the hands."

O sisters of North Mississippi, arouse yourselves! Let us be up and doing, that this Conference year may tell for us in eternity. We have done much in the past four years. There are now only twelve charges in our Conference which have not some kind of a home for the preachers. Let there not be an idle woman's hand until we can say, when the appointments are read out, no faithful man of God in our Conference can feel uneasy as to what he can do with his family. If every woman in North Mississippi Conference would only lift her share of the burden, another four years would find us with this end accomplished, and with our reap hooks, bright and sharpened, to enter some broader field to garner for the Master.

The Lord has seen fit to afflict me this year more than usual; therefore I have not been able to answer as promptly as I would have liked, nor to write each one of you the letter I expected: but I am thankful it is as well as it is. I know there are women in each auxiliary who have suffered more than I. Let us be grateful for the "rod" of affliction as well as the "staff" of joy, and send up our officers and delegates to Oxford with more determination to do God's will, more zeal and knowledge for this work, and more love to our neighbors. I shall expect full reports from each auxiliary, including all dues, contingent fees, and pledges for the S. Myra Smith Scholarship. Of the three hundred and ninety dollars pledged at the last Conference less than two hundred dollars have been sent in. I am praying God that no auxiliary treasurer will fail to do her duty. It takes every member to fill out the whole, and may he forbid that any woman shall clog the wheel.

Your Conference treasurer,

MRS. ROWAN THAYER.

Greenwood, Miss.

Do Not Meddle with God's Plans.

Many men wreck their lives by determinedly carrying out their own plans without reference to the plans of God. In an army every part, every brigade and regiment must wait the commander's orders. If any battalion move independently, though ever so heroically, it not only confuses the whole plan of battle, but brings disaster to itself as well in the end. So each individual must always wait for God's commands to move. Keep your eye on the pillar of cloud and fire that leads. Rest when the pillar rests; move when it moves. Never lag behind, but be sure you never run ahead. You can make the clock strike before the hour by putting your own hand to it, but it will strike wrong. You can hurry the enfolding of God's providence, but you will only mar the divine plan, unless you wait for him.

You can tear the rosebud open before the time it would naturally open, but you destroy the beauty of the rose. So we spoil many a gift or blessing which God is preparing for us by our own eager haste. He would weave all our lives into patterns of loveliness. He has a perfect plan for each. It is only when we refuse to work according to his plan that we mar the web. Stop meddling with the threads of your life as they come from the Lord's hands. Every time you interfere you make a flaw. Keep your hands off, and let God weave as he pleases.—Parish Visitor.

It is said that the late Dr. A. Bonar, of Glasgow, began a sermon to his people, on one Sunday morning, in the following way: "Once upon a time a congregation asked their minister to give them strong meat. Next Sabbath he preached on the duty of Christian giving. And they sent him no more requests for strong meat."

The only conclusive evidence of a man's sincerity is that he gives himself for a principle. Words, money, all things else, are comparatively easy to give away; but when a man makes a gift of his daily life and practice, it is plain that the truth, whatever it may be, has taken possession of him.—James Russell Lowell.

We claim for religion the highest influence upon the intellectual faculties. Education may, so to speak, give them feet, but religion gives them wings; and if, for a time, religion seems to abash and humble the mind, it is that afterwards it may give it a wider charter, and stir it by a mightier impulse.

Education is leading human souls to what is best, and making what is best of them. The training which makes men happiest in themselves also makes them most serviceable to others.—John Ruskin.

Who is a true man? He who does the truth, and never holds a principle on which he is not prepared in any hour to act, and in any hour to risk the consequences of holding it.—Thomas Carlyle.

Man, in society, is like a flower blown in its native bud. It is then only that his faculties, expanded in full bloom, shine out; there only reach their proper use.—William Cowper.

Whose neglects a thing that he suspects he ought to do because it seems to him too small a thing is deceiving himself. It is not too little, but too great for him.—E. B. Pusey.

Never bear more than one kind of trouble at a time. Some people bear three kinds—all they have had, all they have now, and all they expect to have.—E. E. Halo.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,610 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer. I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that go out sells two or three more, as they do the work to perfection. You can wash and dry the dishes in two minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to the business now, and I am sure I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A, Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money I'll owe you a cent. Mrs. W. H.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. T. H. Porter, P. C.: "On Aug. 8 we closed our week's meeting at Mt. Vernon Church, of Tyro circuit. Results: The church was greatly revived. We had sixteen or seventeen conversions, fifteen accessions to the church on profession of faith, fourteen adult baptisms. Bro. W. S. Lagrone, of Senatobia, assisted us, and did some as good preaching as the Mt. Vernon people have heard in a long time. Let God be praised for the wonderful exhibition of his power among us."

Rev. Thos. B White, Ruston, La., Aug. 17: "Scottsville Camp Meeting is now in progress. I attended. Tenth consecutive year for me. This 'feast of tabernacles' is a blessed place for edification, confirmation, conversion, and to obtain the peerless blessing of sanctification. I praise God for the continent-wide influences that have gone out from there. Not so many in attendance, perhaps, as formerly. The wide-reaching drouth and scarcity of money prevented many longing, hungry souls. A young brother of our Conference kept account up to Sunday night, and reported 46 conversions and 67 entire sanctifications. Such were the scenes at the altar it was difficult to keep count. Meeting under full headway when I left Monday morning. The preaching of Carradine, Morrison and Sister Snell (the fire-baptized prophetess) was full-orbed, in 'demonstration of the Spirit, and with power,' as if 'anointed of God.' Some came 500 miles. Many thrilling incidents. Praise God for full salvation! Amen."

Rev. F. B. Ormond, P. C., Linwood charge, Mississippi Conference: "The Lord has blessed his people at Hopewell this Summer. We began our meeting at that point on the morning of the second Sabbath in August, and closed the following Thursday afternoon. Bro. Dan Scarborough, the beloved pastor of the Neshoba charge, was with us two days, and preached four gospel sermons which were blessed of the Lord to the edification of the congregations. The visible results of this meeting are as follows: Several conversions and reclamations; 10 accessions to the church—9 on profession, 1 by certificate; 4 infants baptized. In this meeting I had the grand privilege of baptizing a brother and his wife and their two little girls, all of whom joined the church. We give God the glory. We closed a four days' meeting at Talichulok, the Indian Church, to-day (Aug. 17). Will give an account of this meeting through the ADVOCATE later. God bless the editor and all who read the paper!"

Rev. H. C. Morehead, Water Valley, Miss., Aug 21: "No one can tell, as yet, the damage sustained by the people of this entire section in consequence of the long, dry, and, for two weeks or more, intensely hot weather. While this is true, we are by no means disheartened or idle. We are being led to glorious victory by our faithful pastors. The Oxford Camp Meeting and the meeting conducted by Bro. McIntosh, at Charleston, were times of great power and large ingathering. Many others of much good to the church and people have been and are being held. All glory to God!"

Rev. W. T. Woodward, Simsport, La., Aug. 14: "We protracted four days only, circumstances of my helper being of such a nature that he could not remain with me longer. Bro. F. N. Sweeney, of Dry Creek circuit, did the preaching. His preaching was simple gospel truth, told in a plain, practical way; unadulterated. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and sixteen accessions to the church. The foregoing facts is the result of the first services ever held in our new church (Bayou Marine). I am confident my predecessors will rejoice to know that the Bayou Marine Church is now being used, and souls are being converted in it. Bro. R. C. Grace was the founder of this appointment. All the people love him. Building 25x40, with walls 12 feet in the clear, with five and a half foot arch; weatherboarded and covered with hand made shingles. All and all, we have a very handsome little church. Building of this church is largely due to Capt. Sam J. Norwood, Sr., our big hearted philanthropist to all charitable causes. He is ever ready to aid the church of the living God. May the choicest blessing of God abide with him and his! Pray for us."

Rev. C. P. Moss, Eureka circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Eureka Springs, Mo., Aug. 21: "I have just finished my round of revival meetings. Great good was accomplished for Christ and Methodism. Many souls were brought from the night and death of sin into the light and life of righteousness, and the membership of the militant hosts quickened and lifted to a loftier altitude of Christly living. We are indebted to several ministerial brethren for valuable services, but especially to Rev. L. D. Worsham. He was with us at Eureka, and did the preaching from Tuesday to the close of the meeting. His sermons were charged with the divine magnetism and power peculiar to the gospel messages of salvation when delivered by an earnest soul fired with the Holy Ghost. He is simple and straightforward, both in his preaching and method. There is no clap trap in his manipulation, and no sensationalism in his sermon. He believes the gospel, delivered in the old-time way and with the old-time fire, will prove in our day, as in the days of our fathers, the power of God unto salvation. As a result of such faith and such preaching, many, both old and young, were convicted of sin and brought into the joyous experience of redeeming love. His visit to us was pleasant and profitable—a benediction and season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The people of Eureka will ever revert to it as one of the oases on the pilgrimage highway from earth to glory."

Rev. A. D. Miller, Hermanville, Miss., Aug. 21: "We have held four meetings on the Hermanville circuit. The first at Hermanville, commencing the third Sunday night in July, and closing the fourth Sunday. We had fine preaching by Revs. T. B. Holloman, M. J. Miller, and H. M. Ellis. Some good done; no accessions. Will have another meeting later. Second meeting at Bartonton. W. L. Linfield did all the preaching after Monday (pastor did the preaching Sunday and Monday). Had a good meeting. Church much improved and strengthened; 12 accessions (11 received and 1 applicant). Bro. Linfield is a good preacher and good worker. Third meeting at Pisgah second Sunday in August. Bro. J. G. Galloway did all the preaching, and did it well. We had a tolerably good meeting, with 6 accessions to the church. Fourth meeting at Sarepta Church third Sunday in August. Bro. J. W. Crisler did the preaching after Sunday, and the people were pleased with him. He is a good preacher. We closed Wednesday evening, with 2 accessions, 1 adult baptized, and 12 children. Pretty good number of children for one meeting. Upon the whole, we had good meetings all around. Much good done. Now, if we will only hold the ground we have, and press forward! May God bless all the people! We expect to hold two other meetings—one at Carlisle and another at Hermanville. The one at Carlisle the first Sunday in September; the one at Hermanville the week after the third Sunday in September, and to run over the fourth Sunday. Bro. I. L. Peebles, of Meridian, is to be with me at Hermanville. Pray for us, that we may have gracious meetings. Let everybody attend that can. May God bless all the people!"

SWEETWATER MEETING.

Aug. 9, 11 A. M., this meeting opened with a good congregation. Your correspondent had been called to aid in the meeting by the pastor, Rev. J. D. Crymes. From the beginning there was a deep interest on the part of a portion of the church. The interest increased from the beginning, and some twenty-five were reclaimed, converted, or sanctified.

Bro. Crymes has done a good work in every respect. He has preached a full and faithful gospel, visited from house to house, circulated good religious literature, and held meeting after meeting, with efficient help, for the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of believers. The harvest is now being gathered, and the people are seeing that they have, as pastor, a man that cares for their souls.

This, I will venture to say, will prove epochal in the history of Caseyville circuit. There is a return to the old paths of Methodism. There was much heart searching and adjusting among the people. Many saw it was not consistent to use God's money to purchase tobacco with which to defile the temple of the Holy Ghost, and voluntarily, without any public vow, cast it away from them.

The meeting closed Aug. 16, except night services were to be continued, at the request and for the benefit of seekers. We confidently believe this good work will go on. Many family altars were erected, and many who did not profess any definite blessing gave abundant evidence of a purpose to live a better life. I expect to meet many loved friends from the Caseyville circuit in the kingdom of God. To God be all the glory.

I am now with Bro. R. B. Downer, of Voesburg, in a meeting at Central Church. This is now the second day since I reached here, and already many are crowding the altar. One has been reclaimed. We are confidently expecting a great victory.

Will you pray for us? Lord, revive thy work! is the constant prayer of my heart. Let all who will join in the prayer and expect an answer. (John xv, 7; Mark xi, 24.)

Thousands of men are afraid of the lightning, and yet not one man in ten thousand is ever killed by it. Few men are afraid of consumption, and yet it causes one-sixth of all the deaths in the world. It is more deadly than either wars or pestilences. Any sort of wasting disease may lead to consumption. Any slight disorder of the respiratory organs may easily develop it. Weakness of the body, emaciation, lack of vitality are plain invitations for the germs of consumption. Consumption is not entirely a disease of the lungs. It is a disease of the blood that shows itself most strongly in the lungs. It is not—as it used to be considered—incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has changed all that. It will cure ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of consumption if taken in time. It is the most wonderful blood maker and flesh builder in the world. It cures where doctors have failed. It has brought back to life hundreds of men and women who were considered as good as dead.

Mrs. Nancy R. Tubb, of Amory, Monroe Co., Miss., writes: "About ten years ago I suffered an attack of nervous prostration resulting in other troubles which my family physician pronounced consumption. We doctored with him until we lost all hope. I finally happened to find one of Dr. Pierce's little Memorandum Books, saw his medicine recommended and thought I would try it; sent and got one bottle of each—'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription'—and one bottle of 'Pellets.' As soon as I began to use these medicines my health began to improve, and before I had used one-half dozen bottles I felt almost as strong as I ever was. I am now enjoying good health again. Two years ago I had a little boy who seemed to be subject to phthisic (asthma) and I thought I would try the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and to my surprise it cured him entirely; he has never had another attack."

Something Good in Dixie.
Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes so unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him at considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

The Equipment of the College was never so good in its history. Full courses are offered in English, Philosophy, Greek, Latin, Chemistry, Biology, Physics, Engineering, French, German, Hebrew, Political Economy, History, Theology and Law.
The Expense for a year in Emory College is very low—much lower than in most Southern Colleges of like grade. Board can be had in Helping Halls as low as $3 per month and in private families at from $12 to $15.
The Location of the College is one of healthfulness and moral security. Saloons and other demoralizing agencies are forever excluded from the town of Oxford by the provisions of the charter. The society of the place is cultured and religious. Oxford is emphatically a college town, and students at Emory College are not only free from the temptations to immorality which prevail in larger towns, but from the distractions of a commercial community and the unwholesome social excitements common in such places. It is forty miles east of Atlanta, and about one mile north of the Covington depot, on the Georgia Railroad, from which it is reached by a horse-car line.

Thursday, September 3, 1896.

People like to be told of their virtues, but never of their faults.

Some men fancy themselves sagaciously firm in matters involving the carrying out of their plans, when they are simply unreasonably obstinate.

This is the way some render a certain passage of Scripture: "I will let my light so shine before men, that they may see my good works, and glorify me."

Strange to relate, many church people who live well and dress in fine raiment practice the most rigid economy in paying their church dues. They believe in saving all they can by stinting their pastor and the missionaries. To such the Lord says: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings."

Doing Our Part.

The church—and the world, too, for that matter—is greatly afflicted with people who are content to let others do for them what they ought to do themselves. A few are made to carry the burdens which ought to be shared by all. An ideal church member is one who not only leads a pure life, but who does his part of giving and of ministration. "Let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another. For every man shall bear his own burden." Brother, are you shifting your duties upon somebody else's shoulders? Our weakness is in the lack of workers rather than in the unfaithfulness of those who labor for the Master.

Church Relationship.

The following paragraph from one of our religious exchanges, written by an experienced pastor, states a lamentable fact about church relationship. It is true of church members in the South who change their place of residence as well as of those in other sections. Hundreds of members would be lost to us every year were they not hunted up, and many, after being found and visited by the diligent pastors, will not put in their letters. It is a sad commentary on Methodist loyalty that so many of our people, on moving to other localities, either drift off to other churches, or can not be made effective. Says the brother:

"When I was pastor in Kansas, twenty years ago, I often heard the older pastors say that it took 'a pretty good religion to bear transportation across the Mississippi river.' My later experience leads me to think that it takes a pretty good religion to bear transportation anywhere. Thousands of members are lost to the church every year by the change of homes. There are enough of such within a mile of the church served by the writer to make a numerically large church by themselves; almost every city pastor can tell the same story."

The Visit of Li Hung Chang to America.

This week our republic has the honor of entertaining Li Hung Chang, the distinguished representative of the Chinese Empire, who is now making a tour of the world. For some time past he has been visiting the different courts of Europe, the sovereigns of which have vied in showing him attention and respect. He was present at the recent coronation of the Czar of all the Russias, being probably the most notable personage in attendance upon that imposing ceremony. Hon. John W. Foster, who has long been an intimate friend of the viceroy, in an interesting sketch of him in the August Century, remarks: "He is the most distinguished visitor which the continent of Asia has sent to Europe during this generation, . . . a successful soldier, an able statesman, an accomplished diplomatist, and a trained scholar."

Li Hung Chang is said to be of pure Chinese descent. He is now seventy-four years of age, and has served his country as a public officer for nearly half a century. He is six feet in height, of commanding presence, and, in spite of his numerous years, is robust and active. This is said to be the first time he has ever visited the Occident, and the second time he has been outside of his native land. He is a man of remarkable literary attainments, judged by Chinese standards, having in his school-days distanced twenty thousand competitors in the final examinations at Pekin. In China, it should be remembered, promotion to the various grades of public office depends entirely upon the successful passage of competitive examinations in the Chinese classics; not upon favoritism. Says Mr. Foster: "China is the only land which bases its aristocracy on letters, and in this respect is a near approach to a pure democracy." The highest positions in the empire are thus open to the humblest subject who passes the ordeal of the scholastic examinations.

The viceroy, Li Hung Chang, is, for a Chinese statesman, remarkably liberal-minded and progressive—in fact, too much so to be in favor with his people, who are ultra-conservative. The establishment by the Emperor of a college at Pekin, with a full corps of foreign professors, for the instruction of Chinese youths in European languages and the modern sciences, was largely due to his influence. He has effected a number of important public improvements, and strongly favors several changes in the system of government which would be of vast benefit to China if they could be carried out. One of these is a plan to modify the examinations so as to make fitness, rather than the scholarship, the test of admission to public service.

During the late war with Japan he was appointed by his government minister plenipotentiary to negotiate peace, which duty he performed with eminent success. It is to be doubted whether any other Chinese official could have obtained as favorable a treaty, though at first its terms brought down upon his head a storm of abuse.

Gen. Grant, between whom and Li Hung Chang a close friendship existed, it is said, regarded the viceroy as one of the three great men of the world living in his day. As an evidence of the latter's respect for Grant, the Chinese minister at Washington has instructions to lay a wreath of flowers on the general's tomb at Riverside on each anniversary of his death.

In a speech at a reception tendered him recently by the London Chamber of Commerce, the viceroy stated that as long as he lived he would advocate progress, industry and commerce in his native land, and urge the building of railroads all over China.

It will be remembered with profound pleasure that during an interview with Bishop Hendrix, in the city of Pekin, he said: "Say to the American people for me to send over more missionaries for the schools and hospitals, and I hope to be in a position both to aid and protect them." No doubt the recent edict of the Emperor of China removing all restrictions upon the propagation of Christianity in his empire was partly the result of Li Hung Chang's advice and influence.

A man of such profound sagacity and statesmanship is sure to learn much in a tour such as he is making. It is to be hoped that he will carry away none but the most favorable impressions of America, of her citizens, industries, and civilization. Who can foretell what great benefits will accrue to China and to the cause of Christianity from her viceroy's study and observation of Western civilization?

A Friend of Missions.

About seventeen years ago Lady Li, the wife of the viceroy, was taken very ill. Native physicians and the usual methods of treatment were of no avail. The advice of an English surgeon in Tientsin, where in her palace the lady was suffering, was solicited, but as Chinese etiquette forbade him to treat her, he could do no more than consider the symptoms second-hand as they were reported to him, and he suggested that a surgical operation would, in his judgment, be necessary in order to save her life. As no man durst undertake such an operation it seemed as though the lady was doomed. But the surgeon made this suggestion:

"I have heard of a young woman from America, a graduate of a good medical school, and a trained nurse, who can be trusted to perform the heroic operation which will save the life of the lady. She can do the work as well as any other surgeon I know. Her name is Miss Leonora S. Howard, and she is to be found in the Methodist Medical Mission in Pekin."

As soon as possible a messenger was sent in search of Miss Howard, who had not long before arrived in Pekin to reinforce our mission there. She accepted the trust, and we may not doubt that she took with her to the viceroy's palace not only her books, her case of instruments and medicines, but also a heart unusually prayerful, a soul that was full of pleading desires that God might give her tact, wisdom, grace and skill for the critical work to which she had providentially been assigned. She took charge of the patient, in due time performed the operation, brought her patient safely through the ordeal and staid in the palace until recovery was assured. Then, when Li Hung Chang, in his gratitude, offered her a purse of gold—a great treasure for a poor girl in a foreign land—her reply was given:

"I did not do this work for the sake of money; I did it for Christ's sake. I am glad to have had the privilege of saving the life of Lady Li. I am grateful for your offer of gold, but I can not take it. I am paid by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. But, if you wish to help the work I am engaged in and help the women of China, so that they may have medical and surgical aid of the best sort, then you may give this money and whatever you please besides to our hospital work!"

The viceroy gladly did as Miss Howard suggested, and became from that time a friend of our medical missionaries. His gift led to the establishment of a hospital for women, wherein multitudes of native women have been treated. Some time later he sought help from the medical missionaries for his aged mother, who had been taken very ill. This lady, before she died, gave a thousand dollars to the medical mission as a token of her appreciation. —Central Advocate.

The Sunday Law Case.

The celebrated Sunday law case has taken a new turn. Judge Miller, of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, has issued a writ of certiorari and prohibition directed to Judge Theard, restraining him from any further proceedings in the case until the question of jurisdiction involved shall have been passed upon by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court does not meet until the second of November. Meantime the mayor and the chief of police will go on enforcing the Sunday law. During the five or six weeks that have passed since the authorities commenced to enforce the Sunday law, the benefits of the law have been manifest in ways too numerous to mention. The number of Sunday fights, cuttings, shootings, etc., has been diminished very greatly. The Charity Hospital ambulances get a little Sunday rest. It has been demonstrated, too, that the men who kick against the enforcement of the law are not, as a rule, the men who drink, but the men who sell; and by this we mean the men who derive profit from the selling. The wage-working bar-tenders are glad to have one day in seven to rest. If the law continues to be enforced for the next two years as well as it has been for the past few weeks, opposition to the law from respectable sources will cease entirely.

We hope and believe that those who seek to imprison the mayor and chief of police for performing the duties required of them by their oath of office will soon receive a lesson which they sadly need. We do not believe that the Supreme Court will concede to every petty Civil Court in the State the right to annul any statute at its will, and then punish executive officers for refusing obedience to its mandates. If this is the regime under which we are to live hereafter in Louisiana, then we have before us a period of strife and turmoil such as we have never witnessed. If the saloon element of this city want to see an excitement far surpassing that of the recent city election, just let them get our mayor behind the bars for the wonderful offense of enforcing law.

A Novel Case.

The Colorado Conference of the M. E. Church, at its session last week, had rather a novel case of discipline on its hands. One of its members, Rev. F. P. Passmore, a rabid Third Party Prohibitionist, has been for some time denouncing both the Democratic and the Republican parties as whisky parties, and declaring that no Christian, and especially no Methodist, can vote with either of those parties without violating his obligations as a member of the church of Christ. He publicly proclaimed that Bishop Warren, who lives in Colorado, and all ministers who refuse to vote the Third Party ticket, are in league with the saloon. He was expelled.

Education.

Education does not necessarily produce piety. Not a few erudite men have been and are infidels. Many, unlettered, have been devout. But the acquisition of thorough schooling is, nevertheless, a sacred duty and a necessity.

Intellectual faculties admit of development. Dwarfs may become giants. Now, a good school is mind-drill. Learn methodically to think, to investigate, to analyze, compare, deduce results, acquire opinion. The blight of centuries has been prejudice. It sways the scepter now. Men hold opinions without previous individual research. But the school intellectually emancipates. In port large steamships may be towed by small steam-tugs, but freemen should spurn the idea of being led by the nose.

It is a common mistake, that the school should store the memory with facts. That storage will subsequently take place, and with previous mind-drill can be easily accomplished. The school is to furnish intellectual independence. Not properly to school our children is as damnable as when capitalists hoard their wealth in coffers, farmers not till the soil in due season, parents not supervise the development of the physical make-up of their progeny.

The acquisition of education is also an imperious necessity. There is now no avocation in life where learning is not needed. According to the bucolics of the ancients learning was a useless commodity in rural life. This is certainly not true now. Even to make the tillage of the soil profitable we must have previous scientific knowledge of same. Otherwise, the more learned neighbor will succeed far better, and will ultimately possess our land.

It is an almost general and positively hurtful mistake, that a college graduate must either be preacher, physician or lawyer. We need such graduates in the counting-room, in mercantile pursuits, at the plow. In every department of human effort there is now sharp competition. If not properly educated, our offspring will find themselves "hewers of wood and drawers of water."

It has been observed that, as a rule, female schools and colleges are better frequented than those for males. If this is attributable to the avariciousness of the parents, employing the boys as farm hands or clerks, it is cruel. If it is owing to the mistaken idea that manual labor will be the boy's future employment anyhow, it is high time to be better informed. To succeed as farmer, clerk, merchant, thorough education is necessary.

Fortunately, there is no lack of good schools among us. Centenary and Millsaps, Brookhaven and Mansfield Colleges have ample capacity of accommodating all applicants. Bye and bye, parents will die. Will leave to their children bonds and lands. But the heritage may prove their ruin. Give them a good education. This is a capital which business reverses can not affect. JEAN PAUL.

With all his other more notable qualities, John Wesley was a man of affairs and of great practical wisdom. He never lost sight of a judicious and sensible view of conditions and situations. A letter of his, recently discovered, written in March, 1787, to Adam Clarke, is a forceful illustration of this fact: "Do not please the devil by preaching too loud or too long, but please God by denying yourself therein. The whole service should begin and end in about an hour, unless sometimes on Sunday morning, when you may probably a little lengthen the service." These words of the founder of Methodism are particularly pertinent for the minister during the heated season. It is best in summer to shorten all the services of the church. — Zion's Herald.

There is one result of the present hard times which is working for good, surely. That is the "shut down" of 294 whisky distillers in Kentucky. Only six stills are now running in the whole Blue Grass State! This closing period is to last for eighteen months, it is understood. It is pleasant reading to note the main cause of this effect—the fact that more Kentucky whisky has been made than people will buy. In a local-option election held last week, Bolivar county, Miss., went dry by a handsome majority. One remarkable feature of the election was that the negro vote was cast almost solidly against the saloon. This is another vindication of the wisdom of the franchise clause of the new Constitution. The class of negroes who vote under the new regime are people of sufficient intelligence and moral stamina to estimate the saloon at its true worth. Under the old Constitution the ignorant, vicious negro vote was always cast for the saloon.

In a private letter he thus speaks of the kindness of the people of that city: "During my sickness the people of all denominations and of no denomination showed themselves to be true neighbors in many ways. I am anxious for the time to come when I can return and show my appreciation of the kindness of my friends by ministering to them as beautifully in spiritual things as they have done to me in carnal things." What some men call plain preaching is only another name for impudence, wholesale abuse, and disregard of all propriety.—NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

Quite true. There is a good deal of that sort of preaching, because there are a good many who like to hear it. It is true, also, that the idea a good many people have of a "live" paper, is one that disregards all the courtesies of life and shows no respect for those in authority. Not long ago a good brother, in reply to our refusal to publish an article, intimated that we were afraid to publish it. He was right. There are a great many things that we are afraid to publish. We have but one object in view in the conduct of this paper, and that is to make it helpful, a means of good to its readers. Whatever, in our judgment, will do harm instead of good, we are afraid to publish. The man who expects to scare us into a violation of this rule by the threat that we will be considered cowardly, is opening on a cold trail.—Alabama Advocate.

Notes by the Way.

Topisaw Camp Ground, twelve miles east of McComb City, claimed us for a few days. This is a delightful place for such a gathering—retired, quiet, cool, and surrounded by a spirit of genuine Christian communion. This was our second visit after a lapse of eight years. Many familiar faces greeted us. Few camp ground associations have prepared so carefully for the comfort of the ministers as this. The comfortable beds, or bedsteads with patent springs, give one quite a home-like feeling. Fire, water, perfect order, pleasant associations, all conspire to give the visitor a time of refreshing to body, mind, and spirit. In this section the people seem well-to-do. Crops are very good, and seasons have been sufficient to guarantee a good living to the husbandman. Here we met a goodly company of young men and young women, whom we tried to impress with the idea of securing a higher education. So many are content to stop short of what the advancement of the age demands. So many parents incline to measure the child by their own advantages and their acquirements, forgetful of the fact that education has advanced with the age, and what was sufficient fifty years ago is but a beginning now. Here we found Bro. Backus, with the aid of neighboring pastors, carrying on a fine meeting. We were permitted to occupy the pulpit and talk Millsaps College. I trust the seed sown fell in fertile ground.

A failure to make connections threw me in Yazoo City on Sunday, where I met many friends, talked college, preached in the new church Sunday morning. I did my best Bro. Featherstun said "well done"), and they heard me gladly. Here, again, we were with friends of former years. This little city has grown steadily and surely, notwithstanding the argument (?) made eight years ago that prohibition would kill it. Where were vacant lots there are now large mercantile establishments. Wooden buildings have been replaced with brick, three large brick churches have been built, a magnificent brick public school-building, an imposing two-story temple by the Knights of Pythias. Where was a cotton field producing a bale to the acre is now the "Lintonia Annex," a little city of itself, and new houses going up all the time. Not a vacant store or dwelling, not a business hurt, and an increase of twenty-five per cent. in population, tells the story of the eight years' reign of prohibition. During two days I saw not a drunken man.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. R. H. WYNN.

Prayer Meeting Topic for September.

THE ENEMIES OF CHRIST.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 6—(TEMPERANCE LESSON)—THE ENEMIES THROUGH PASSION AND APPETITE: (Matt. viii, 28, 29; xxvi, 67-74; xxvii, 28-31; Luke xv, 13.)

I.—THOSE POSSESSED BY EVIL SPIRITS.

The powers of hell were manifest in unusual ways when Christ was upon the earth, as if to counteract the displays of heavenly power that attended Christ's appearance. As if in mock anticipation of the work which Christ was to do in dwelling within man's soul, to bring all of its disordered elements into harmony, the evil spirits of hell took visible possession of certain ones, and wrought wreck and ruin upon their bodies, minds, and souls. These were expressions of the hatred of Christ's arch-enemy, Satan, or "the god of this world." But in every case where these evil spirits were in Christ's immediate presence, there was a recognition by them of a superior power, and, in the case of the Gergesene demoniacs, there is a cry of terror and a plea for mercy. They are always powerless to resist when Christ commands them to depart, and these miracles of casting out devils and of restoring their victims to health of body and sanity of mind, furnish striking visible proofs of his power to "destroy the works of the devil." Christ has power to drive out from the hearts of sinners the devil of sinful passion and appetite. Notwithstanding the great power of diseased appetite over man's will and intellect, yet it is inferior to the power of the Savior, who is willing at any time to respond with his help.

II.—THE JEWISH COUNCIL AND THE ROMAN SOLDIERY.

Our second reference presents one of the most disgraceful scenes ever enacted. The intense hatred of the Jewish elders towards Christ has burst into an uncontrollable flame of passion, and the dignified council chamber is the scene of brutal and cowardly insult. A mock trial of Christ was held in the presence of Caiaphas, and a desperate effort was made to prove certain charges against him, but without success. Finally Christ, in answer to the high-priest's question, acknowledged himself as the Son of God, and claimed further to be the judge of man. The high-priest rent his clothes in holy horror, and declared that witnesses were no longer necessary. He was at once adjudged guilty of blasphemy, and worthy of death. Then follows the scene of disgrace. The elders spit in his face, strike him with their fists, slap him with their hands, and taunt him concerning his divine claims by blindfolding him, striking him, and calling upon him to prophesy as to who had struck him. This scene marks the official rejection of Christ's claims by the Jewish nation, through its representative body. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." The third reference presents another disgraceful scene, but this time it is Pilate's soldiery, and they act under orders from superior authority, as they carry out the hellish work of cruelly scourging and crucifying Christ.

III.—THE INTEMPERATE PRODIGAL.

The touching parable of the son who "wasted his substance with riotous living" in a far country is familiar. Every individual sinner, no matter in what direction his unsubdued sinful nature leads him, is an enemy of Christ, but may be reconciled by divine grace.

Bluff Creek Camp Meeting.

The grounds face a running streamlet, from which it obtains its name. A five-hundred-dollar tabernacle occupies a central position in a hollow square of thirty-four tents. The area consists of ninety-eight acres enclosed, and two acres open land. A drove well furnishes sparkling, healthful waters for man and beast. A season ticket costs twenty-five cents, and fifteen hundred and three were registered on the books. Children under ten years have access free of charge.

An incorporated Board of Trustees has the following personnel: T. D. Lipscomb, president, Capt. T. D. Lindsey, W. F. Pipkin, W. W. Warren, A. N. Brown, E. Watson, W. L. Haney, O. E. Townsend and J. Yarborough. The business tact and energy of these gentlemen have met all indebtedness and it stands free of financial embarrassment.

It may shock the unthinking to relate that the regular ministry held the best meeting ever known in that section. The evangelist was "conspicuous by its absence." Instead of sending off for an evangelist to send off for the Lord, kneeling on the promises, we sent for him immediately. Revs. R. W. Tucker, C. W. Carter, D. D.; C. C. Miller, F. D. Van Valkenburgh, T. L. Luster, J. P. Haney, N. J. Roberts, Harvill and Montgomery did as forceful, spiritual preaching as the most critical could desire. Bro. Crisler, of Whitworth College, was a tower of strength at the altar and in the pulpit. What power lies dormant in the beloved laymen, if only they shut up in their hearts the tongue of fire, kindling their souls into a burning passion for souls and for God! The consecrated women worked with an enthusiasm born of the Holy Spirit. The brush-wood meetings were clothed with remarkable reclaiming and regenerating energy.

The rivalry that culminates in a preaching match gave place to earnest, deep-hearted sword thrusts at sin, and the slain of the Lord number 108 souls. Quite a number of these were church members below the conversion point, but the Spirit strangely warmed them up to the working point. A sinner, giving his impression of its scenes, said: "Gentlemen, those men are terribly in earnest. If it was necessary, they would crawl over an acre of mud on their hands and knees to get a chance to pray with you."

Whole families were converted, and such scenes of reconciliation between bitter foes, and joy-lit faces beamed forth the grace light, tears mingling with praises, and the whole atmosphere was tremulous with the sounds of happy voices. One brother, describing his feelings, said: "It was like dough in a pan. It rises until it flows over the sides, and I have something in my breast like dough, and if it keeps a swelling I will bust."

The choir, conducted by the efficient Bro. Wm. McLean, did much to add to the attractiveness and spirituality of the services. My heart is full because "my spirit doth rejoice in God my Savior." H. W. RICKEY.

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling combination dippers that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some I read about, but I never make less than $3, and often $5 a day. The dipper can be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper; a flour strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick-room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses make the dipper such a necessary article that it sells at nearly every house, as it is so cheap. You can get a sample by sending, as I did, 15 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburgh, Pa., and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Anyone can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere. A READER.

I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. THE BOY WHO EXCELS.

BY EMILY F. MORTON.

There is room in this world for the boy who excels
In each task he is given to do;
For, though difficulties arise in his path,
He can always find his way through.

When at school or at play, or when doing the chores,
He will earnestly strive to excel;
For whatever's worth doing, says this little man,
It certainly worth doing well.

Now, boys, if to fame and success you aspire,
You have a long ladder to climb:
The goal's at the top, and to reach it you'll find
You must climb just one step at a time.

You see at the foot of the ladder
There are myriads still on the ground,
Desiring to climb, but not willing
To patiently go round by round.

Outstrip them, brave boy; and start upward,
With the top of the ladder in view,
Determined you'll make such an effort
No other boy can excel you.

If thus truly and bravely you triumph
The whole of your life's journey through,
You'll find when you finish the battle,
A reserve seat in heaven for you
—Youth's Advocate.

A Man in a Passion Rides a Horse That Runs Away with Him.

When passion has run away with a man, who knows where it may carry him? Once let a rider lose power over his horse, and he may go over hedge and ditch, and end in a tumble into the stone-quarry and a broken neck. No one can tell in cold blood what he may do when he gets angry; therefore it is best to run no risks. Those who feel their temper rising will be wise if they rise themselves and walk off to the pump. Let them fill their mouths with cold water, hold it there ten minutes at least, and then go indoors, and keep there until they feel as cool as a cucumber. If you carry loose gunpowder in your pocket, you had better not go where sparks are flying; and if you are bothered with an irritable nature you should move off when folks begin teasing you. Better keep out of a quarrel than fight your way through it.

Nothing is improved by anger, unless it be the arch of a cat's back. A man with his back up is spoiling his figure. People look none the handsomer for being red in the face. It takes a great deal out of a man to get into a towering rage; it is almost as unhealthy as having a fit, and time has been when men have actually choked themselves with passion, and died on the spot. Whatever wrong I suffer it can not do me half so much hurt as being angry about it; for passion shortens life and poisons peace.

When once we give way to temper, temper will claim a right of way, and come in easier every time. He that will be in a pet for any little thing will soon be out at elbows about nothing at all. A thunder-storm curdles the milk, and so does a passion sour the heart and spoil the character.—Spurgeon.

The Evil of Carelessness.

The children had been put to bed. I had finished my evening paper. My tired wife, who had been picking up and putting to rights the many articles which the children had left strewn about, came and sat down beside me. With a weary sigh she said, "Do you not think churches and parents should look upon carelessness as they do upon falsehood and theft?"

"That, dear wife," I replied, "would be a rather severe view to take of it. There is usually no wrong intent on the part of the careless person."

"Nevertheless," argued my wife, "their act entails labor and loss to others, which they have no right to impose. When you stop to think of it, how much more is broken or lost through carelessness in a household than is stolen, and think of the many weary steps some one must take to put in order what has been carelessly left in disorder!"

"You are tired, to-night, dear," I said, "your judgment is a little harsh. Children at least have some excuse; for they are so forgetful, you know."

"And why," she asked, "can they remember that it is wrong to steal or to lie, and yet forget that their carelessness causes the burdens of others to be needlessly increased? It is because we weakly say, 'Oh, they didn't mean to,' or 'They didn't think.' If we treated lying or stealing as leniently as we do carelessness, I shudder to think what society would become. No; if teachers and parents would find as few excuses for carelessness as they do for some other sins, it could be as effectually stamped out as have been the others."

I was about to reply that children outgrew this fault as soon as they realized what a fruitful source of trouble it was, when I remembered how this failing still clung to me, and caused others vexation and loss. So I remained silent.

"It is better," resumed my wife, "for the children themselves that this selfish habit should be broken up. I remember listening, when a little girl, to a children's sermon by our old pastor. One sentence alone I carried away with me; it was this: 'Remember, children, that what we neglect to do, tired hands will have to do.' I have never forgotten it, and by bearing it constantly in mind I overcame a naturally careless and thoughtless disposition. I have been happier in consequence."

"Yes," thought I, "how happy you made your father's home, and how happy you have made mine, by your unselfish spirit!" And kissing the tired little woman good night, I resolved to request our minister to preach from the text, "Remember, what we neglect to do, tired hands will have to do," and to have these words painted and framed and hung in our sitting-room.

I know of other households with tired mothers where these words might bring a blessing. Do you?—A. R. M., in N. E. Farmer.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

An Unwelcome Visitor.

A merchant sat at his office desk. Various letters were spread before him. His whole being was absorbed in the intricacies of his business.

A zealous friend of religion entered the office. "I want to interest you a little in a new effort for the cause of Christ," said the good man.

"Sir, you must excuse me," replied the merchant, "I'm too busy to attend to that subject now."

"But, sir, inquiry is on the increase among us," said his friend.

"Is it? I'm sorry, but I'm too busy at present to do anything."

"When shall I call again, sir?"

"I can not tell. I'm very busy. I'm busy every day. Excuse me, sir; I wish you good morning."

Then, bowing the intruder out of his office, he resumed the study of his papers.

The merchant had frequently repulsed the friends of humanity in this manner. No matter what the object, he was always too busy to listen to their claims. He had even told his minister that he was too busy for anything but to make money.

But one morning a disagreeable stranger stepped very softly to his side, laying a cold, moist hand upon his brow, and saying, "Go home with me!"

The merchant laid down his pen; his head grew dizzy; his stomach felt faint and sick; he left the counting room, went home, and retired to his bedchamber.

His unwelcome visitor had followed him, and now took his place by the bedside, whispering, ever and anon, "You must go with me."

Humanity, mercy, and religion had alike begged his influence, means and attention in vain; but when death came he was powerless—he was compelled to have leisure to die.

Let us beware how we make ourselves too busy to secure life's great end. When the excuse rises to our lips, and we are about to say we are too busy to do good, let us remember we can not be too busy to die.—Christian Worker.

Needless Candor.

"One of the hardest questions to decide," spoke meditatively the observing woman, "is how far one is justified in telling the truth."

"That is easy enough," replied the careless young person, as if it were a conundrum. "Always tell the truth, of course."

"I won't ask whether you always speak it yourself," coolly remarked the observer, "but I would like to ask you to recall the most unpleasant and least popular woman you ever met, and tell me if she was not a woman who prided herself upon always telling people her opinion of them and their doings, and of saying exactly what she thought upon every subject under heaven, without any regard for other folks' prejudices or feelings."

"Why—I don't know—yes!" slowly.

"The queer part is," went on the observer, "the self-elected truth teller is feared always, not loved. Why is this? She thinks it is because she is a martyr to the cause of truth and pride herself still more on her virtue and consequent martyrdom. Is that so? She grows more and more aggressive. She takes a fierce joy in speaking the cruelest truths to the natures least fitted to bear them. She triumphs in the 'candor' and 'courage' which enable her to do it. It is a great pity."

"What is your opinion about it?" curiously from the careless young person.

There is a rare tact in speaking the truth in love, never wielding it in such a way that it can do harm or crush some sensitive soul. Nor is it necessarily always right to speak at all. There are virtuous reserves.

One may be silent if one has nothing kind to say. The haste to tell every little bit of gossip, every unfortunate or hasty speech a friend has ever uttered, is not induced by candor, but by pure malevolence.—Harper's Bazar.

HYGIENE.

Dietetic Hints.

"Why is it that the hot weather affects me so much more than it does so-and-so?" Simply because your stomach is the place where the fuel is applied which keeps the machinery of the human body in motion. If you bank up the fires with loads of fuel you must expect a corresponding heat, while if you use fuel sparingly, choosing that which is almost non-combustible, the heating power is decreased and some degree of comfort is obtained.

The Almighty, when he planned the universe and appointed the seasons, made provision for the proper dieting of his people. He knew that in the hot seasons cool fruit and crisp green vegetables would best serve the purpose of health giving, and health keeping; therefore, he made strawberries, cherries, currants, to ripen in June and July, instead of at Christmas. Man, who is continually trying to improve on the Creator's plan, may by forcing get green peas and strawberries at Christmas, but what an inferior article to that which nature gives us.

While I am not a vegetarian, I believe that life could be sustained without the use of flesh diet, and I believe that such a life would be free from many of the terrible diseases by which the human race is now ravaged. One step which could not fail to benefit mankind, would be the adoption of the Jewish idea that pork is unclean, and not fit for human food. Pork in the Winter is a dangerous thing to indulge in, and in the Summer becomes positively deadly. And yet we find plenty of people who ignore the provision made for a distinctive Summer diet, and persist in eating heavy and unseasonable foods, for which they must pay the penalty from day to day by increased physical discomfort. Of course, in a great many homes the proposition to discard flesh diet altogether in the Summer would meet with instant and overwhelming opposition. But good judgment can regulate matters so that no such stringent measures are needed. A little meat judiciously chosen, with its ill effects counteracted by the accompanying cooling fruits and vegetables, may be conceded. Light soups, from which all grease has been carefully removed, lean broiled chops and steaks, not too highly seasoned, fish, etc., are there to choose from, the essential part in their preparation being the use and retention of as little grease as possible. High seasonings must be tabooed in hot weather also.

Some people find it very hard to get along without coffee, but if they can manage to dispense with it during hot weather they will be rewarded by increased physical comfort. In any event the indulgence should be limited to one cup a day during the Summer. Tea is not as heating as coffee; indeed, I have known people to drink hot tea in preference to cold lemonade on a warm day, declaring that "it sweated the heat out." But I would not advise a hot drink of any kind at the noon lunch or dinner.

I think, too, that it is advisable in the hot days to have a very light meal in the middle of the day if possible. In some households this arrangement for various reasons can not be made, but in others, I would advise it, even at the cost of a little inconvenience. To load up the stomach with a hearty meal just when one is going to face the worst heat of the day, working hard perhaps, is not good policy. A late dinner, that is, a six o'clock meal, when the day's labor is over, is not so apt to prove an inconvenience, and there is usually more leisure for enjoying it and digesting it afterwards.—Helen Combes, in New York Observer.

OBITUARIES.

LLOYD—Bro I. O. LLOYD, son of William and Serena Lloyd, was born in Copiah county, Miss., Dec. 6, 1844. At the age of fourteen years he professed religion while a student in Oakland College, and soon thereafter joined the M. E. Church, South. From that time to the date of his death there has never been a break in his relation to the church of his choice, and for sixteen years he has been a faithful and painstaking steward. The writer has twice been his presiding elder, and during this time never knew him to suggest or assent to the lowering of his pastor's salary, nor found him justifying a failure to pay the assessment. True to every trust imposed, there is no surprise that the Burtonton Church, where he publicly gave his young life to his Lord, and spent the days of his active service, always delighted to honor him, and now deeply deplore his going from them.

On the sixth day of December, 1865, he was married to Miss Emma Baldwin, to whom, and to the children God gave them, he was most tenderly devoted in thought and in effort to the hour of his death, which occurred on the eighth day of February, 1896. While he will be greatly missed by the ministry, the church, and the community, the supreme loss will be felt in the home so sadly afflicted by the death of husband and father. May the hand of "our Father" safely lead these sorrowing ones to that haven of rest where he waits and watches for their coming!

J. M. WEEMS.

LEE—A dark cloud overshadowed our entire community on last Tuesday morning when the news was flashed around that little Gertie Lee was very ill, and there was no hope for her recovery. Everything was done that medical skill, the attention of friends, and the love and devotion of parents and relatives could do for her relief, but it was all of no avail. God had laid his hand upon her, and said, "Come up higher." She suffered the most excruciating pain—membranous croup having claimed her as its victim—until the end came Wednesday morning at eleven o'clock. She was the idol of her parents, being unusually bright.

On Sunday previous to her demise her parents consecrated her to the Lord by having her baptized, little thinking that our heavenly father would so soon call her from the church militant to the church triumphant. Lora Gertrude died Aug. 5, 1896, aged one year and eleven months.

God has only transplanted the little life in a Summer clime, and, as he welcomes the little ones among the angels, may he comfort the sorrowing ones and draw them nearer heaven.

"Your dear little babe, so tender and sweet,
Will be tenderly cared for till next you meet;
Pillowed so sweetly on Jesus' breast,
Gertie awaits the coming of the rest."

B. W. LAWIS.

Fair River, Miss., Aug 11, 1896.

NICHOLLS—The subject of this memoir was of that class of whom the Savior said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," for REGINALD HARTWELL NICHOLLS was a bright-eyed, sweet-toned child of three years. He was the son of W. B and Mrs. Carrie B. Nicholls; born July 5, 1893, and died of congestion, at Coldwater, Miss., July 23, 1896.

Although his illness was very brief, little "Reg" was a great sufferer. His death was quite a shock, both to the family and friends, for the silent messenger came unexpectedly. He was sick but a few days, and the symptoms were not considered alarming until a few hours before the end. But the summons came, and the precious child went home to Jesus. "Reg" was a sweet and handsome child, the light and joy of the home; but God takes the brightest and fairest flowers to transplant in the garden of the skies. If the bud was so beautiful here, what must be the beauty of the full-blown flower there? Heaven and the angels have gained what for the time the stricken parents have lost. He can not return to you, but you can go to him. May God, by his gracious touch, fit you for eternal companionship with himself and loved ones gone before!

H. T. CUNNINGHAM.

Coldwater, Miss.

WILSON—Mrs. JANE E., widow of the late Robert Wilson, of Vicksburg, Miss., and daughter of John and Annie Ferguson, was born in Warren county, Miss., Oct. 9, 1819, and died on July 22, 1896, in the sixty-seventh year of her life. She became a member of the Methodist Church in very early life, and the morning and evening of her womanhood were devoted and consecrated to the cause and kingdom of our Christ. Being of a buoyant temperament, she was a bright, joyous Christian through life, and in death the spiritual triumphed. Although her death was so sudden, and such a surprise and shock to the community in which she lived, yet her devout, consecrated life evidences victory when the fatal conflict came.

To say that we miss her, and that her death is a great loss to the church of which she was a faithful member, does not express our bereavement; but we sorrow in the hope of a joyous resurrection and a reunion in heaven. While she is sleeping in the silence of God's acre her friends are cherishing the blissful hope of meeting her in the beautiful beyond. May the great Healer of our sorrows apply the balm of Gilead to the hearts of the bereft!

W. W. HURST.

KENT—Died July 31, 1896, GILES W. KENT, Jr., son of S. A. and Bettie Kent (nee Griffin), aged 7 years, 7 months and eight months.

Little Willie was a bright and promising child, of prominent features, and it was proverbial that he was exceptionally intelligent for one so very young. A precious jewel, the hope and joy of his father, the heart's fond treasure of his loving mother, and affectionately loved by all who knew him, it was a heavy stroke of sorrow to the doting parents, for in him were centered all their hopes and aspirations for the future. Oh, who can realize the painful, ineffable anguish ruthlessly lacerating the tender heart-strings of young parents save those who have passed through similar crucial ordeals? Weep not, dear parents; he can not come to you, but you can go to him. Your little gem, the jewel and treasure so precious to your hearts, is now clear of the coming evils of this world, and is among the beautiful, shining angels of the "Father's mansions."

"Hark! the golden harps are ringing,
Sounds unearthly fill the ear;
Millions now in heaven singing,
Greet his joyful entrance there."

GRANDPA.

BISHOP—Died at Conshatta, Newton county, Miss., Sept. 24, 1895, of typhoid fever, Miss BETTIE BISHOP, youngest and only single daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Bishop. She was born at the same place March 25, 1862; joined the M. E. Church, South, in the Summer of 1883. She was a consecrated Christian, and devoted to her church. During her last illness, which lasted eight weeks, I visited her often. She was always so glad to see me, and have me sing and pray for her. She would always thank me with tears in her eyes, and say she enjoyed it so much. She bore her suffering with Christian fortitude. She expressed herself as willing to go or stay, just as God willed it.

Just one year ago these loving parents had to give up a devoted Christian son. Miss Bettie's death was especially sad to her mother. No one only those who knew the devotion of this mother and daughter—can appreciate or understand the sorrow of that mother's heart. But God's grace was sufficient for her. Her aged father and several devoted brothers, as well as many friends, were deeply grieved. But we do not grieve as those that have no hope. We submit reverently to our loving and merciful heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

W. M. WILLIAMS, P. C.

Decatur, Miss.

WATSON—Mrs. FRANCES C. WATSON died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. E. Ward, Ellisville, Miss., May 31, 1896. She was born Aug. 16, 1810, and was married to Mr. C. L. Watson, April 28, 1836, who preceded her to the better world. In childhood she gave her heart to Christ, and joined the Methodist Church, of which she was a faithful member until death removed her to the church triumphant. Her character was not marked by any one conspicuous, overshadowing excellency, but by the blending of many, so that there was symmetry in her life. There was in her the grace of proportion. Her religion was not a garment worn, but an influence absorbed, and the result was that her life was uniform rather than luminous. She was true in every relation of life. Six children survive her—four daughters and two sons. Our prayer for them is that they may follow their dear mother as she followed Christ.

F. M. K.

WELLS—MARGARET ADALINE, only child of W. R. and Mariah Wells, died at Union, Newton county, Miss., Aug. 9, 1896; born Jan 29, 1894.

Little Addie's death was peculiarly sad. She was unusually bright for a child of her age. She was the pet of parents and grandparents.

About three years ago these parents lost their little Hayden, who was about the same age as little Addie when she left them. This new sorrow brings the old sorrow anew to their hearts, but they are trusting in Him who said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

W. M. WILLIAMS, P. C.

UPTON—The following resolutions of respect and love were adopted on the death of Mrs. L. L. UPTON:

Whereas, it has pleased God, in his inscrutable wisdom, to remove from our midst our beloved sister, Mrs. L. L. Upton, president of the W. C. T. U. of Rayville; therefore, in a special meeting of that body, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our president the cause of temperance has lost one of its most zealous workers, and the church a faithful member and a living example of the truths of the Christian religion.

Resolved, That the cause of education has suffered a severe loss. Her chosen profession being that of a teacher, she labored not alone to cultivate the mind, but to instruct those committed to her care in a knowledge of the higher and grander duties and responsibilities of life.

Resolved, That our community has lost one whose rare excellence of character made her the favorite of all who knew her.

Resolved, That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family in their great bereavement, and pray that their loss may be sanctified to their spiritual and eternal welfare.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family, and also published in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Richland Democrat.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

The New Hook Spoon Free to All.

I read in the Christian Standard the Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A., St. Louis, Mo., would give an elegant plated hook spoon to anyone sending her ten 2-cent stamps. I sent for one and found it so useful that I showed it to my friends, and made $18.00 in two hours, taking orders for the spoon. The hook spoon is a household necessity. It can not slip into the dish or cooking vessel, being held in the place by a hook on the back. The spoon is something that housekeepers have needed ever since spoons were first invented. Anyone can get a sample spoon by sending ten 2-cent stamps to Miss Fritz. This is a splendid way to make money around home.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Mr. Bryan visited a county fair in New York State, on Aug. 28, and made a speech to 15,000 people.

President Cleveland came to New York, on Aug. 29, to receive Li Hung Chang and exchange greetings.

A committee from the Republican National League visited McKinley at his home in Canton, O., on Aug. 28, and be addressed them. Delegations are calling on him frequently.

The city of Canton, Col., has extended the time in which the young folks may perambulate the streets. Hereafter the curfew bell will ring at 10 o'clock instead of 9 on Saturday night.

Thomas B Ballentine expended $75,000 in founding a home for the aged at Norfolk, Va., and then met with the extreme disappointment of being unable to find ten worthy persons in the city who were willing to enter it.

Li Hung Chang was received in New York, on Aug. 29, with great honor. Eleven of the new warships of the U. S. navy took part in the reception. Gen. Ruger, U. S. Army, received the distinguished Chinese in the name of the President.

The "Sound Money" Democrats held a convention in this city on Aug. 27. Delegates to the convention at Indianapolis, on Sept. 2, were chosen. Senator Don Caffery, the chairman of the convention, has received a telegram stating that he had been chosen permanent chairman of the Indianapolis convention.

FOREIGN.

The Canadian government has introduced the eight-hour system in all offices and works under its control.

Glasgow's underground railroad is now running. Trains pass over seven miles, making twelve steps, in twenty-eight minutes, and the ventilation is good.

Great Britain has another small difficulty on her hands. It appears that the Sultan of Zanzibar has recently died, and that a certain Said Khalid, being desirous of securing the succession for himself, took possession of the royal palace and proclaimed himself Sultan. Acting under instructions from London, the commander of the English naval forces bombarded the palace, and in less than an hour it was in ruins. Said Khalid and his leading followers took refuge at the German consulate. The Island of Zanzibar and certain other tributary territory form a British protectorate. The Sultan is merely the nominal ruler, the administration of affairs, as well as the collection of the revenue, being in the hands of a British resident.

Butter Making—How to Churn in Two Minutes—Making Money Easy.

ONLY THOSE WHO HAVE CHURNED BUTTER for an hour and a half on a warm day know how hard work it is to make butter and everyone will be delighted with the news that a machine is now made by The Queen Butter Maker Co., of Cincinnati, by which butter can be made in from two to five minutes. Anybody can sell 5 a day and make $150 a month. The machine is made small enough so that any farmer churning from two to five gallons can use the churn. Anyone who wants to make money should secure the agency for the Butter Maker. M. T. Hiner, Columbus, made butter in two minutes before six farmers and sold five on the spot, making $12.50 in half an hour. Easy to make money. The Queen Butter Maker Co., 29 East Third Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, will send circulars to anybody that may desire to know about the Machine. Anyone who is looking for something on which they can easily make a good salary should secure one of these machines, and see how easily they can be sold. Every farmer will buy one.

Richmond, Va., has recently made a report of its experiment in the way of municipal gas works. It is claimed that the citizens have been supplied with gas at 25 per cent. less than is paid in New York. The actual cost of manufacture was 70 cents per thousand feet.

A Rare Chance to Make Money!

I am convinced that anyone that will hustle, can make from $10 to $15 a day selling Climax Dish Washers. They give such good satisfaction that every family wants one. You can wash and dry the dishes in two minutes, without danger of breaking dishes or without wetting the hands. In the past six months I have cleared over $20 a day without canvassing any; people either come or send for Washers, and my trade is increasing all the time. This business is equally good in country, town or city, and any lady or man can make money anywhere if they will only try. After careful examination I find the Climax decidedly the best Dish Washer made. The Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio, will give you full instructions. Go to work at once and let us hear how you succeed. It is certainly our duty to inform each other of these golden opportunities. A READER.

Hair Restored to Natural Color.

I have used many preparations for restoring hair to natural color, but never had satisfactory results till I used Zulu Vniler; it will restore any hair or beard to its natural color in three weeks. If it does not they reinra your money, so you take no risk. People who have never tried it can get a sample package which contains enough to restore any one's hair to natural color, by sending 21 two-cent stamps, to pay postage, etc., to Wilson & Co., New Concord, Ohio.

The regular price is $2.50 per package. If it does not restore your hair to natural color, or make any color of hair darker in three weeks, they will return your stamps. This proposition is so fair that thousands are using it. It is harmless, but never fails. Why can't big money be made by selling Zulu Vniler from house to house?

100 Students.

Iuka Normal Institute flourished last year. Prospects are for a boom in '96 and '97. This prospect forces us to close out our primary and intermediate departments that we may accommodate a greater boarding patronage. We can receive 100 more boarders by doing this. We want this 100. Our plan is, for $80 ($40 on entrance and $40 Jan. 19, '97) to give meals, coal oil, fuel, furnished room except bed clothing, and tuition in any of our literary departments 10 months to any student who has never attended the Normal, until 100 have applied. Students who accept will board with the President.

COVERED WITH SCALES

Eczema made its appearance on my head in its worst form, and it continued spreading until my face was covered with scales and became a horrid sight. I had a fine head of hair seven years' growth, and had to sacrifice it. I was in despair. The physicians had failed even to relieve me, when one recommended CUTICURA SOAP. My father procured a set of CUTICURA REMEDIES, and in three weeks the scales left my face and the skin lost its florid hue. In six weeks I was entirely cured. My face was smooth and my complexion clearer and finer than it had ever been before.

"You are growing old," they tell us
Every year;
"You are more alone," they tell us
Every year;
You can win no more affection,
You have only recollection,
Deeper sorrow and dejection
Every year.

There come new cares and sorrows
Every year;
Darker days and darker sorrows
Every year.
The ghosts of dead loves haunt us,
The ghosts of changed friends taunt us,
And disappointments daunt us
Every year.

Too true! Life's shores are shifting
Every year;
And we are seaward drifting
Every year;
Old places changing fret us,
The living more forget us,
There are fewer to regret us
Every year.

But the truer life draws nigher
Every year;
And its morning star climbs higher
Every year.
Earth's hold on us grows slighter,
And the heavy burthen lighter,
And the dawn immortal brighter,
Every year.

Colonel Hector G. W. Barb, Packed in Ice, in Post Oak Circuit.

Let me introduce you to Colonel Hector George Washington Barb: "Among the hearers of Brother Oakhart was Colonel Hector G. W. Barb. The Colonel had honored the occasion with his presence. The Colonel gave something at the proper time. The boy who carried the hat around looked up at the slight sound, and saw the Colonel's face. The Colonel had a face. The Colonel was rich as cream, lived pretty much on cream, and ate his own cream. The Colonel was moral; could talk you an hour on pure religion; he liked to see that kind. . . . The Colonel was so kind as to express himself pleased with the sermon. . . . The Colonel was not a member of any church. Mrs. Hector G. W. Barb was of the First Church of Oakville. The Colonel, however, was, on a Sabbath morning, a regular attendant at the Methodist."

Then follows a description of the "Colonel's" costly and sumptuous home; the "Colonel's" fine horse and carriage; how the "Colonel" once had a Bishop to dinner; how "the Bishop wished so much that the 'Colonel' were a member, and thought what a tower of strength the 'Colonel' would be to the cause in those parts." "The new preacher, whoever he might be, or the new elder, when he saw on what a horse the 'Colonel' rode to church, and in what a house the 'Colonel' lived, and what a fine, tall, well-favored, dignified-looking gentleman the 'Colonel' was, usually preached right at the 'Colonel' for the first three months. The 'Colonel' would let you preach to his negroes on the plantation, or let them go to the meeting-house, as you pleased. The preachers tried preaching in the 'Colonel's' sugar-house for two years."

The pastor of Mrs. "Colonel" Barb is referred by her to the "Colonel" for her church dues. The "Colonel" replies, "My preferences are Methodistic." Further talk causes the "Colonel" to say: "Well, I am unfortunate, I confess. The First Church comes on one side, on account of Mrs. Barb, and one of the Methodist stewards on the other side, on my own account. Really, you gentlemen of the church are rather hard. You are running two saws on me. However, I suppose that I must do something. I will speak with Mrs. Barb about it."

The elder of the Methodist Church pries the "Colonel" for his church, and the reply is about the same. And there is no record that the "Colonel" ever paid a penny on either account. And there is a record that the "Colonel" had "never yet paid the missionary anything for preaching to his negroes."

That is pretty much all "Post Oak Circuit" has to say about "Colonel Hector George Washington Barb."

And yet I seem to know him well, as if I had known him long and were conversant with his life. The short description of the "Colonel," and the few remarks he makes, furnish to everyone of sensibility or imagination a vivid conception of this character. Voltaire and Junius were great masters of insinuation. So were Aristophanes (after the decree) and Juvenal. It wasn't safe to the last two to be specific. Janius, too, had to be wary, although both he and Voltaire wrote more from a penchant of style, and the pride of a masterliness of portraiture by a few features, rather than by minute description. It is superfluous to speculate why the author of "Post Oak Circuit" gives us this unique sketch of "Colonel Hector George Washington Barb." It may have been in a mere whim of resourcefulness, the sportiveness of versatile influence of style, or from what the law calls "abundantia cautillæ"—a most studious precaution. There was an occasional "Colonel" Barb in the South in that day, and it would not do to particularize him so as to leave him known to every reader. But every man old enough to have known the ante-bellum rich slave owner has met "Colonel" Barb. And I'll venture everyone of these colonels who, in his day, read "Post Oak Circuit," knew his portrait. Of course, though, he could not make a fuss about it. It silently rankled in his heart, or, maybe, he talked it over bitterly with Mrs. "Colonel" Barb. Not, of course, that every rich slave owner was a "Colonel" Barb. He was—let us be thankful—a rare bird, but a foul one.

I am thankful to the author of "Post Oak Circuit" (no matter what his reason) that I am privileged to read the "Colonel's" character between the lines, and have, measurably, the privilege of my own conception. The degree of revulsion one feels at the "Colonel" is something of a criterion of one's own character; and I flatter myself that I have a deep abhorrence (far above or below contempt) for the "Colonel," and could pile a Pelion of objurgation upon him.

And I am by no means certain that there is not meant to be conveyed a delicate compliment to both one's virtue and penetration in the pregnant reserve of the author's style. Certainly it is done with the courage and trustfulness of power. Charles Lamb happily says, "It is peculiar to the character of high genius alone to trust much to readers."

Somehow we hate the "Colonel" as we do Lovelace in Richardson's "Clarissa Harlowe," although their characters are so different. But, I mean of the way each insinuates himself into one's abhorrence, and lacerates virtue like a poison. Lovelace is rollicking, full of devil-may-care gayety and hey-day of the blood, bold, saucy, defiant of decency, the calculating, deliberate, would-be assassin of chastity. The "Colonel" is "sullen and severe without religion," pretentious without merit, rich without hospitality or liberality, ceremonious without politeness, haughty without dignity, dexterous, with a maladroit finesse of punctilo. All the more odious with his management and veneering of ceremoniousness, that saves him from common contempt and shallow observation, and which masks his substantial nothingness from profanum vulgus. It stirs a virtuous indignation to see with what dexterity he fences himself against outspoken and unreserved disgust.

Thus the author makes the "Colonel" odious to uncultured sincerity and manly downrightness and uprightness of character, and a virtue that has its deep insights by its penetrating intuitions; and he unmasks him by the brilliant indirectious of his innuendoes, and the masterly insidiousness of his dramatic satire, to the admirers of adroit and ingenious attack. To such, the "Colonel" is insinuated rather than revealed; and that by a succession of indirections of increment in disparagements, in such delicate gradations of depreciation as to be almost indiscernible in intensification. Read over the adroitness with which he fritters away the "Colonel's" principal claim to consequence by everlasting repetition of his title; making the latter a lash upon the bare back of his pretentiousness in the resounding laceration of the curt periods. See the mereiless irony, the sly and mocking affectation of ceremoniousness of the iteration of "Colonel" until its shallowness of consequence becomes emphatic by our own revulsion at its odious intrusiveness. And mark the dire ambiguity of that awful sentence: "The 'Colonel' had a face!" What does it mean, or, rather not mean? Does it mean, in withering scorn, that being a human being, of course he had that common mark of a man? Or that it meant and "such a face?" Where was such a tablet written in the ineffaceable traits of his dark, indescribable character? Does it mean he had a face, but not a heart, in the common meaning of manly and virtuous figurativeness? A man so characterized must feel like one who has taken poison consciously, but knows not what kind nor how much, and knows not what antidote to take; and is in horrible suspense, awaiting death.

And death the "Colonel" has met at the author's hand. Frozen in the placid frigidity of the author's fatal periods.

In the Living Present.

Monte Carlo, the monster gambling establishment, realized last year a gain of fifty million francs. Five million francs were set aside as a so-called reptile fund for press comment. One-half of that amount was paid to leading Paris papers. They are thus required to laud the personages present, the scenery, concerts, etc., and ignore daily losses and suicides. Apropos, does the daily press advocate or denounce public measures from honest motives, or is it influenced by a money consideration? Think for yourself!

Receiving trashy literature by mail a daily occurrence. The publishers expect subsequent orders. The law does not prevent it, since said publications are not absolutely immoral. How to save ourselves from such deluge? Yes, we can refuse to receive same. But contents may be perused by inmates of the house before the landlord is aware of arrival of said publications. In Berlin two publishers were fined for sending books and papers to parties who had not previously ordered the same.

The Methodist Times, of London, advocates open-air preaching, in public squares, at market-places, etc. Most momentous movements had their origin in open-air meetings. Refers to Mohammed, Peter the Hermit, Wesley, etc. The Salvation Army owes its success to this method. Burns, the eloquent English socialist, however obnoxious his doctrine, had acquired his oratorical fluency by speaking much in the open air.

At every age of his life man has his toys, says the proverb. In Paris there are two large tailoring establishments for exclusive manufacture of dog-toilet. Orders come from every part of the world. Many from America. At the establishment we find costly dog-garments, some decorated with precious stones. Sad that so many of little sense should have so much money.

Russian papers discuss the question "if women are greater liars than men." Of course, the question admits naively that all, men and women, are liars. The question is simply one of comparison. An Italian savant answers above question in the affirmative. Now a Russian lady agrees with the Italian, but holds, according to the Novoya Vremya, that women lie from noble principle. Love usually endites the lies. Men lie, though less than women, from motives of avarice and vengeance.

The Brooklyn Eagle is not unjustly severe on most of our writers. Even our so-called religious novels are love stories. Says the Eagle: "The quickest way to get into print is to write a book that is not thoughtful, not true, not careful, but that has a ghastly and girlish love story."

A Protestant minister in Rome was arrested because he posted himself at the entrance of a Roman Catholic Church, distributing invitations to come to a Methodist meeting that night. Trustees and priest requested him to go to another place. Refusing, the police took him in charge. Zealotism is not Christianity.

Notes by the Way.

After leaving Topisaw, I hoped to have put in a day or so at Providence, but, owing to the failure of the previously announced evangelist to put in his appearance, and the consequent absence of neighboring pastors, this meeting, I learned, came to a speedy close on Wednesday.

On my way I was overhauled by Pastor Burton at Crystal Springs with an appeal for help until the coming of the delayed evangelist, who could not get in for two days. Yielding to his call, I stopped over at that historic place for two services. A previous engagement forbade further delay. I left Pastor Burton all alone, save the presence of Bro. George Morrison. I noted with sorrow the change as compared with the days of Johnson, Linfield, Heard, and other giants in their time, when from the first service the Word of God was preached with power and demonstration of the Spirit, and happy shouts went up from the altars. Evangelist Steward came, and we learn that a grand meeting was the result of his work. We know and love George Steward. He is a man of God, and moves the people as few men can; yet we are driven to the conclusion that the evangelistic movement has worked to our hurt at two points: the training our people to rely too much on the evangelist, thereby discounting the regular ministry; and the causing of our pastors to remain away from these feasts of tabernacles. I do not believe the work done under the present regime is as lasting or more extensive than in former days when pastors and people met together to work for the Master's cause.

Our longest stay was at "Sam Jones," where we had promised to meet with the brethren, and where, with six or eight preachers, all from adjoining works save two or three, we enjoyed a season of refreshing hearing good sermons, excellent singing, and witnessing some interest in the work of salvation. The congregations at this point were smaller than at any place where we have gone. In some particulars Sam Jones is equaled by none of the encampments of my knowledge. The unity of the Spirit might do something towards developing that point such as can not be done by all the preachers and evangelists combined. The rules forbade the taking of a collection, yet $20 were added to the Scienco Hall fund, making for the Natchez district a showing second to none except the Vicksburg, which still leads all others, and Wesley Chapel, on the Warren circuit, which leads the Vicksburg district.

My observations lead me to say that South and East Mississippi have suffered less from the protracted drouth, and have a prospect for a fair yield of both corn and cotton.

A day at Lake found the work at the camp ground under fine headway, with Little (?) Joe Nicholson and George Anders mustering the forces.

From Lako I went to Meridian to attend the Meridian District Conference, which met in West End Church on Thursday, Aug. 27. In the absence of a Bishop we found Presiding Elder Jones directing the affairs just as well as if he had been formally exalted to that office. We were sorry to find so few laymen in attendance, not more than twenty-five per cent. being present. The financial reports were not encouraging, though the brethren had great hopes in the early moving of the cotton crop. We hope to do better for our Science Hall fund later on in those parts. Three most pleasant days were spent meeting old friends. Our home was in the delightful family of Bro. C. R. McQueen. The son of a Methodist preacher, he delights to make the weary itinerant entirely at home under his roof. Wise in the choice of one to share his fortunes, his thoughtful wife knows exactly how to arrange the prophet's chamber for comfort and convenience. May Elisha's God ever remember the precious little ones of that home!

At the Lake Camp Ground I found our aged Sister Dillehay like Anna of old—happy in the service of the altar. Age is telling unmistakably on her, but she rejoices in hope of a brighter immortality.

Meridian District.

Meridian District Conference convened at West End, Meridian, Thursday, Aug. 27, at 10 A. M., and adjourned on Saturday, the twenty-ninth, at five P. M., R. J. Jones, P. E., presiding throughout the entire session. Preachers, with a single exception (and that unavoidable), were all in attendance. Lay delegates were not only present at roll-call, but seemed interested during each session. Disciplinary routine was carefully followed, and full scope was given for the discussion and probing into of the various subjects.

The presiding officer deemed upon the whole the spiritual interests of the district somewhat advanced. Special stress was made upon the religious exercises, and much of each day was devoted to them.

Among the resolutions which were offered and adopted we note the following, viz.:

DISTRICT EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Resolved, That the District Conference authorize the presiding elder to appoint a committee of five, who shall select time, place, and arrange programme for a District Epworth League Conference.

LOCAL AID SOCIETIES.

Resolved, That, as a District Conference, we strongly urge all local aid societies to be changed to Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Societies.

Rev. T. B. Holloman, agent of Millsaps College, was present, and took part in all discussions. Collection for college was only $12.35; but he felt sure of an increase.

Prof. J. W. Beeson, of E. M. F. College, made a terse, practical statement of the condition of that institution, and spoke confidently of its great future.

The following was unanimously adopted:

We recognize with pleasure and marked appreciation the decidedly successful outlook of East Mississippi Female College under the management of Prof. J. W. Beeson, president. We note the improvements in buildings, both as to interior and exterior.

Resolved, That, as a District Conference, we indorse the action of the Board of Trustees of E. M. F. College in the election of Prof. J. W. Beeson for a term of years.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to see that the free scholarship in each presiding elder's district shall be filled with girls of real merit.

Resolved, That, as preachers and laymen, we pledge him our continued prayerful and cordial support.

The following were elected as delegates to Annual Conference: T. B. Bell, L. P. Brown, D. S. Harmon and S. S. Cope. Alternates—S. B. Watts, W. H. Ormond.

J. A. Moore passed an approved examination, and was unanimously recommended to Annual Conference for admission on trial. W. W. Holmes, of DeKalb circuit, was granted license to preach by a unanimous vote.

The licenses of the following local preachers were renewed: H. J. Moore, North Kemper circuit; James Johnson (Indian), Lynwood and Indian Mission circuit; J. F. Combs, East End, Meridian; L. B. Moore, Binnsville circuit; F. L. Crowsen, Binnsville circuit; J. A. Moore, Chunky circuit; R. L. Blank, Chunky circuit.

Binnsville was selected as the place for the holding of the next District Conference.

The various Methodist pulpits in the city were to be filled on Sunday by some of the visiting preachers.

Conference closed its session with prayer and benediction.

L. P. BROWN, Sec.

Water Valley Camp Meeting.

The Water Valley Camp Meeting closed yesterday (Friday) morning after eight days of earnest, successful effort. The preaching was clear, scriptural, strong and powerful. There was no effort at display, but an ardent desire to save sinners. The three pastors—Bowen, Clifford, Braswell—and the presiding elder were assisted in the preaching by Bros. Dorman, Lester and Lewis. From start to finish there was not a dull service; it was good, better and best. The oldest tent-holders present were unanimous in the statement that it was equal to the best ever held on that sacred spot. Now, for some of the visible results. Many backslidden and lukewarm Christians were reclaimed and renewed their allegiance to the Lord. Seventy-five were happily saved from sin. They came to the altar, knelt in the straw, cried for mercy and praised the Lord for salvation. Forty-five joined the different churches in and around the city—mostly our own church. Good order, characterized as perfect, prevailed from first to last. Many family altars were erected—in some instances, good women pledged themselves to lead in the devotions. Money was raised on the ground to inclose same with neat wire fence. A fresh interest amounting to real enthusiasm was manifested. Old tents are to be rebuilt and new ones erected until there is hardly a vacant lot left. This tidal wave of glory, I am sure, will not stop until the shores of eternity are reached. Amen!

H. C. MOREHEAD.

Opening Sermon

At Whitworth College will be preached on Sunday, Sept. 13, at 11 A. M., by Rev. T. L. Mellen.

It looks now as though we would open with 100 boarders. We have exhausted our supply of catalogues. If any of our friends have catalogues for this year unused, we would gladly pay the postage to have them returned.

The improvements now being made in Johnson Hall make it one of the most desirable college homes in Mississippi. At $125 for ten months (board, washing and tuition) we ought to add 50 more boarding pupils by Oct. 1.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS, Pres.

E. M. F. College.

We are very anxious to have all our boarders here at the opening of school, Sept. 16. If they can come the fifteenth, so much the better. They can then have a better selection of rooms and room-mates. The rooms are being engaged rapidly. The probability is that the college will be filled to its utmost capacity. The outlook was never brighter.

ADVERT.

Every day its toll.
Every life its mission;
Now we till the soil—
Afterward, fruition.

Everything its time,
Every work its season;
And in ways sublime
God will tell his reason

Every eye its tear,
Every back its burden;
Tribulation here—
Peace in Christ our guerdon.

Every day its night,
Every night its waking:
Faith leads on to sight,
Endless day is breaking.

Every heart its pain,
Alternating pleasure:
Sunshine after rain—
Joy in fuller measure

Every shattered hope
May, like sunbeams riven,
Form a rainbow slope
To the gate of heaven.

Georgia Letter.

When I sent you my little notice offering to give $5 to every boy or girl who would sell ten copies of the "Boy in Gray," I hardly expected so many responses. Sometimes the little workers did not succeed in getting as many subscribers as they wished, but generally they succeeded in getting ten, or more; but whether they sell ten, or five, or even a less number, I allow them one-half of what they get. I do not think we can always say why we do anything. I am sure, however, we can say confidently what motive did not move us.

I am sure I did not write the "Boy in Gray" to make boys bad, or to arouse partisan hate. I think the little story tells of a life which, in some features, will never appear again. The old-time planters of the best type, the feudal baron as he really was, lord of a hundred retainers or serfs, whose rule was almost absolute on his domain, will never be seen again in America; and his picture has not often been fairly drawn. There were planters and planters; there were the absentee landlords of the sugar estates, whose thousand slaves knew nothing of him. Of him I could not write, for I did not know him. There was the cotton lord of the West, whose home was in North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, or Georgia, and whose plantation was in the Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas bottoms. He drew his revenues, visited his estate a few times in the year, attended to the finances, and left to his overseer all the executive work. He cared often only for the life, the health and the good work of his negroes; but there were many more such as I have pictured in Col. Lawson. The last class have passed away; but, as far as I can see, the great capitalists who run your sugar plantations and the plantations in the great valley of the Mississippi now differ but little, and differ not favorably, from the old absentee slave owner of the day that was.

I think the pictures of Squire Bass and John Jones, representatives of that class of sterling farmer, honest yeoman, as independent as kings and as plain as peasants, is one that is still to be seen all over the South.

The story of how the war commenced ought to be told to our children, and of how it progressed and ended; nor ought we ever to forget the fearful days of reconstruction.

Pardon me for saying so much of one of my own books. I sent it to the Northern Methodist papers to be noticed, and I do not think it was noticed at all in but one, and it was evident from the notice the reviewer had not read it all. He gave me a kindly mention, however, on general principles, and yet my aim was to hold out the olive branch to the North. The fact is, those people don't want olive branches. They want servility. You may call on them for anything if you will simply, cable like, confess your sins and premise to do better; otherwise, you must be kept in ward or ignored. In what a rage they lashed themselves because the Southern people paid a tribute of love to poor President Davis. The senseless hate of the North to that good old man is one of the strangest stories of narrowness ever told; but I was once fool enough to feel the same way to Mr. Lincoln. I called him Old Abe. I held him responsible for the war. I blamed him for all our ills, but I have long since repented of my folly, and have seen the sturdy Kentuckian as he was, and have honored his memory. I am glad, however, that we are to have a political campaign without the bloody shirt this time.

We are having a life and death struggle with the bar-rooms, which still rule in a few of our cities. We have driven whisky out of one hundred counties, and there are only a few in which it is sold. The trade is in the hands of Irish Catholics, or German infidels, or Jews, or negroes. In Macon, as you know, we have been whisky ridden, and if we were to have a local-option election, the negro and foreign vote would be too great for us, even if we could have a fair election, which I am sure we could not get. We propose, by the Bush bill, as it is called, to meet the trouble. It provides for absolute prohibition, but allows spirits to be sold by one person in a city, selected for the purpose, for medicinal and mechanical purposes. We are having a hard fight. A new complication has come in that the Populists are on the side of prohibition avowedly, and many Democrats will vote for their candidate for governor. This gives the anti-Bush bill men a chance to rally their forces, and cry out that prohibition is the measure of the Populists; but it is hardly likely that all the Democrats are silly enough to be deceived by this trick. The daily papers may not be in the pay of the liquor dealers, but if they are not, they are doing a great deal of gratuitous work for them. The open statement that Gov. Atkinson will veto the Bush bill if it is passed may not be warranted, but whether true or not, it will drive many votes from him to Mr. Wright.

Dr. Monk has opened the fight, and in no mincing words has denounced the well-known evils of our city. It is a positive shame that a few foreigners should bring such odium on a city which has in it so many good people, and the Doctor told the people so last Sunday night. All kinds of threats have been made against him—personal violence and suits for libel, etc.—but the kinsmen of sturdy old George Monk of the days of Cromwell don't scare worth a cent, and so the vaporing bullies merely talk. We may not succeed in our anti-saloon work, but we have forced the leading Democratic politicians to declare for local option, which declaration will stand until our election is ordered.

At Hazlehurst and Grenada.

At the earnest solicitation of the pastor in charge of our churches in above-named towns, we visited them in the interest of the young people in general, and of the Epworth League work in particular.

At Hazlehurst we preached and addressed the people for three successive nights, and though it was during the hottest weather we have experienced this year, yet the congregations were large and very attentive. Dr. Cooper loves the young people, and they love him. Our visit was delightful to us, and we shall ever remember it with pleasure.

Upon our arrival at Grenada we found that the "leader of Leagues"—Lewis—had literally billed the town. I was to deliver a lecture on "Methodism: Its Past, Present, and Future," for the benefit of the League library fund. Everybody was to bring a book or the equivalent. A committee of young ladies stood at the church door and supplied those who came with badges (the League colors), and the church was decorated for the occasion. The church was well filled with as appreciative congregation as can be found anywhere. At the close of the address they demonstrated the fact that they knew how to shake hands in regular Epworth League style. God bless Cooper and Lewis in all their works of faith and labors of love, and may the blessings of heaven rest upon the young people of Hazlehurst and Grenada!

From Bro. Kilgore.

My precious wife, who has been almost an invalid for fifteen years, and confined to her bed most of the time for more than eighteen months, is now rapidly wasting away with consumption. We very much need the prayers of those who love the Lord.

My work has been quite successful this year when I could leave home, but the above affliction has greatly hindered us.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me—in the name of all womanhood, and especially of widowed motherhood—to thank you and J. S. Sexton, Esq., of Hazlehurst, for your beautiful sketch of the life and character of his mother, Mrs. M. E. Mullins, as contained in the last ADVOCATE. Such an article is an inspiration for all women; and may its perusal guide many a despondent mother to loftier heights of spirituality and grander fields of usefulness and prosperity. How glad I am that her son admits her wisdom in sometimes denying her children amusements they then craved, but which he now knows would have lowered the high standard in morals she had erected for her beloved sons! May her mantle fall on many a weary, despondent, struggling mother, and lead each to a life glorified as hers was!

What heart can ever throb with love so pure;
What love can ever every shock endure
Like a dear mother's? O! let it be
The guiding star from earth to heaven for thee.

Who Ought to Educate Our Children?

To ask the question is to answer it. No one can love the child as the parent does. Our church brings thousands of souls into the kingdom every year into our own fold that are a dead weight. The honest preacher, with something of the solicitude of a true parent, looks upon these souls that God has given him for his hire, and yearns for their ultimate perfection. He soon learns that it is one thing to be a parent and quite another to successfully train these children into the well-rounded man and woman that is early idealized in the parent's heart. It is one thing to get people converted to Christ and quite another to make useful Christians out of them. A large draft must be drawn to do either. God requires us to pay heavily because it has cost him so much.

Our church has very properly emphasized the greatest of truths, "Ye must be born again," but she has not sufficiently stressed the idea of "growing up into Him in all things." The preacher's heart is filled with a deep joy when he sees a soul born into the kingdom, and no one but a preacher knows the anguish of soul when one of these little ones falls away. Our desire should be to make them "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." Do we believe that the children of our church can be properly trained—that is, according to our idea of the Bible—in sectarian, in Catholic, in Episcopalian, and in other schools? I have known Methodist girls sent to other schools, and on their return to their home and to the church where they were baptized, and where they were taught all they ever knew of the blessed Christ, only to scoff and be a positive hindrance to the gospel. Mark this: the child holds to the church that weaves into its being the warp and woof of its interpretation of Christ.

We have made a good investment in this section of our great State. We have felled the forests, have opened up highways, have built wisely. For more than forty years we have done pioneer work, without the help of other zealous, good people. We have sown the precious seed; but who is to reap the harvest? The question is, "Are we to let other people educate our sons and daughters?" If they educate them, they will reap what we have sown. A half dozen schools live well on account of our patronage. The main cause is, we have not till the last few years had a school in the place our people were willing to patronize. When we find they will not send where we are established we must get in their road, so they can not pass us. Nothing is left us in this section but to seek a school close to the line of travel.

Epworth College, at Holly Springs, is in the right place for us. It has the right name, and two men that can be trusted with the training of our girls. Rev. R. M. Standifer is known better in this district than any other man in the Conference. He has secured more than thirty girls from this section lately, and that means much for every one of us. We heartily rejoice that Bro. Standifer and Dr. Steel have undertaken this work for the church.

The Conference already owes Bro. Honnoll, the retiring president, a debt of gratitude. His girls honor him, and they are an honor to the church. The success of Epworth College does not mean the failure of any of our schools, but will be as it has been, a co-laborer and an active stimulant.

To Officers of Auxiliaries.

Another annual meeting is fast approaching. You know that October is the month for this meeting, and the place for holding it this year is Oxford. Our president will shortly announce, through this column, the exact date, but in the meantime the important question with us is, Are we ready for it? Are the officers of auxiliaries rounding up the work of the year as carefully as they should? Have you presidents kept before your women the spiritual side of this Parsonage and Home Mission work, or have you allowed your auxiliary to degenerate into a mere business organization that meets only to pay dues and discuss ways and means for raising your pledge money? Are you urging the election of a delegate to the annual meeting, even though it may require some self-denial on the part of your members to send her?—and is your society praying that this delegate may go in the Spirit of the Master and bring back such an increase of zeal and enthusiasm as to inspire all of you to more earnest and effective work for the coming fiscal year? Have you corresponding secretaries done your part in regularly reporting the work of your auxiliary to your district secretaries or to your Conference secretary? Have you treasurers been faithful in collecting not only dues, but the contingent fee as well, and are you now gathering up all the fragments that nothing be lost? If we have failed in any of these things, let us endeavor to redeem, as far as possible, our lost opportunities, and crowd into the next few weeks the best work of the year. Let us do this, not merely from pride in our auxiliary—though a proper degree of such pride is pardonable—but from loyalty to our Lord, who has permitted us to render him this service.

OUR HOMES.

This organ of our Parsonage and Home Mission Society is growing constantly in interest and usefulness; but, while its list of subscribers is daily lengthening, its circulation in our North Mississippi Conference Society has not increased as it should have done. Our Conference corresponding secretary pledged herself last year, at the convention at Asheville, to secure, if possible, one hundred new subscribers in our Conference during the year. When you consider the size of our society and the comparatively small number already subscribing, that seemed a very reasonable increase to promise, but—shall I confess it in print?—at the end of the last quarter hardly half that number of new subscribers were reported to her. Perhaps this quarter's reports may give a longer list, but we are afraid to hope.

Sisters, are we going to let Mrs. Featherstun go up to the convention at Little Rock, in November, and report that her society was less loyal than she thought? Oh, surely not! Let us make a strong effort before our annual meeting to complete the list. We must inform ourselves to accomplish the best work, and this little paper is full of information in regard to every department of our Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

In the intervals between annual meetings there is nothing more encouraging or interesting to the society than full reports of good district meetings. This column was of more interest to our North Mississippi Conference Society during the month of June than any other during the year, because it was devoted almost entirely to such reports. We hope that next year district secretaries will send to their Conference editor, whoever she may be, not only full reports of district meetings, but also any item of interest from their work. Our women don't care for platitudes from their editor. Her views of church work may be "stale, flat, and unprofitable." They want, and must have, fresh news from all over the Conference. The editor should, therefore, be furnished with all facts of interest to the society; everything to stimulate and encourage the members. With such help she ought to be able to make our P. and H. M. column a very important part of our Conference work.

May I tell you of a missionary "tea" we had last week? We have had several lately, and find them very pleasant. The hostess spreads the table and prepares the tea—iced, of course, now, while we are enduring the heated term. Then, as each lady drops in, she carries a suspicious looking basket, or box, which is deposited in some quiet nook, which seemed to almost be expecting such a burden. The ladies are invited into the parlor. At the appointed time the president conducts the devotional exercises. When the roll was called thirty-five names were heard, but not all answered. After all reports were submitted our delegate to the Annual Conference gave us a very interesting account of the meeting, which was highly enjoyed by each one present. All business having been attended to, and the meeting adjourned, the hostess invited the company into the dining-room. All those little boxes and baskets had mysteriously disappeared from the hall, and the contents must have reached the table, for it was filled with dainty things, but nothing expensive. How we enjoyed the sweet converse of neighbor and friend, and how our hearts glowed with greater love for this work, to which we all felt more closely bound, on account of what we had felt and heard that afternoon!

Our work is growing here, and we feel so thankful that God has touched the hearts of some of our most gifted young women, and brought them to us this year.

The juveniles are interested in their work, too, and we sincerely hope that they will continue to grow until the Water Valley Lilies will be the most fragrant with good works in our whole Conference.

Water Valley, Miss., July 24, 1896.

To magnify the office of district secretary, I desire that they shall conduct the correspondence with auxiliaries, forgetting not to send quarterly reports to the Conference corresponding secretary, and a copy of the same to the president. I will send all missionary literature obtained for gratuitous distribution quarterly to them, and earnestly desire that they broadcast it throughout their district, whether they have auxiliaries at every charge or not. If they fail to furnish any auxiliary with leaflets or needed information, it will be my duty and pleasure to furnish same. I give below the names and address of district secretaries recently elected at Natchez, Miss.:

Jackson district—Mrs. R. R. Parker, Jackson, Miss.; Meridian district—Miss Sallie Smylie, Meridian, Miss.; Natchez district—Mrs. Robt. Reed, Natchez, Miss.; Enterprise district—Miss Anna Trotter, Laugsdale, Miss.; Vicksburg district—Mrs. J. M. Weems, Vicksburg, Miss.; Brandon district—Miss Lola Owens, Hillsboro, Miss.; Seashore district—Mrs. M. E. Denny, Sr., Moss Point, Miss.; Brookhaven district—Mrs. Stella D. Parker, Wesson, Miss.

Let every auxiliary in the Mississippi Conference report to their district secretaries before the tenth of September, giving number of members, active and honorary; subscribers to W. M. Advocate, Little Worker, and Evangel, with the amount raised during the quarter for dues, Conference fund, or "special," sending copy of same to Conference corresponding secretary.

Selections.

A man does not receive the statements that "two and two make four," and that "the pure in heart shall see God" on the same terms. The one can be proved to him—with four grains of corn; he can never arrive at a belief in the other till he realizes it in the intimate persuasion of his whole being.—Lowell's Essay on Dante.

For my part, my soul is like a hungry child, and I need Christ for my refreshment. I am a wandering sheep, and I need him as a good shepherd. I am like a frightened deer pursued by a hawk, and I need him for a refuge. I am a feeble vine, and I need his cross to lay hold of and to wind myself about. And, God be thanked, I know that Christ, too, is neither able nor willing to do without me. He is rich, I am poor; he has righteousness, I have sins; he has wine and oil, I have wounds; he has cordials and refreshments, I hunger and thirst. Use me, then, Savior, for whatever purpose or in whatever way thou mayest require. Here is my poor heart, an empty vessel; fill it with thy grace. Here is my sinful and troubled soul; quicken and refresh it with thy love. Take my heart for thine abode; my mouth to spread the glory of thy name; my love and all my powers for the advancement of thy believing church, and never suffer the steadfastness and confidence of my faith to abate, that so at all times I may be enabled from the heart to say: "Jesus needs me and I him, and so we suit each other."—Gottbold.

Be true to your own church. Give it a hearty and loyal support by word and deed. Remember that it belongs to you; that it is part of your religious life; that in it and by it you are being trained for usefulness here and immortality hereafter; that its honor is much in your keeping; that its growth and purity are affected to the extent of your influence by what you say and do; that people who have faith in your word will look upon it largely according to your representation; that you have promised to advance its interests; and that with its good name and prosperity are bound up the glory of the blessed Jesus. Then do nothing to injure its reputation, or to weaken its power for good, or to mar its peace and fellowship.—Selected.

There are hours in which work is transfigured—in which it does not appear drudgery, but a mission: in which it is noble to do anything for God and man; in which every duty is attractive. All work then becomes a divine calling; and we see that men are not only called to be apostles, but also called to be carpenters, called to be merchants, soldiers, sailors, called to be artists, inventors, and that one can sweep a room for the sake of God, and be happy and Christian in doing it. And until our work is thus transfigured, and we see religion in it, it must be often a burden and drudgery.—James Freeman Clarke.

We are accustomed to talk of giving to the Lord's work. That is a great mistake. The giving is from the other party. The silver and gold are the Lord's. We only dig it up. The cattle upon a thousand hills are his. We only herd them. The wheat does not germinate by our power. The sun does not shine at our bidding. The rains do not fall at our word. The soil is not fertile through our wisdom. Our opportunities and faculties to make money are all gifts from God. He gives thee the power to get wealth. Let us pay God his due.—Rev. J. B. D., in Missionary Link.

To know that there are some souls' hearts and minds, here and there, who trust us and whom we trust; some who know us and whom we know, some on whom we can always rely, and who will always rely on us, makes a paradise of this great world. This makes our life really life.—Churchman.

So live with men as considering all ways that God sees thee; so pray to God as if every man heard thee. Do nothing which thou wouldst not have God see done. Desire nothing which may either wrong thy profession or ask or God's honor to grant.—Hinshaw.

When God gives conversion he demands confession. The whole drift of the Bible is in favor of prompt approach to Christ, prompt acceptance of Christ, prompt confession of Christ and prompt obedience to his every call of duty.—Selected.

Mary Baldwin Seminary.

By an act of the Legislature of Virginia passed during the session 1895-96, at the request of the Board of Trustees, the name of the Augusta Female Seminary, Staunton, Va., was changed to "Mary Baldwin Seminary," as an acknowledgment of their high appreciation of the valuable services and unparalleled success of Miss Mary J. Baldwin, who has been principal for thirty-three years.

The trustees report that at no period of its history has it had so superior a faculty, or has the management been better, every department being under the personal direction of Miss Baldwin.

"Mary Baldwin Seminary" is on the great trunk lines of the Chesapeake and Ohio, and Baltimore and Ohio railroads, in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, a section noted for its healthfulness.

Every parent with a daughter to educate should write for a catalogue.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. M. Blocker, Jeanerette, La., Aug. 29: "We are having the best prayer meetings of any since I have been in charge at this place. We greatly need a baptism of fire. We are in the midst of a protracted drouth. We are praying for rain."

Rev. Thos. J. Upton, Zachary, La., Aug. 29: "We are moving along smoothly, and I trust profitably, on the Zachary charge to date. The good people, too, are not neglecting the temporal wants of their pastor and family, but are keeping us supplied with all the necessaries and some of the luxuries of life. May the Lord bless them!"

Rev. M. L. White, P. C., Montrose, Miss., Aug. 21: "Just closed a meeting at Cedar Grove Church. Was assisted by Bro. L. J. Jones and our presiding elder. Quarterly Conference held in connection with meeting. Fourteen accessions to church, and backsliders reclaimed, several conversions; whole community revived. I don't think I ever attended a better meeting. To God be all the glory!"

Rev. J. F. Wynn, Baker, La., Sept. 1: "A good meeting at Pipkin Chapel. Eight received into the church and about as many converted. Robert did the preaching, and did it well. At Deer Ford Bro. Lutz preached for me eight days and nights. The Word was attended with power. About twenty-five converted or reclaimed, and eight persons testified to having received a pure heart, instantaneously by faith. (Acts xi, 9)"

Rev. Chas. D. Atkinson, Jackson, La., Aug. 28: "I have held two revival meetings on my circuit during this month. We began at Salem on the ninth. Dr. C. W. Carter, Revs. T. J. Upton, W. J. Roberts and J. F. Foster did the preaching. Rev. J. F. McClellan conducted the music. We had several conversions and four additions to the church. My other revival was at Beutoville. The Rev. Daniel Matthei, of the M. E. Church of New Orleans, conducted the morning services in the German language and the evening services in English. The meeting was a great success."

Rev. D. W. Babb, Louisville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Aug. 27: "The Lord has blessed the efforts of his people here beyond their deserving. We have been making progress upward all the year, though somewhat slowly. We have held two protracted meetings, which resulted in the organization of two prayer meetings, bringing many young men into active work in those meetings and the erection of a number of family altars. The membership of both churches revived, and 25 additions—in all this year, 32 additions. We are indebted for efficient work at one of the meetings to Bro. A. T. Buck, of Ethel circuit, and to Bro. George Farrish, of the Congregational Church, at the other. May the Lord reward them!"

Rev. W. D. Burroughs, Charleston, Miss.: "Three weeks ago Rev. W. M. McIntosh began a meeting here which resulted in the greatest revival that Charleston has ever known. The tent was crowded day and night for eleven days. Hot shot were poured into the camps of the devil until sinners came rushing to the altar crying for mercy. Some of the hardest sinners have changed their lives. Infidels have changed from infidelity to Christianity, and we know of one having burned up his infidel books. Card playing and dancing are here no more. There were one hundred and sixteen joined the different churches. Bro. Smith, the singer, and Bro Batte, the cornetist, added greatly to the meeting. Since the McIntosh meeting I have held one other with fine success. I hope to make a good report at Conference."

Rev. J. H. Rogers, Walthall, Miss., Aug. 17: "I want to say through the columns of the ADVOCATE that we have just closed the most wonderful revival that the town of Walthall ever saw. We began the first Sunday in August, and continued for seven days and nights, with increasing interest each service. About fifty conversions and thirty-five accessions. The old fathers and mothers, young people and children were converted and joined the church. Thank God for the power of the gospel! I want to say that Walthall is a religious town now. We have won a victory that will outlive the stars. We were assisted by that godly man, Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss. This consecrated man won the hearts of all who heard him. I like the way he preaches. I like the way he conducts a revival. I want to say to the brethren that this man is fine help in a meeting. He goes from here to Rural Hill to help Bro. Bowlin."

Mrs. L. Crary Sadler, Pearl River, La.: "A five days' meeting at this place resulted in two accessions and much interest being manifested by the members, and all were pleased and edified by the earnest and forcible preaching of Rev. J. B. Kent, who assisted the pastor, Rev. W. A. Clarke. 'The tokens of good' that even David longed for was not to be seen by the dear pastor who had prayed so earnestly for a shower of blessings; yet the promise is sure, and the 'word will not return void.' Bro. Kent won all hearts and made many friends. Our beloved presiding elder stopped over and preached one night for us. To have D. Sawyer with us was an unexpected and enjoyable pleasure. He is always a welcome guest. He baptized two infants—Currie Alexander McRee, and the pastor's baby, Helen Evangeline Clarke. At this little corner of the Lord's vineyard the good seed was sown by those who have labored through the toil and heat of the day, and if one should come and work but one hour and receive as much, let not the others fear. The Lord is a good paymaster."

Rev. F. A. Whitson, Congress, Miss., Aug. 22: "We have just closed our round of protracted meetings on the Pontotoc circuit, in which we have had fine success. We have held six meetings, resulting in about 50 conversions and 30 additions to the church. Some of those converted were in the church, but knew nothing of experimental religion; some others that were converted joined other churches. We scarcely ever saw such manifestations of divine power as were exhibited at times. The hard-hearted sinners were overcome at times, and 30 or 40 would come to the altar, and sometimes they would not leave when dismissed. One evening there were five or six converted after we dismissed, and at another service there were 3. One man about 60 years old was converted. Such complete consecration as was made by some of the church members I scarcely every saw. They became, it seemed, entirely submissive to the Lord's will, ready to do anything for the advancement of his kingdom, and oh! how they were made to rejoice at times. For this we praise God. We are very grateful to Rev. J. R. Roberson for 15 sermons preached. He is fine help. We will assist Rev. A. P. Leach here next week."

Rev. L. J. Jones, Raleigh, Miss., Aug. 28: "On the twenty-second of this month our third quarterly meeting convened at Bay Springs. Our meeting continued five days. Our presiding elder remained with us until Tuesday. We had Bro. White with us from Monrose. Our quarterly meeting was one of the best. Churches were all represented; assessment for Bishops met in full. Every church in the bounds of this circuit is moving up to the front. The future is bright. The brethren at Bay Springs invited us into their new church on Saturday, the twenty-second, to hold our services. The church is not completed; it needs to be ceiled, and when finished it will be one of the best in the district. The five days we spent in this new church will never be forgotten by us, seeing our brethren and sisters rejoicing and praising God in their new church that they had labored so faithfully for, and seeing their children converted and joining the church during the meeting. We had good preaching, good singing and able prayers offered up, and in answer to all there were several conversions and twelve accessions to the church. We are doing all we can to get our people to subscribe for and read their church paper. May God bless you in your work!"

Rev. H. T. Boltz, Plain Dealing, La.: "We have just closed three more protracted meetings. The first meeting was held at Mount Pleasant, which began on Saturday before the third Sunday in July, which resulted in one accession to the church and the church greatly revived. Many testified that they had been blessed during the meeting. Our second meeting began at Plain Dealing on Saturday before the first Sunday in August, at which time and place our third Quarterly Conference was held. Our beloved presiding elder was present and preached and presided to the satisfaction of all who were present. The meeting continued the following week, which resulted in the church being lifted to a higher plane, spiritually. We were assisted by Rev. W. F. Henderson, of the Louisiana Conference, who labored faithfully and earnestly for the salvation of souls and preached some most excellent and soul stirring sermons. Our third meeting began the second Sunday in August at Collingsburg, and continued ten days, which resulted in many conversions and 22 accessions to the church, and the church most gloriously revived. Rev. J. H. Cummins, of the Little Rock Conference, ably assisted us in this meeting. One encouraging feature of these meetings is that they have resulted in the erection of many family altars, and a much larger per cent. of the membership partaking of the Lord's Supper than at any time heretofore. Notwithstanding the shortness of crops and the hard times, I believe that our collections will be in advance of last year. May God bless the dear brethren who labored so faithfully with us in these meetings!"

929 CANAL STREET.

Children are told that angels bring little babies straight from heaven. They are told that when the little one comes, the rustle of angels' wings may be heard. Angels probably do watch over the mother and child—or if they do not, they ought to; but angels cannot change the course of Nature, and it is not right that they should. The woman who wants to have a healthy baby, and who wants to come safely through the ordeal herself, with no life-long weakness as a consequence, will do what she can to make herself strong and healthful in every way. Above all things, she will—during the period of gestation—take regularly Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is a positive specific for all female weakness and disease. It may be depended upon to purify and strengthen the organs distinctively feminine, to soothe all inflammation, and to stop pain and debilitating drains. It cures where doctors have failed, and it cures right at home, without necessitating abhorrent examinations and local treatment. It is the only medicine in the world that makes the coming of baby easy and perfectly safe. It is the only medicine designed for its purpose, that is the invention of a regularly graduated physician, an experienced and skilled specialist in the treatment of the diseases of women. Druggists sell it, and any woman who wants to know all about it—just how to use it in her particular case, may write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.

TAKE LESS MEDICINE.

There is no use in taking a great big pill, or a great big spoonful of medicine, a tiny, sugar coated granule will do the same work and do it fully. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation and other disorders of the digestive organs—cure them surely and comfortably with no griping or other unpleasant feeling—cure them so that they stay cured, cure them more quickly and more easily than the violent medicines that wrench the system. The "Pellets" are so small that it takes forty of them to fill the little vial they come in. They cost twenty-five cents and good druggists sell them. If a druggist attempts to sell you something else which he says is "just as good" keep your hand on your pocket-book. The man who is dishonest in one thing is not to be trusted in another.

Something Good in Dixie.

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures this affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

Thursday, September 10, 1896.

There is a world of difference between morality and spirituality.

The churchman who will not labor for the Lord, unless he is in the lead, has a questionable sort of piety.

Don't be so uncharitable as to impute unworthy motives to those who do not accept your plans and views.

The Christian who claims that he has not time to read his Bible might as well say that he has not time to eat.

In reply to the question, "What became of the devils that were cast out of the swine?" one of our exchanges suggests that they went into politics, and that they are there still.

Be kind, generous, magnanimous to others, and, as a rule, you will receive similar treatment from them. Be cold, selfish, uncharitable, unjust, and you may expect to be paid in kind. "With whatsoever measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

The open sesame to the human heart is kindness. The pastor who has not learned this lesson needs to begin anew. Kindness, however, must be real, not feigned. Nothing is more fatal to a minister than a suspicion of insincerity—mere professionalism.

Debt as an Excuse.

"I must be just before I can be generous" is a very proper saying under some circumstances. No man has a right to give away money belonging to other people. But this plea as often used is a sham and a fraud. A man with large means goes in debt simply as an investment; and as fast as one debt is paid he makes another. He reaps a large pecuniary harvest year after year from these investments, and then pleads his indebtedness as an excuse for not giving for ecclesiastical or benevolent purposes. Such an excuse will not avail at the bar of God; neither does it deceive men.

Generalship.

He would be a very poor general who would attempt to do the work of a private soldier. The same principle applies to the pastor. The pastor who attempts to do everything himself makes a huge mistake. There is a great deal of church work that can be done by laymen, and it is the business of the pastor to see that laymen do it. It will be a positive blessing to the laymen, and it will give the pastor more time for study in order to make himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. True, it is sometimes exceedingly difficult to get laymen to work; but here, as well as elsewhere, diligence, tact and perseverance are usually crowned with success. Many pastors greatly need to act upon the suggestion here given. They spend a large part of their lives in doing work which laymen could do as well, and thus detract necessarily from their efficiency as ministers of the Word.

The Bane Case.

We stated some time since that the college of Bishops at their May meeting overruled the decision of Bishop Wilson in the Bane case. Soon afterward we saw it stated in several papers that the college of Bishops did not act upon the case at all, holding that the case was not properly before them. Hoping that some official deliverance would be made on the subject, we have hitherto said nothing. Months have passed, however, and no official statement has been made. The last issue of the Arkansas Methodist has the following explanation of the situation:

These answers of Bishop Wilson were laid before the college. The Bishops decided there was nothing before them. There is but one possible conclusion. The college did not regard Bishop Wilson's opinion as to the nature of the law as an episcopal ruling. The Conference was free to grant the location of Bro. Bane if they desired. Bishop Wilson was of opinion that they were not compelled to do it. With the opinion of the Bishop that they were not compelled to grant the request, the brethren voting according to their judgment refused it.

Other Conferences have granted location to preachers to evangelize under pretest, doing what they could to dissuade them, and granting at the last that which they supposed they had legally no right to refuse. Bishop Wilson was of opinion that there was no compulsion, and that the Conference had a right to vote as it pleased. The college of Bishops considered Bishop Wilson's answers and decided that they were opinions and not episcopal rulings. Nothing else can be concluded.

We do not know whether Dr. Godbey speaks by authority or whether he is simply theorizing about the matter. If his statement is correct, then, we are worse at sea than ever before. Let it be remembered that the questions propounded to Bishop Wilson in this case were submitted in writing. Moreover, both of them were questions concerning the interpretation of law. "When an itinerant preacher publishes to the world and the church his purpose to locate and enter the evangelistic work, (1) is the proposed work of an evangelist compatible with the duties of a local preacher? (2) Is the Annual Conference to which he belongs compelled to grant him a location?" Bishop Wilson answered these questions as follows: (1) "Not according to the terms of the Discipline." (2) "No."

Now, if questions like these submitted in writing, and answered from the chair in an ex-cathedra way so as to affect the action of the Conference, are not legal questions, then we would like to know what constitutes a legal question. Moreover, when a Bishop answers a question put to him in writing how is a Conference to know whether his answer is an episcopal decision or whether it is a mere expression of opinion, and of no more value than the opinion of any other intelligent man? Great are the mysteries of law, ecclesiastical as well as civil.

Christian Education.

While we were thinking about writing an article showing the necessity of higher education by the church, the following article from the pen of our educational secretary, Rev. R. J. Bigham, came to hand. As we can not hope to present the subject in a stronger or clearer light, we copy it, hoping that it will receive the careful attention which it so richly merits. It is taken from the Wesleyan Advocate.

"That a civilization depends upon education, however it be given, will hardly be denied, if by civilization we mean the sum total of the religious, social, civil, and political forms and privileges under which a people live; and if we review the history of the connection of colleges in the United States with all those religions and legislative forces which have made us, the showing is remarkable.

"'Throughout the United States there is only one man out of two hundred who is a college man; that is, one-half of one per cent. Out of this small proportion it is astonishing how many come to the front in national affairs. Thirty-six per cent. of the House of Representatives, from the beginning, have been college men; also forty-five per cent. of the United States senators, fifty-six per cent. of the Vice-Presidents, sixty-five per cent. of the speakers of the House, eighty-three per cent. of the Supreme Judges of the United States, and seventy per cent. of the Presidents.'

"Now, the intimate relation of legislation with the progress of a people is one of the plainest and easiest read lessons of history. Legislation, regulating, as it does, commercial and domestic relation, has always hindered or advanced national development. Particularly in a free country does the national legislature affect the destiny of nations. That 'one man out of two hundred' has had wonderful influence among us. He put his image and superscription originally upon the Constitution, and since then has interpreted that instrument, and has decided the form and policy of our war measures, our tax measures, and our financial systems. Our whole legislative, executive, and judicial establishment has come from the plastic hand of 'one-half of one per cent.'—that is to say, colleges have affected our entire national life.

"Our colleges have had equal—if not greater—share in the constitution and progress of the visible church. We may take, at random, almost any Christian college in Virginia, Georgia, or South Carolina, for instance, and any man who will trace, in even its evident and most general outline, the history of such an institution, will be obliged to admit that Christian colleges have been indispensable to the progress of the church. If they were blotted out to-day, we would have to go out of business in this country or immediately rebuild them. Sherman's march through Georgia was not such a disaster as the loss of colleges in Georgia would be. If they could not be rebuilt, the State would be ruined, for it would be depopulated. No fifty-nine thousand square miles of territory can exist in a civilized condition in the nineteenth century without schools and colleges. Jeffersonian Democrats may bear a quotation from Thomas Jefferson on this question. He said a long time ago: 'People who expect to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization expect what never was and never can be.' Mr. Madison, also, is in evidence in this connection: 'Popular government without popular education is a prologue to a farce, or to a tragedy, or both.'

"But an education has an atmosphere, a complexion; and the consequent civilization will be like it. If education is Christian, a civilization will be Christian. Our ideas govern us. Give a people your ideas, and they will think your way, will go your way. This is the fundamental reason why education governs. If, then, a church would guide a people in heavenly directions, it must educate; and if a civilization is to be Christian, it must have Christian education.

"As to the question of our relative national appreciation of these truths, and our comparative educational advancement, there are said to be good grounds for congratulation. We spend for education $2.50 per head. Eighty-seven per cent. of all the people in the United States over ten years of age can read and write. 'There is no parallel to forty-two millions of people able to read and write.' All this may be well enough. It is to be remembered, however, that higher education in this country has hitherto been largely in the hands of the church, but that now what we call the State has entered this field. Her secular hand has built and equipped and endowed, and constantly supports the State University, which is really a modern thing. The public (common) schools are being developed and extended as never before. And these universities and these public schools are already secular. A secular civilization is certain to result within possibly one generation, and there is very high and urgent need that the church shall add, speedily and generously, to her educational outfit. The love of the people for Jesus Christ is the only ground upon which we can expect them to do their whole duty in this matter. Until we come to go about the building of our colleges exactly as we go about our missionary and other church enterprises, we will proceed at a poor, dying rate. Let us contribute to Christian education some large measure of self-sacrifice. In His name and for His sake let us begin to give to this cause. So will we be able, even in the South, to do all that we ought to do. Operations on any inferior plane will be neither successful on earth nor acceptable in heaven."

Woman's Personal Physical Charms, and How to Cultivate Them.

BY LUTHER SEXTON, M. D.,
Lecturer and Clinical Professor of Surgery, Medical Department Tulane University, New Orleans, La.

Dr. Luther Sexton, Lecturer and Clinical Professor of Surgery in the Medical Department of Tulane University, utilizes his leisure moments occasionally in writing for the medical journals. Unlike many professional men, he writes in such a charming style that he has attracted attention far and wide among the publishers of high-class journals, and has been offered extravagant prices for the products of his pen. These offers he is obliged for the most part to decline, overwhelmed as he is with the labors incident to an extraordinarily large practice. We present below a few excerpts from an article written by him and published in the August number of the Louisville Medical Journal. We would be glad to publish the whole but for its length.

Dr. Lefton has aptly said "with woman beauty is a duty." Personal beauty therefore becomes a rich possession; it is an accomplishment of rare dignity and power and should be cultivated to the highest degree of perfection.

The will and determination of the sturdiest type of manhood melts like mist before the rising sunshine of beauty's smiles; man's will, under the influence of a winsome woman, is like clay in the hands of the potter. "The downfall of the Bourbons in France is attributable to the suavity and brilliancy of her beautiful women, who rose and fell in royal favor during the dissolute reigns of Louis XIV. and XV." It is the power of beautiful women that leads men on to deeds of valor, and spurs their flagging energies to the accomplishment of their ambitions.

If the energies of all the beautiful women were combined and concentrated upon the uplifting of humanity, all evil on earth would be exterminated, and the millennium would be at once at hand. In thus uniting their best efforts to lead the world from darkness and despair, we would not have much longer to wait for the much-talked-of deliverance. Beauty is not cast in a common mold; it is one of the poems of motion, one of the harmonies of nature, and is not merely a human ornament, for which one is to be flattered and pleased. Remember, there is a beauty that blooms in the heart which is a joy forever, "a fadeless flower in the garden of eternity."

Beauty does not merely belong to the face or form; it is a sort of spirituelle as well as physical perfection. It is the perfect blending of life and feeling in harmonious combination, the combining into one beautiful whole of an indescribable charm and grace that can not be comprehended or explained. We have known persons of great attractiveness whose charm was undecipherable, for theirs was the grace of amiability, that beauty born of bearing and behavior, and was as refreshing as the breeze of morning to the brow of fever:

"Not beautiful in curve or line,
But something more and better,
The secret charm eluding art,
Its spirit; not its letter."

One of the worst enemies to beauty is indigestion; from its evil effects the waist is made larger, and the expression of the face is sometimes materially changed. With the acidity of the stomach comes a sour expression in which "crow's feet" and deep lines are left about the mouth and eyes, sure and ever present signs of poor digestion. Dieting is all important in such cases; wholesome rough food, with plenty of ripe fruit and fresh vegetables, should take the place of sweets, bon bons, iced desserts, iced drinks, starchy and fatty food. Indigestion often causes the pimples and rough skin of young girls; it is also productive of irritable temper and disposition, leaving a chronic frown upon the face which excites repulsion instead of attraction. A cheerful beaming expression is the index of the soul; therefore, we should, at all times, try to cultivate the habit of thinking of agreeable subjects, and conversing on pleasant themes. This is the philosophy of mental culture, and should be the theory upon which our lives are planned. It is on this account that your photographer asks you to think of some one dear to you, or of something pleasing, then he catches the expression of the soul as it lights up the countenance, and the picture taken thus is both artistic and natural.

Contrast an expression so illumined with a photograph in the rogues' gallery, and you get an antithesis of the first beautiful picture. There is an old legend in Roman history which illustrates how environments and age are reflected in facial expression. The artist had searched far and wide in all the ranks and stations of life for a young, sweet, saintly face as a model for his Madonna; at last he found one among the flower girls in the streets of Rome. At his studio he transferred her angelic expression and exquisite loveliness upon canvas, producing a masterpiece of innocence and beauty personified. After his locks had become frosted by age, and the cares of many years, he conceived the idea of painting the opposite of his chaste and seraphic Madonna. He searched among the slums and prisons of the great cities of Europe for the most hideous and vicious female visage he could find; in the guard house of one of the prisons he discovered the paragon of ugliness; she was so hideous that the mere sight of her almost froze the blood in his veins; when all her defects were reproduced in the painting and contrasted with his first lovely Madonna, it startled the artist. The fiendish countenance hounded him so much that he traced back her history and found to his horror that the lovely flower girl, whose picture had brought him encomium from all the great masters of art, and the other his incarnation of vice, were one and the same person.

Education, study and cultivation beautify and refine one's features, while a lack of intellect robs the fairest face of all its charms. The development of the brain in education takes precedence of the body and beautifies it in the same proportion that the mind is improved; so the brain is, to a certain extent, the sculptor of the body. Great and good thoughts ennoble and dignify the face and carriage. Gymnastics and art can not supply the defects of the mind or the lack of lofty ambitions and elevating principles.

Another means of becoming beautiful is to be generous and good, with an ever-prevailing kindness of heart. Women are more beautiful than men because they are better. The mind that reaches out with generous affection, fashions the features of the possessor of that mind with its own beautiful impress, just as the bud develops into the lily, which no artist can counterfeit. Generosity beautifies and irradiates with heaven's luster of loveliness the countenance of its possessor. An old story gives an account of four beautiful maidens who decided that the poor old beggar woman should determine between the beauty of their hands; one gathered strawberries until her fingers and nails were made pink with the crimson hue; the second laved her hands in the crystal brook that ran hard by, that the pearly drops of water might add beauty to her diamond-encased fingers; the third gathered geraniums and heliotropes until her hands were fragrant with their delicious perfumes; the hand of the fourth was dimpled and generous, but unadorned. The old beggar woman in making her decision said: "It is not the hand made pink by the tint of the berry, nor the one made fragrant by perfume of the heliotropes, or the one jewelled crowned, but the hand that gives that is the most beautiful, not only in the estimation of man, but in the sight of God."

So, after all, physical beauty is evanescent at best, and the only permanent effect of charming graces will finally lie in the sweet odor of remembrance which a virtuous and pious life shall leave behind it. Old age will come on apace, and youthful personal charms will give way to the wrinkled face and tottering form, but even then, the virtuous cultivation of a beautiful life and character in the past, leaves its richest traces like the hand of art upon a crumbling column; and like the dew of Gideon's fleece, the sweet perfume of beautiful young womanhood will remain when the fleece of your graces are gone.

NOTES.

Remember that our $1 offer to new subscribers will last only until the fifteenth of October. Now is the time to get up a list, or to tell your friends about it.

Rev. R. H. Wynn, pastor of Algiers, has had more than sixty accessions to the church since Conference.

The annual meeting of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 13–18, 1896.

Bro. Lallance will move his gospel tent in a few days to Claiborne street, in a section of the city where the gospel is much needed.

The people of Louisiana Avenue Church are much pleased with their new preacher, Rev. George D. Parker. He preaches well, and gives promise of being a good pastor.

Rev. Ira L. Bronson, of the Louisiana Conference, was married, Sept. 2, to Miss Lelia J. House, of Orwell, Pa. They will be at their parsonage home in Winnsboro, La., after the first of October. We extend our heartiest congratulations.

Says the United Presbyterian: "The best families, the most useful families and the happiest families in every congregation are those in which family worship is regularly maintained, the church paper taken and carefully read and the work of the church often talked about." Every experienced pastor will say "Amen" to that.—Mid-Continent.

The St. Louis Advocate says: Bishop Granbery has appointed Rev. B. F. Haynes, editor of the Tennessee Methodist, to the pulpit of Hobson Chapel, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Rev. J. W. Wright, D. D.

The Official Board of Mulberry Street Church, Macon, Ga., have published a card denying the statement that there was anything like a fisticuff in connection with the interview between Dr. Monk and an irate newspaper reporter.

President Chambers, of Whitworth College, is fortunate in having secured the services of Mrs. M. L. Herring as matron of the college. Sister Herring has had considerable experience in this line of work, and is a woman of fine Christian character—just the sort of woman to fill this important place.

Mrs. Culver, wife of Rev. Frank Culver, of the North Alabama Conference, now stationed at Anniston, died a few days since and was buried at Enterprise, Miss. Mrs. Culver was a daughter of the late S. T. Taylor, well known in Mississippi Methodism. She was a woman of admirable character.

Buffalo, New York, has adopted a new system of religious benevolence. The city has been divided into 171 districts and each district has been placed in charge of some church. Each church is to be responsible for charitable work in the district it undertakes to cover.—Central Methodist.

The Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church have commenced voting on the woman question. The General Conference having already voted in favor of the proposed change, if three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences concur, women will be eligible to membership in the General Conference.

Thirty ministers, representing as many different missionary societies, called in a body upon Li Hung Chang a few days since in New York, and presented him a formal address thanking him heartily for his kindness to our missionaries. The address states that in no nation of the world do American missionaries receive more just and generous treatment than in China. The distinguished Celestial seemed much pleased.

Many hard things have been said about the ruler of Turkey, but nothing uttered has equaled the truth. His name is a synonym for cruelty and treachery. From semi-official sources we now learn that the diplomatic correspondence, about to be published in London, proves that the Sultan of Turkey was himself the originator and constant director of the hideous massacres by which, according to the evidence in the same correspondence, 100,000 Armenians were massacred. Every well-informed person believed this before, but the documents will formally complete the evidence.

We are not surprised to learn from various reports that the larger part of the persons who died of heat prostration during the recent hot wave were users of alcoholic stimulants. In spite of the claim that the drinker takes his liquor in the winter to warm him and in the summer to cool him, the fact is that, other conditions being equal, the first man to go down before the blizzard, as well as the first to be prostrated on the scorching pavement, is the man who uses alcoholic drink as a beverage. Drunkenness is a crime against God, closing the gate of heaven, but it is also a sin against nature, cutting off the mortal man before his time.—Pittsburg Advocate.

The East Mississippi Female College has added an industrial department to its already extensive course. In this will be taught dress-making, cutting and fitting, fancy work, dining-room work, etc. This is an excellent idea for our church colleges. Every young lady ought to have training in these lines. Let our people encourage this institution in its advanced lines of work. President Beeson has added several departments this year, including Normal, Kindergarten, Type-writing and Stenography, Business Course, Dress-making, etc. Our daughters need not go to State schools for industrial work. Let them go where the religious influence is prominent.

THE ENEMIES OF CHRIST.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 13—ENEMIES THROUGH GREED OF GAIN.

(Matt. viii, 30-34; xxvii, 3-5; Mark x, 17 22; Luke xii, 15-21.)

I.—THE SWINE OWNERS.

An entire community turned out to request the speedy departure of Christ from their midst; and how trifling the occasion of it! Some hog owners had lost their property. Attributing the cause of their loss to Christ, they succeeded in getting all their fellow-citizens to join them in asking him to leave their part of the country. Christ was not the real cause of the drowning of their swine, as he simply permitted the evil spirits, when driven out from their human habitations, to choose their own course, and these evil spirits, therefore, were the cause of the panic among the herd of swine that resulted in their death.

How insignificant is a little financial loss when compared with rich spiritual gain that accompanies it; but to the sordid minds of these ignorant men there was no compensation whatever in their loss, either in the salvation of the two demoniacs, who had hitherto terrorized the entire surrounding country, or even in the benediction of Christ's personal presence among them.

II.—THE BETRAYER.

Greed of gain perverted the conscience and mastered the will of Judas Iscariot to such an extent that his name is synonymous with covetousness and hypocrisy of the worst sort.

Though there are no palliating circumstances in the awful crime that he committed, under the influence of his sinful passion for money, yet he can not but command our deep pity when we see him in the agony of remorse returning the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, and going out to hang himself.

III.—THE RICH YOUNG MAN.

A very sad incident indeed. A young man of good family, and of exemplary life, feels that he is not in possession of eternal life, and comes in great haste and earnestness to inquire of Jesus. Jesus looks within his heart, and sees that his affections are so strongly centered upon his riches, that it will be impossible for him to obey the law of Christian love, unless he should give them up entirely. So the severe remedy is prescribed, but it proves too much for him, and he goes away in great sorrow, an almost-persuaded, but, nevertheless, an unsaved man. This young man is the type of that very large class of young people, who would like to be Christians, but find it impossible to sever the cords that bind them to the world. Christ's loving heart yearns over them, as it did over the young man; but love can not compel.

IV.—THE RICH FOOL.

A man may be very intellectual, and yet be guilty of the deepest moral folly. Our Lord's parable presents a man, who is so infatuated by the pursuit and possession of earthly wealth, that he is absolutely forgetful of his soul's want, and is entirely occupied in planning for more personal comfort and enjoyment, during the years to come.

Any planning for the future that does not contemplate the welfare of the soul, rather than the body, is foolish and very dangerous.

From Bro. Holloman.

Mr. Editor: In my "Notes by the Way," as they appear in the last issue of the Advocate, your erasures from the original present me in rather an embarrassing light. In my note from Yazoo City, you make me say I "preached in the new church Sunday morning. I did my best (Bro. Featherstun said, 'Well done'), and they heard me gladly." Now, all of this may be true (I certainly did my best), but for the sake of my blushes I would ask the untrimmed sentence inserted which reads thus: "I preached in the new church Sunday morning, and because of sickness of pastor, to the colored people at 3 p. m. I did my best. Bro. Featherstun said, 'Well done,' and they heard me gladly."

From Water Valley.

Water Valley grows apace and Methodism is at the front here. We have just closed our camp meeting with wonderful results. About 40 accessions to the church and near 75 conversions. The ground is to be fenced at once, a comfortable house erected for visiting preachers, and many other improvements to be made before next year.

May your efforts to give us a good, orthodox Methodist paper be crowned with the very best success.

Pastor Main Street M. E. Church, South.

OUR ANGEL CHILD.

BY ANNIE WINSOR HAYGOOD.

We laid her gently down, a tiny flake
A little tired dove, with weary wing,
No more our nest to know;
Our hands we wring,
The while the choirs of heaven sing.

We left her tiny form to the frail care
Of yellow leaves to gird;
Left to the music of the storm-tossed trees
Our little singing-bird!
Our sonls did weep,
The while our child did sleep.

We went back to our empty home—alas!
Alas! for childish feet
Whose pitter-patter on our old house floor
Made life so sweet.
Our grief grows wild
For this, our angel-child.

We poorer are for her sad loss, and yet,
Heaven much the richer now
For one who wears a wreath of immortelles
Upon her shining brow.
How can we weep
For one who wakes from sleep?

A Black Hen Lays a White Egg.

The egg is white enough, though the hen is black as a coal. This is a very simple thing, but it has pleased the simple mind of John Ploughman, and made him cheer up when things have gone hard with him. Out of evil comes good, through the great goodness of God. From threatening clouds we get refreshing showers; in dark mines men find bright jewels, and so from our worst troubles come our best blessings. The bitter cold sweetens the ground, and the rough winds fasten the roots of the old oaks. God sends us letters of love in envelopes with black borders. Many a time have I plucked sweet fruit from bramble bushes, and taken lovely roses from among prickly thorns. Trouble is to believing men and women like the sweetbrier in our hedges, and where it grows there is a delicious smell all around, if the dew do but fall upon it from above.

Cheer up, mates, all will come right in the end. The darkest night will turn to a fair morning in due time. Only let us trust in God, and keep our heads above the waves of fear. When our hearts are right with God, everything is right. Let us look for the silver which lines every cloud, and when we do not see it let us believe that it is there. We are all at school, and our great Teacher writes many a bright lesson on the blackboard of affliction. Scant fare teaches us to live on heavenly bread, sickness bids us send off for the good Physician, loss of friends makes Jesus more precious, and even the sinking of our spirits brings us to live more entirely upon God. All things are working together for the good of those who love God, and even death itself will bring them their highest gain.—Spurgeon.

Literature in the Home.

The habit of reading, acquaintance with good literature and love of it are almost always home products. Taste for reading is most easily acquired in early years, and without effort in a family atmosphere favorable to it. Commonly the most important, the determining years of training for a child are between the ages of five and ten, and this is as true with regard to the mental growth that comes by means of books as it is with regard to the habits and the character that make for a useful and honorable life. I do not say a successful life, for the word success is very much misunderstood. If I did use it in relation to a human career, I should not mean by it the production of a selfish, unscrupulous, rich man. There are many cases in which men and women, by native force or favoring circumstances, have overcome the lack of early home advantages, the want of an intelligent home atmosphere and of books, but for the majority the home life is a determining feature in a man's intellectual life, that is to say, in regard to self-cultivation and the development of the finer graces of the mind, from which come the greatest enjoyment and satisfaction amidst the struggles and discouragements of this world.

I do not need to say that the love for books, the habit of reading, is the best refuge in advancing years from ennui of life. The habit of playing games, of interesting one's self in social life, of gossip, even of travel, have all been recommended or noted as resources against ennui in middle life and old age. But all of them put together, and we will throw in politics and various reform agitations with them, do not compare for the satisfaction of the mind, for the occupation of the hours of loneliness or leisure, with the one habit of reading the best books, for interest in an acquaintance with literature, that is with the most interesting and stimulating thought of all the ages. The habit of reading is that, but it is something more. Judicious, well-directed reading, which is study, teaches what life is, what the world is, and better fits a man for every duty and occupation he enters in. It broadens his views and makes him more competent. He will be a better workman, in field or factory, if his intelligence is broadened, improved and sharpened by acquaintance with books; he will be a more intelligent director of any business or any great enterprise, either of charity, commerce or manufacture, if he is a well-informed man in the literature of the world. He will be worth more, worth more measured by day wages or by salary. The habit of reading and comparing, a knowledge of what has been done and said before, of the experiments that have been tried in the past, make a man a better observer and judge of what is going on about him. By this knowledge he is better fitted to perform his duties as a citizen. I am not by this saying that mere "bookworms" are the best men for practical affairs. These are often only cocoons of knowledge, which are good for nothing until they are hatched and spun out in the action of practical affairs.

The question of literature at home thus becomes a very practical question. Nothing can supply in tender years the place of a home intellectual atmosphere in the formation of the habits of children. If they are accustomed to see books, or to hear at table intelligent conversation about the world of men and things reported in books and periodicals and newspapers, they easily form a taste for going to the sources that will inform or interest or amuse them. They will not look upon reading as a task, but as the pleasure it is.

If the home is full only of commonplace gossip and disregards the intellectual side, where are the children to acquire a taste for reading? Not in the streets, not in the athletic grounds, not in the schools. The theory of many parents, who think of the matter at all, is that they have nothing to do with real education, they are only concerned to make their children good and happy. They must go to school to learn. Never was a notion more disastrous. The schools do not supply the place of the home in education, especially in regard to literature and the habit of reading. The pupils go to school, in the majority of cases, not in all, as to a hated task. They are set to certain tasks, which seem to them dry and uninteresting. In only a few schools, as yet, is a pleasant door opened to them through which they walk, or rather run with interest, into the world of literature and the fascinations of science and entertaining knowledge of the world in which they live.

But this is not all. The schools, driven on by an unintelligent public sentiment, administered usually by men who have not the least conception of what education should be, are constantly overloaded with courses and studies beyond the capacity of the young mind to assimilate. The sole object set before them is the passing of an examination in order to get into the next grade or the higher school.

Now, what happens by wholly turning over education to the public schools, to the State, where there is no love of reading learned at home? Why, this is what happens, and what demands to be taken notice of. A large proportion of the children, of the young people, educated in this way, have no habit of reading, and do not in fact read at all or they read weak and vicious books which appeal to their lowest tastes. There is not the slightest exaggeration in the statement. Hosts of young men and young women come up for examination in colleges, and are admitted, who had never read any books except the text-books there are required by the examination to know. Of the whole world of history, biography, fiction, poetry, science, outside of these meager text-books, their minds are a blank, and thousands annually go through the district and high schools, following every turn in our mechanical scheme of education, without any habit of reading, any love of books, any conception of the world of thought, which is the important world.

I might say something about the loss in vigor of mind, in historical breadth, in language and style, in literary taste and discrimination, by the growing disuse of the Bible as a book generally read in their household. I will only add that the family in which the children do not acquire a taste for reading is either incapable of giving it, not having it, or is disregardful of the welfare of its posterity and of the State.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Good Housekeeping.

HYGIENE.

Total Abstinence versus Moderate Drinking.

BY REV. W. H. BUCKS.

There are some well-meaning people and even some ministers of the gospel who advocate moderate drinking. A respectable English magazine reports that of the 50,000 clergymen of the Church of England as many as 4,000 abstain from the use of spirits! So according to this magazine eleven-twelfths of the clergymen of the English Church are tipplers at the wine cup. All the inebriates of this country of ours were once moderate drinkers. And I presume nearly all of them, at least a majority of them, expected to remain such. They thought they could be master of themselves and remain temperate. Liquor loves company. One glass clamors for another. Even the moderate use of a hurtful thing is injurious and habit grows. A small quantity may satisfy the appetite for a time, but gradually the appetite strengthens and demands more; thus the coils are being fastened around the individual and he is welding a chain which in many cases will drag to disgrace and ruin.

A minister of the gospel stood in a reform meeting and was showing how that a man might take strong drink moderately and yet do right, and how the head of a family might have strong drink on his dining-table and yet do right, and after he had made a powerful and eloquent argument, he sat down in the pulpit. Then an aged man arose in the audience and said: "I am a broken-hearted man. I have buried my only son. He started life with beautiful prospects. He is to day in a drunkard's grave, and when he was dying he told me that he started that awful habit at the table of a Christian clergyman, and that clergyman is the man who just sat down in the pulpit."

O young man, stand aloof from the drink habit. Never start in the path of drunkenness and you are safe. Never tarry at the wine cup. It is the first glass that costs. Stop at the beginning by not commencing to drink. The panther of evil habit has a velvet coat and a sleek skin, and comes softly through the night to a man's temptation and squats before the soul. In the name of God, stop before the demon fastens his iron fingers upon you, and you can not extricate yourself from his grasp. If all Christians would abstain from the use of intoxicants it would greatly lessen the curse of the drink traffic. There is a tremendous power in example. The total abstinence phase of the temperance work is too little emphasized at the present day. In our eagerness to seize hold upon more gigantic machines with which to cut down the weeds of intemperance and uproot the traffic, it is to be feared that the sickle of total abstinence has been neglected and allowed to rust.

Total abstinence is a duty which we owe to our fellow-men. We are in an important sense our brother's keeper. "If meat make my brother to stumble I will eat no meat while the world standeth." The Bible nowhere recommends or commends the use of alcohol as a beverage, but, on the other hand, warns against it in the most positive terms. It speaks of its direful effects and the fearful doom of the drunkard. There is no authority found in the Word of God for the use of liquor moderately as a beverage. But, on the other hand, the Bible approves and commends abstinence from intoxicating beverages. There is not a single passage to be found in the Scriptures condemnatory of total abstinence. The whole spirit and tenor of the Word teaches self-control and self-denial, both for our own sake and for the good of our fellow-men.

One of the most hopeful features in our temperance work is the instruction of the children as to the deleterious effects of alcohol on the human body. Temperance text books are used in many States of the Union. But this instruction must be reinforced by an example of total abstinence by parents and others. Our church through her excellent Discipline speaks in unmistakable terms of disapproval of the use of intoxicants as a beverage. And all her ministers and members have obligated themselves to abstain from them when entering into church fellowship.—Evangelical Messenger.

Fits Cured

From U.S. Journal of Medicine. Prof. W. H. Peeke, who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any living Physician; his success is astonishing. We have heard of cases of 20 years' standing cured by him. He publishes a valuable work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his absolute cure, free to any sufferer who may send their P. O. and Express address. We advise anyone wishing a cure to address Prof. W. H. PEEKE, 4 Cedar St., New York.

OBITUARIES.

JOHNSON—Rev. William Branford Johnson, son of Rev. Jno. C and Deborah Johnson, pioneer Methodists of the Natchez country, was born about three miles east of Fayette, Jefferson county, Miss., Nov. 11, 1808, and calmly fell on sleep near the place of his nativity, July 21, 1896, thus spending his long life in the same community. He joined the Methodist Church, and was converted in the old church in Fayette at a watch-night service, Dec. 31, 1829, and thence onward to the end, Enoch-like, he maintained a most holy life, living by faith, walking with God in sweet fellowship with him, and keeping all his commands and ordinances blameless. He was very soon afterwards licensed as a local preacher, and for years exercised his gifts and graces as such when occasion arose, and his services were much in demand in all this region of country. He was made a Mason in Thomas Hinds Lodge No. 58, at Fayette, June 22, 1844, and always being in good standing with the order, he was buried by members of that lodge after religious services at the house by Rev. Jno. W. Crisler, pastor on the Harrison circuit.

In 1859, after a very exciting canvass, he was elected over a very popular opponent (and an office holder besides) sheriff of Jefferson county, serving one term as such, and then came out of office, and out of politics, too, without spot or stain on his official or Christian character. After his term as sheriff he was admitted into the Mississippi Conference, and traveled for eighteen years, always and everywhere a very popular and acceptable pastor. Feeble health caused him to locate and spend his declining years quietly and peacefully on his farm, surrounded by family and friends, for he never had an enemy, and even infidels could not find any defects in his daily life. He went in and out before the people of this county for nearly three generations, and no one ever heard aught against Uncle Billy Johnson, for he was emphatically a pure man, without guile or reproach, and everybody loved him.

Eight years ago this Summer he and the Rev. John G. Jones, life-long friends and co-laborers often, spent a quiet day together—their last meeting on earth in a Christian home in Harrison. It was good to be there and note how these old soldiers of the cross, though than in age and feebleness extreme, would fire up with wonted ardor while speaking of the many hard-fought battles against sin and wickedness in which they had so often engaged together in the long ago. Totally dissimilar in disposition—one a veritable Boanerges, at least at times; the other meek and quiet, who at all times and everywhere preached only a gospel of love and charity for all—their lives had been strangely similar. Each had commenced early in life to serve the Lord under the trying circumstances of those pioneer days, when churches and church privileges were few, and Christians scarce. Each had waged a long warfare marked by trials and triumphs; each had lost a loved companion, but each got happy at the near prospect of meeting again on the eternal shore, where trials and partings never come.

Now that Uncle Billy has joined that angel band, it requires no stretch of the imagination to picture a home over there, brighter, holier and happier than all the rest. A few years ago, while suffering excruciating agony from a malady requiring an intricate and dangerous surgical operation to relieve, the doctor suggested to Uncle Billy that perhaps he had best go to a hospital where facilities for treating such cases were more perfect. The reply came quick and with the utmost calmness: "No, doctor; no. In this room my aged father died. My mother and my wife died here, too, and right here I am nearer heaven than I would be anywhere else on earth." As I watched the old soldier fighting his last battle in that very room, methought of that angel band of kindred who, doubtless, were all there to bear him away on snowy wings to the eternal home of the soul, and I could almost hear the welcome plaudit: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter now into the joy of thy Lord." E. R. Jones,
For Committee.

Harriston, Miss.

At the third Quarterly Conference of the Harriston circuit, held at Harriston, Aug. 1 and 2, 1896, on motion of Rev. Jno. W. Crisler, it was resolved that E. R. Jones, Jackson Millsaps and Willis Watkins be appointed a committee to prepare a suitable memoir of Rev. W. B. Johnson, late a member of this church.

Resolutions in respect to his death, and ordered that the same be spread upon the Minutes of this Quarterly Conference, and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate:

Whereas, The death of Rev. William B. Johnson, long a member of the church, and of this church and Conference since its organization, has been officially announced; therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is with profound sorrow that we have heard of the death of our aged brother; yet we bow in meek submission to the will of God.

Resolved, That we are profoundly grateful to Him for permitting our deceased brother to remain so long with us—a shining example of all that was pure and good, holy and Christ-like.

Resolved, That in his death this church and community has suffered an irreparable loss, and that while we can not expect to see his like again, yet we can follow him as he followed the Master.

YOUNG—Mary, daughter of Max and Mar. [illegible] was born in New Orleans, La., Jan. 1, 1865; moved to Mayersville, Miss., during childhood, where she remained until Oct. 28, 1884, when she married Dr. J. L. Young, and moved to Greenville, Miss., where she lived until October, 1894, when she came to San Antonio, Texas, in quest of health. During her residence in this city it was the writer's pleasure and profit to visit her often. Her strong faith in God, exceptional patience and wonderful power of endurance were demonstrations of God's power to save and sustain under the most trying circumstances. She was subject to frequent and severe hemorrhages, and but little hope of her recovery was entertained by her friends; but she improved rapidly until the Spring of 1896, when she took the measles, and no sooner had she recovered from this affliction than she was taken with pneumonia, exhibiting a most wonderful vitality. But she never recovered from these attacks. Seeing the end was nigh, she expressed a desire to die among her people, and she returned to her Mississippi home, where she patiently awaited the summons. Hers was a triumphant death. She would frequently say, as the end approached, "I am going home to Jesus," and with a hallelujah and a "Thank God he now gives me rest," she went sweeping through the gates into the home of the soul. She leaves a sweet and bright little daughter and a true and devoted husband, who, in their bereavement, I commend to the God of all grace, who is able to keep them and bring them to the soul's everlasting rest.

KIBLINGER—Lenore Kiblinger was born in Jackson, La., Jan. 7, 1879, and died at the home of her childhood, Jan. 22, 1896.

She was a loving and affectionate sister, a tender, devoted daughter, and an ardent friend. Hardly had she entered upon the threshold of life ere disease fastened itself upon her. While in every stage of her affliction willing hands and loving hearts stood by her to give comfort in every way, yet in her seventeenth year she passed from among us.

At ten years of age she united with the M. E. Church, South, and was a consistent member until she died. For nearly two years she was a member of my class in Sunday-school, and I never met her at class that she did not have a perfect lesson. During her long affliction she was never known to utter a word of complaint—always cheerful, patient, and loving, the favorite of all. Mother, sisters and brothers can not mourn as those who have no hope. Her life was not lived in vain. In the garden of God's love she is calling us upward to her beautiful home, where I trust we shall all meet and bask forever in the sunlight of the land beyond the stars.

Gloster, Miss.

BISHOP—Miss Clara, daughter of B. T. and F. H. Bishop, was born July 21, 1873, in Holmes county, Miss., and she peacefully departed this life July 5, 1896. Her parents moved from Holmes to Warren county in 1877. Miss Clara was the only daughter of the home, and a faithful, devoted and loving one did she prove herself to that home. She joined the Baptist Church, of which her parents were members, in September, 1885, and remained a faithful member to the time of her death. She died of swamp fever, and was conscious to the last. She left a bright assurance of her acceptance with the Father, calling her loved ones and friends around her, talking lovingly to them of Jesus, and bidding them meet her in the home of peace.

May the Father of mercies deal gently with the loved ones she has left behind, lead them through this life, and bring them at last to that home where there will be no more parting and no more tears! G. A. Guice

WARREN—Sister P. A. Warren, wife of G. P. Warren, and daughter of Charles and Cormandel Pipes, was born Dec. 30, 1847, and died July 4, 1896, aged forty-eight years six months and four days. She was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the early age of ten years. She was married Aug. 1, 1867. She was a consistent, zealous, and faithful member of the church all her life from the time she joined. Her last sickness was protracted, being confined to her bed thirteen weeks. She bore her affliction with great Christian fortitude and patience. She was a loving, faithful wife, idolized by her husband. She will be greatly missed by the church and community in which she lived. God blessed the bereaved!

Jno. A. Miller.

Ruston, La.

FITE—Matthias S. Fite was born in Smith county, Tenn., March 8, 1822, and died at his home in Panola county, Miss., near Emery Church, July 14, 1896. Bro. Fite moved to Mississippi in April, 1840, and settled the place at which he was living when he died. He was married Dec. 10, 1844, to Miss Nancy Marryman, of Lafayette county, Miss.

He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church for thirty-six years previous to his death. For the greater part of his church life he was steward in Emery Church, and a good one he must have been, from all accounts. He left a wife, six children and a host of friends to mourn his death. T. H. Porter, P. C.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

How weak

the soap and water seems when you begin your washing! You don't get any strength out of it till the work is about done. Plenty of hard work and rubbing and wear and tear, even then—but more of it at the beginning; when the water is weakest.

Now with Pearline, the water is just as strong at the beginning as at the end. This is one of the reasons (only one) why Pearline acts so much better than soap, in all washing and cleaning. Use no soap with it. 485

"It's not so much where you are, as what you are, that makes your heaven." The bright cheery soul who lives the life of trust only sees the sunny side of everything; she has learned to endure cheerfully, and wear a bright face when everything looks dark.

It is positively injurious to be ever picturing to ourselves the woes of our fellow men unless we endeavor to relieve them. Every time our compassion is stirred, and no action is taken, our hearts are hardened and our religion impaired.—F. W. Robertson.

Make the Most of Yourself.

It is the duty of every man to make the most of himself. Whatever his capacities may be, he is sure to find some place where he can be useful to himself and to others. But he can not reach his highest usefulness without good health, and he can not have good health without pure blood. The blood circulates to every organ and tissue, and when it is pure, rich and healthy it carries health to the entire system, but if it is impure it scatters disease wherever it flows. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the one true blood purifier. It cures salt rheum, scrofula, catarrh, dyspepsia and rheumatism because these diseases have their origin in the blood.

The Mother of Female Colleges.

Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga., has the proud distinction of being the first college in the world to confer a diploma upon woman. She has that diploma framed and hanging on her walls. It should be preserved to the end of time, for the day on which it was handed to the young graduate by Wesleyan's first president, that grand man, Bishop Pierce, was an epoch in the history of woman. There are hundreds of female colleges now, but Wesleyan should always be honored as being the leader in this movement for the education of woman. The new president of the college, Dr. Hammond, has plans for advancing the college in every way. He is not content that Wesleyan should be the foremost female college of the South Atlantic and Gulf States, but desires that it will occupy the place in Southern Methodism which the Woman's College of Baltimore does for Northern Methodism. He is bending all his energies to that end. His aim is that the very best secular education to be obtained shall be given under Christian auspices.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE DEATH OF THE FLOWERS.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,
Of wailing winds, and naked woods, and meadows brown and sear.
Heaped in the hollows of the grove, the Autumn leaves lie dead;
They rustle to the eddying gust and to the rabbit's tread.
The robin and the wren are flown, and from the shrubs the jay,
And from the wood top calls the crow through all the gloomy day.

Where are the flowers, the fair young flowers, that lately sprang and stood
In brighter light and softer airs, a beauteous sisterhood?
Alas! they all are in their graves; the gentle race of flowers
Are lying in their lowly beds with the fair and good of ours.
The rain is falling where they lie; but the cold November rain
Calls not from out the gloomy earth the lovely ones again.

The wind-flower and the violet, they perished long ago,
And the brier-rose and the orchis died amid the Summer glow;
But on the hill the golden-rod, and the aster in the wood,
And the yellow sunflower by the brook in Autumn beauty stood,
Till fell the frost from the clear, cold heaven, as falls the plague on men,
And the brightness of their smile was gone from upland, glade, and glen.

And now, when comes the calm, mild day, as still such days will come,
To call the squirrel and the bee from out their Winter home;
When the sound of dropping nuts is heard, though all the trees are still,
And twinkle in the smoky light the waters of the rill,
The south wind searches for the flowers whose fragrance late he bore,
And sighs to find them in the wood and by the stream no more.

And then I think of one who in her youthful beauty died,
The fair, meek blossom that grew up and faded by my side.
In the cold, moist earth we laid her, when the forests cast the leaf,
And we wept that one so lovely should have a life so brief;
Yet not unmeet it was that one, like that young friend of ours,
So gentle and so beautiful, should perish with the flowers.

"The Epworth League a Failure Outside of Towns and Cities" Reviewed.

We are glad that our brother selected so appropriate a text as he did when he said: "Nothing has seemed to meet the requirement in training the young for church work more effectually than the Epworth League. I mean in those places where its system can be applied and its methods are practical," but object to both the treatment and application. Truly no other institution of our church has more fully shown itself useful and more adapted to work set before it than the Epworth League; and we do not object to the matter quoted until the writer begins to explain that certain conditions are necessary to success, viz.: cities and towns, or a dense population. This is true only in so far as that people are necessary, numbers are necessary, and intelligence is necessary for a successful organization. It is also true that where there are many people many social barriers arise before the Epworth League, and afford hindrance to it. I will be charitable, and truthful, too, and grant that the Epworth League may be run successfully in cities and towns, and then submit that the same may be done in rural districts, for here we have sufficient numbers and intelligence, and abundant willingness. The system can be applied and the methods are practicable. The system is exactly suitable in that it affords social intercourse, literary engagement, intellectual growth, devotional work, and opportunities for deeds of love and mercy. Our young folks want to associate. None are more social than the young people in the country. What they lack in the matter of facility they make up with their earnestness and natural strength. They will go—go in buggies, on horseback, in wagons, and on foot. They like to go, and delight in the going, and are really glad they have some distance to travel. A street car is a bother in the eyes of young people who have horses and like to ride. We want no electric car when the road meanders through the forests, and birds sing or whistle along the way, thus affording so delightful a ride on horseback, or stroll on foot in delightful conversation. I have known them to be regular in attendance, coming two or three miles on foot and seven on horseback. I knew one Epworth League whose membership ran over fifty, and this church was ten miles from a railroad. On this same circuit there were three Leagues at work, all having a good membership. That part of the system pertaining to literary work is well suited to our young people in the country. They have hungry minds, and will read with increasing desire such books as the course of reading has in it, if properly directed. An Epworth League library is greatly prized, and the readings, debates, recitings, and such work as naturally comes up, are engaged in with interest and great profit. Under this developing power I have seen communities revolutionized socially, intellectually, and religiously; and the same was certainly brought about by the Epworth League system of work out in the country. Under this system of social and intellectual work, properly guided, the dance, sociable, and other questionable engagements can be driven out of the community in the country. We have seen it done. Is it so in towns or cities?

The devotional work of this system is the grand part of it. We lead our young people on step by step from some simple part in the services to such labors and activity as are abundantly useful. I have observed this from a word or two spoken in bashfulness to acceptable preaching of the gospel. In our country Leagues we have interesting Bible readings, prayer meetings, praise meetings, and song services. With such help as is thus afforded in the League system of Christian work, the spiritual life of a church is found mainly in its young people. It is delightful to see them in their burning zeal and great earnestness work to bring sinners to Christ. In the country we find the sick and needy, and give the needed help. Now the system is all right and perfectly practicable. But when you come to "its methods," we say you can not find them. That is, there are no fixed methods by which we are to do the work. The Epworth League is for young life in our church, and is flexible as to methods, so as to be able to adjust itself to young people of the church wherever they are found. In whatever they need most the League sets itself to work to help them. Methods of work must of necessity be manifold, varied, and varying, to suit various and changing conditions.

As to your objection to restriction of membership to certain age, that difficulty is now removed, and we can have the senior, or the junior League, or both, according to age of the young folks. We are agreed further that we need wise men to lead this great movement and plan to perfect its usefulness. We fail to see, however, that you are right when you seem to teach that one organization should be the limit. You, doubtless, mean that the church members should do all the work needed to be done without any new machinery. The church, my brother, stands in her dignity, power, and glory—and we all are members—but the Epworth League is a piece of new machinery more suitable, more complete, and more rapid. We have concluded to try to save our young people. We want now to introduce them as factors in church work and the evangelization of the world. By this League movement our church is harnessing and training the greatest power yet found for future success. If I were to place my experience in opposition to yours, it might be encouraging to some, for while you failed the first time and will make no further effort, I succeeded agreeably in my first movement, and have been succeeding ever since. I guess you have heard the story or advice given by the man who lisped. He said: "If at firsth you don't thinck—if at firsth you don't thinck—justh keep thucking until you do thuck theed." What we need for successful Epworth League work in the country is more pastors to study the work and labor to promote it. It will then succeed.

A Reply to "Gilderoy."

In the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 3, "Gilderoy" again springs the question of presiding elder's districts by advocating a reduction of the number in our North Mississippi Conference. We are doing so well with the present arrangement that it appears almost out of order to raise the question; but, as the issue is before us, and Bro. "Gilderoy" concedes to others "the right to think differently" from himself, if they so choose, I suppose a little discussion of the matter is in order.

It is with reluctance that I take issue with my brother in this matter, as I have great respect for his usually wise judgment; but I feel impelled to do so for what I conceive to the best interest of our work. It seems to me that the uninformed (of which there are not a few) would be impressed by "Gilderoy's" expressions that our presiding eldership is considered as simply a work of "supervision" and "overseeing," and that its worth is to be estimated by dollars and cents. He says: "We could very well dispense with one presiding elder's district by dividing out the charges. We employ too many men and pay out too much money for supervision. We do not need so many men, nor so much money, to run this machine."...."A man can absorb one district and have the whole work supervised just as well as it is now."...."If I am not mistaken, he" (the Bishop) "is powerfully opposed to wasting men and money, specially so for overseers on the Lord's farm."

The presiding elder is not to be considered as merely an executive to "supervise" and "oversee," but as also a preacher of the gospel and a fellow-laborer in the Lord's work. His duties are "to travel throughout his district, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church." Thus we see that, as he goes, he is to preach as well as "oversee." The latter function is not to be disparaged or neglected in the least, but the former is to be magnified and performed as well. Therefore, they are not to be heard who would ignore the presiding elder as a preacher, and recognize him only as an official visitor to preside over the Quarterly Conferences. He may not be as able or eloquent in the pulpit as others, even as the pastor; but he is entitled to every recognition as one of the accredited ministers of the church, and his ministry will do those good who will receive it with readiness of mind. Every pastoral charge, preachers and people, however capable the former, or intelligent and pious the latter, need the visitations and ministries of a competent presiding elder four times a year, embracing a Saturday and Sunday each time, besides his assistance in protracted meetings and other special occasions. Therefore, the districts should be so arranged that each Quarterly Conference can have, as far as practicable, the benefit of Saturday and Sunday services. "Gilderoy" truly says that "this is an age of small farms and intensive farming—not intensive overseeing."

Now, let us apply this to the matter in hand, and have smaller districts and more intensive presiding-elder work in his various functions, and the good resulting therefrom will be manifest. We have, for illustration, the new district made a few years ago. It is composed largely of border territory from other large districts which could not receive the personal attention of the presiding elders that was needed, and, consequently, never developed much. Now, that same territory is receiving two or three times as much presiding-elder presence and service as ever before, and the results are seen in a gratifying development of interest in church work.

I voice the sentiment of many—and, I believe, a large majority of the preachers and members in our Conference—when I say that we can not dispense with even one of our districts without detriment to the work. We have not "too many men employed" in the presiding eldership. Some of them may be receiving more money than is necessary to run their part of "the machine," but that is with them and those whose business it is to fix their salary; and some of them may not be measuring up to the full stature of their official position—that may be looked after by the Bishop and his advisers. But, we need the full number that we now have—one more would be better—and that many can be found who will be worth to our work all that they will cost; men who will magnify their office and make it honorable by all diligence and faithfulness in being up to date with fresh sermons and in line with the progressive work of the church.

"Gilderoy" says: "It is not proposed to do without him or to minify him, but rather to increase his dignity and the importance of his work by enlarging his sphere of operations."

I don't see that the size of the "sphere of operations" would affect the dignity. They have only so much of that in reality anywhere you place them, and the work can not be made any more important by increase of sphere; but the larger the "sphere" the more they are spread out, and they may be spread so thin as to make no impress. Let us have the sphere of reasonable size, and a competent man in it to do intense work, and let self and dignity take care of themselves, and all will go well and prosper.

Mississippi Conference—Should Be Redistricted.

There are in the Mississippi Conference eight small and weak presiding elder's districts. Two of these, we think, should be absorbed, leaving us but six. This, of course, would make the districts much stronger and, doubtless, more satisfactory. For many years, up to two years ago, we had but seven districts, and nearly all of one of them was thrown into the Louisiana Conference. The proposed change would make the six districts little more than their former size. Of the eight presiding elders, some of them—about half—are comfortably supported, others meagerly, some but partially. This arrangement would give full support to all. The financial pressure, which has been general since the districts were cut down in size, has made the increased assessments on the pastoral charges much more keenly felt than they otherwise would have been. The change would relieve this trouble and arrest the friction which it has produced in many parts of our Conference. The change would also give us two of our strongest men for pastoral work.

There are no difficulties, geographical or otherwise, to hinder this arrangement. The law, which presents more than twenty appointments in a districts, could be easily met. We have at present one hundred and twenty-one appointments. Twenty to each of the six districts would give us one hundred and twenty. One of the above could be bracketed; several of them might be without injury. Or better: If there should not be too many men to provide for, a dozen of the appointments, if necessary, could be absorbed, and, in this way, give pastors a comfortable support; whereas, some of them have been so pressed as to render them very uncomfortable and more or less inefficient. The fact is, that without better support many of our pastors will be forced to locate or to undertake something else in connection with their pastoral work. In many cases the addition of another church would give the necessary relief.

This change can be made by absorbing the Vicksburg and Enterprise districts. Any man acquainted with the territory and appointments can, by a few minutes' study, see that there is no difficulty in the way. Vicksburg, with the appointments north of it, could be put either in the Jackson or Natchez district. Let the other of these two districts take the appointments between Jackson and Harriston. We know no other difficulty, an explanation of which need be suggested.

With this arrangement there would be appointments near the boundaries of each of the districts which could be placed as desired to strengthen and evenly balance the work of the districts. With it there would not be a weak district in the Conference. With this arrangement it would not be necessary for one presiding elder to pass through the district of another, as is now the case. Of the six districts, all of them, Meridian excepted, would have comfortable parsonages, and all of the parsonages, with possibly one exception, would be centrally and admirably located. For the Meridian district, with the increased strength which the strong appointments down the Mobile and Ohio would give, a parsonage might be easily secured. For district travel the railroads throughout the Conference could not be better utilized.

Correspondence.

To the Presiding Elders of the North Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: Did you get a letter about June 3 from Rev. Walter R. Lambuth reading about like this?

DEAR BRETHREN: We would respectfully call your attention to the mass meetings provided for in the Discipline, page 151, paragraph 357, and ask you to see that they are held in every charge in your district, and, if practicable, at every church in the charge. We mail you under another cover sample copies of a suggestive program prepared for these occasions. They will be furnished to any of your preachers desiring to use them at 8 cents per dozen, or 50 cents per hundred.

We would further request that you see to the appointment of a good man to canvass your district for the Review of Missions. You are aware of the necessity of a united and systematic effort to bring up full collections for missions.

WALTER R. LAMBUTH, Sec.

I'm very sure each presiding elder got a letter very much like this. But what of the results? You may have given earnest heed to this request. If not, 'tis to be hoped that now the protracted meeting season is about over, that you, as presiding elders, will call the attention of your preachers to paragraph 357, which says: "It shall be the duty of the preacher in charge to hold missionary mass meetings in every church in his work, to circulate missionary literature, and to seek in every way the education and inspiration of his people concerning the salvation of the heathen."

Of course, the proceeds of these meetings go towards paying your regular assessment. Hold the mass meeting, distribute the missionary literature, and you will soon find that you have more missionary sentiment in your work than ever before, and you will report more money even from the hardest circuits and missions than ever before. Intelligent sentiment should always go before a collection. Will be a hard, dry pull when there is no sentiment, and a spasmodic giving when there is no intelligent sentiment.

Write to Rev. Walter R. Lambuth, Nashville, Tenn., for programs and missionary literature; and if you, as pastors, do not like the programs, or if 'tis not practicable to use it, get up one of your own—one you and your people can use. Somehow, somewhere, get up a missionary stir.

Brethren, don't rest too long after your protracted meetings, and be sure you don't let your people rest too long. Keep the fire burning. Don't lose faith in yourself, your congregation and your God to overcome the greatest difficulties. "Christ shall reign."

W. S. SHIPMAN,
Sec. and Treas. Board of Missions.

Notes by the Way.

MR. EDITOR: A communication from Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, in your issue of Sept. 3, is worthy of reading and rereading by all our Mississippi Methodists. Loyalty to our institutions is the best endowment we can ask.

"Jean Paul," also, makes some happy hits in his article on "Education."

As the season advances and the time for opening approaches, the prospects of Millsaps grows better and better. The indications now are for a full attendance. Parents sending sons should secure board as near the college as possible, that they may have the more direct oversight of the faculty and assistance from the professors.

A more quiet, peaceable and religious community than that at Millsaps College I do not know. The new building has suffered some delay, but is going up very satisfactorily. A very ornate building, and wisely planned for the purposes for which intended. Equipment fund growing, but yet short of demands.

ON THE CAMPUS.

A day's rest on the campus gives me opportunity to consider our surroundings. A quiet little village of eighteen or twenty families, away from the dust and noise of the city, and with all the quiet and comfort of the country, make it a delight to one who would rest for a while. A community of Christian families, such associations are calculated to develop and strengthen the good in any young man, and discourage the evil. A more home-like, pious community I have not found.

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

Sept 3, 1896.

We have had some sharp struggles, on this side of the ocean, with horse-racing and its attendant evils, and have been, in some respects, successful. The good people of New Jersey had a long battle with the jockeys and their patrons, but the battle ended with a victory for the right, and now throughout the State there is comparative quiet both on the Sabbath day and on the week day, and betting books with their owners no longer thrust themselves upon the observation of the respectable classes in the cars and at the ferries. Those who want such things must hunt for them. Meanwhile, the races in England seem to be declining in attractiveness. "Derby Day" is still on the fashionable calendar, and some men, like Lord Rosebery, may win great stakes, but the attendance is falling off. The Epsom railway traffic tells the tale in figures. The receipts have fallen off fully one-third since the year 1884. There is still a great gathering, but it grows smaller instead of larger. It is no longer a national holiday.—Presbyterian.

ONE STEP AT A TIME.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

There's a mine of comfort for you and me
In the saying
We were tenderly taught, at the mother's knee,
In happy days of youth
It is, what if the road be long and steep,
And we too weak to climb;
Or, what though the darkness gather deep
We take one step at a time.

A single step and again a step,
Until by safe degrees,
The milestones passed, we win at last
Home, when the king shall please.
And the strangest thing is often this,
That the briery, tangled spots,
Which cumber our feet, should be thick and sweet,
With our Lord's forget-me-nots

It matters little the pace we take,
If we journey sturdily on,
With the burden-bearer's steady gait,
Till the day's last hour is gone;
Or if, with the dancing feet of the child,
Or the halting step of age,
We keep the goal, in the eye of the soul,
Through the years of our pilgrimage.

And yet in the tramp of appointed days,
This thing must sometime be,
That we falter and pause and bewildered gaze,
For the road has led to the sea.
And the foreman's tread is on one track
As once on the booming coast,
Where the children of Israel, looking back,
Saw Pharaoh's threatening host.

Then clear from the skies our leader's voice,
"Go forward!" bids us dare,
Whatever we meet, with fearless feet,
And the might of trustful prayer,
So, ever advancing day by day,
In the Master's strength sublime,
Even the lame shall take the prey,
Marching one step at a time.

And what of the hours when, hand and foot,
We are bound and laid aside;
With the fevered vein and the throbbing pain,
And the world at its low ebb tide?
And what of our day of the broken heart,
When all that our eyes can see
Is the vacant space where the vanished face
Of our darling used to be?

Then, waiting and watching and almost spent,
Comes peace from the Lord's own hand,
In his blessed will, if we rest content,
Though we can not understand.
And we gather anew our courage and hope,
For the road so rough to climb,
With trial and peril we well may cope
One single step at a time.

Sam Jones Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me a few thoughts in regard to the Sam Jones Camp Meeting, which closed a pleasant and, I trust, profitable session on Monday last, on which day the annual meeting of the association was held, its officers elected (same as before, except one member of the Executive Committee), and reports received of the year's transactions. It is a matter for gratulation that the association is now under regular charter, and, per consequence, relieved from the friction of former days. There is now no obstacle to the success and prosperity of the association in its high and holy mission of trying to win souls for Christ. That such is the sole desire of all its officers and members, from President Jones down to the humblest member, I have no doubt.

The meeting just closed was quiet, and without any special demonstration, but I am sure that the great day of final accounts will show that much good was done, and that the cause and kingdom of God were advanced thereby. During the first days of the meeting there was a dearth of preachers, and there seemed to be a feeling of unrest, a sort of looking for and expecting the usual conflict of authority, which has been, in the past, a fruitful source of discord and hindrance to the work of the Lord. It is especially pleasant to remember that this year there was no quarreling or bickering between the authorities of the church and the association. The presiding elder, Rev. L. S. Jones, was present for two days only, having engagements in another part of his district.

Bro. Job Roberts, of Jackson, La., preached the opening sermon on Friday night, Aug. 21, and it was a good one, as were the several others he preached before leaving on Monday. I am no prophet, nor the son of a prophet, and yet I shall miss my guess if my young friend, Job, does not take a front seat in the ministry of the M. E. Church, if spared, which God grant he may be.

Bro. Holloman came on Saturday, and did some effective and most excellent preaching up to the time of his departure, which was on the twenty-sixth.

Monday brought Bros. W. B. Lewis and H. M. Ellis. Bro. Ellis remained to the close, and did the best and most effective work of the meeting. Indeed, in quite a long and extensive experience in protracted meetings, I have never seen a more zealous, consecrated, earnest worker in revival services than is Bro. Ellis. His method of altar work, and his persistence in completing a work when once begun, [illegible] old-fashioned Methodism and the "old-time religion."

Bro. Jno. A. B. Jones, president of the association, came on Wednesday, and upon him and Bro. Ellis devolved the conduct of the meeting from that time until its close. Faithfully and well was the duty performed, and quite a number of souls found peace with God at the altar during the week. The weather, though very warm a part of the time, was exceptionally good.

Death came to one of the tents and transferred to that "upper and better country" a devoted wife and an affectionate and beloved mother, Sister Robinson, who died, after a lingering and painful illness, on Sunday, Aug. 30, at 4 o'clock P. M.

The attendance was quite large, and the order good. That the Committee on Public Worship were unhappy in their selection of preachers to whom special invitations were extended, was amply demonstrated by the fact that but one of the entire list made his appearance. The others sent in excuses. Right here I desire to remark that the custom of using camp meetings as a theatre for the display of big ministerial guns is an outrage on the rights of the people as well as to the local clergy of the district in which the camp meeting is held. These meetings are peculiarly the meetings of the people, and in the selection of preachers their wishes should be consulted and fully respected. Had the Committee on Public Worship invited the preachers of the district, and those in charge of adjacent appointments, there would have been plenty of preachers to do the work, the people would have been better pleased, more good would have been done, and the humbler preachers of the Word would have felt that they had not been snubbed in the interest of outsiders.

Another important matter is the hymnology now most in vogue in our revival meetings. Instead of using the Methodist hymn book and those old-fashioned tunes, the singing of which has resulted in placing Methodism on the high spiritual plane she has so long occupied, every little evangelist that comes along is furnished with a new "song book," which includes about one grain of gospel melody to a bushel of chaff and doggerel! Such being the case, at each camp meeting it is necessary to employ an expert to teach the "choir" the new songs and tunes, thus effectually eliminating the element of congregational singing which has always been a power for great good in our connection. If these new-fangled tunes and alleged hymns had in them a modicum of the merit, as gospel songs, possessed by our old-time revival songs and tunes, the case would be different; but they have not. And why sane men should substitute this trash for the gospel as sung by the Wesleys, Watts, Doddridge, et als, is more than I can imagine. The idea of a solo, duet, trio, quartette or quintette at a camp meeting! Its absurdity is only equaled by the customary jingles used on such occasions! Think of a song, entitled "Beautiful Hands," being sung as a solo at a camp meeting! It will be a notable day when Methodists have grace enough to return to the hymns, tunes, class meetings and other peculiarities of primitive Methodism, and which have made it the mighty power for good that it has been up to the recent past. There are many reasons why Methodists should love camp meetings, chief among them being the mighty works that have been, and are occasionally being done at them, the friendships that are formed and perpetuated there, the communion of saints, and the annual reunion of these who love each other.

Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

There is another growing evil that I wish to refer to, and that is the indiscriminate and outlandish use of the word "Amen!" On several occasions, at the late meeting, I felt constrained to move out of hearing of some zealous brother who persisted in the use of this word, without rhyme or reason, being just as likely to say "Amen" to the sentiment, "The wicked shall be turned into hell," etc., as to, "Lord, revive us!" I do love to hear a hearty "Amen," and other of the responses peculiar to Methodism, when they fit in and are appropriate where used; but these irregular, sort of perfunctory "amens," "glories," etc., mar instead of beautifying a service.

May God be with, and bless, and keep all the dear friends we have met and made at Sam Jones Camp Meeting!—may his benediction rest upon each household!—may the pathway of each one of the participants in the last meeting grow brighter and better as we near the heavenly city!—and may we finally be reunited, an unbroken company, in our Father's house! Amen!

Crystal Springs Camp Meeting.

We have just got home from Crystal Springs Camp Meeting. It was a glorious time—a first-class camp meeting. The preaching was equal to any I ever heard. Bro. Stewart and his father-in-law, Dr. Sullins, are masters of their work. Their preaching was both intellectual and spiritual, the results fully satisfactory. The congregation was full from the beginning all through to the end. Any way, there were people enough tented on the ground to make a large congregation, and the attention and behavior could not be better. I am told there are about one hundred tents, so called; but some of them are good two-story buildings, and one of the finest restaurants outside of a city, and from two to three families in one tent. The meeting closed the second Sunday night at a late hour after one of the most awful and terrific sermons preached by Bro. Stewart I ever heard on the rich man and Lazarus. It sent conviction to the unconverted; the number of young men that pressed to the altar and pledged to reform their lives and join the church the first opportunity I never saw before. About three hundred pledged themselves to join the church the first chance. While there was no great enthusiasm during the meeting, likely it was the best it was so. I was so unwell I could not attend the services regularly, but any way the Crystal Springs Camp Meeting for 1896 was a great success, notwithstanding the fears of many that the Chautauqua would be a great drawback to our camp meetings at that place. The lake built by the Chautauqua was quite an attraction with our up-country people.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

THE UNKNOWN SINGER.

BY FANNIE MINOR MONTGOMERY.

"Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me."

A singer sang by the wayside,
A song that was brave and gay;
By the dusty highway waiting,
That long, long Summer's day.

He sang of the blessed sunshine
That was ripening fruit and grain;
Of the woods, and winds, and streamlets,
Of clouds that would burst in rain.

He told of creation's beauties,
Of the watchful, patient care,
Of the boundless, tender mercies
That are resting everywhere.

He sang when his heart was heavy,
He sang if his heart was light,
From the morning's dewy freshness
Through the noon to darkening night.

Of the many busy travelers
Who along that highway fared,
There were very few who listened,
There were fewer still who cared.

But the Lord of all things hearkened
To that singer's loving lays,
And set apart for his glory
The one who had offered praise.

Miss Eva Louise Yeates.

BORDER-LAND. VICTORY OF FAITH.

Less than a year ago Eva was a member of an interesting circle of friends in Starkville, Miss. Young herself, liberally educated, endowed with attractive graces of person and character, her life was full of hope and promise. It was known that her health had been failing for several months, yet it came as a sad surprise and a shock to the community when it was said that "Eva was dead." It was difficult to realize that she had gone from earth, and would no more brighten, by her joyous life, the family home and the society of her friends. Some things in the short course of her life suggest more than a passing notice.

She was born June 22, 1876, and died May 17, 1896. She was of excellent and large family connections, being the daughter of Dr. E. D. and Mrs. Janie Yeates, of Starkville, Miss. From childhood she had been often and intimately associated with the family of the writer. Gentle, affectionate, and confiding, she grew up into lovely young womanhood. She cherished no malice, and was not given to evil speaking. Beautiful in person, she was not haughty nor respecting, she was not haughty nor proud. Her mother was her most intimate friend and confidant. Popular in society by reason of her amiable and attractive qualities, she made friends among young ladies, and won the admiration of young gentlemen. She was educated in Starkville, and at the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus.

She joined the M. E. Church, South, when a child, in her tenth year. During the brief pastorate of Rev. J. H. Scruggs, an invitation being given one Sunday night, Eva went forward alone before a large congregation and gave her name to the church. She had not made known her purpose to anyone. It was a surprise even to her parents. How true it is that in our homes, in the Sunday-school and all around us, the fields are white unto harvest. Let parents, teachers and pastors be wise to discern this precious harvest and garner it for the Lord.

Although in after life she was induced at times, under strong and peculiar influences, to participate in worldly amusement not in harmony with the requirements of the church, she yet seemed to have no special fondness for such things, and never lost attachment for the church. She gave expression to this strong attachment, and always, when present at communion service, partook of the sacrament.

The manner and circumstances of her death were remarkable. As her health failed, and she steadily grew worse, she became impressed with the belief that her life was nearing its close; but the thought of death came to her without apparently startling effect. Her mind seemed to dwell much upon the subject, and she was constantly referring to her death, always, however, in a sweet, calm, undisturbed way.

About two weeks before her death she sat out on the front gallery all alone during the greater part of one forenoon. Going into the room, she said: "Mother, I have been out on the gallery a long time by myself, ...and everything was so sweet and peaceful I felt like it would have been a good time to go."

A week later they were talking of dresses, when she turned to her mother, and said: "Mama, when I die, bury me in pure white."

A few extracts from a letter to a much-loved uncle, written about a week before she died, will show how calmly she looked upon death, and her confident, trusting faith in Christ. Writing, she said: "This, the fifth Sunday, I have been from church, and I can not spend it better than writing to you.....I feel that this is the last letter I shall ever write..... I was reading the May Queen this morning, and I could not help but apply most of it to myself.....I may get well, but I doubt it. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and I am not afraid to die, but it is hard to die so young."

Until within a very few days of her death she kept up, declining to take her bed, receiving her friends and visiting them as her failing strength would permit. Thus, with patient fortitude, without complaint or murmur, and even with cheerfulness, did she bear up under the sufferings of wasting disease. So gentle, and yet so strong! Without shrinking or fear, she was passing through the "border-land" between two worlds. On the one side was the world where she had spent her joyous life of almost twenty Summers; on the other side was the spirit-world now coming into view. Her simple faith in the blessed Savior gave her the victory over this world and over the grave, and enabled her to claim the world beyond as her far better inheritance, even a heavenly.

On Sunday morning early, the day of her death, her father told her he was afraid she could not live, and asked if she was ready. She replied: "Yes, papa; but pray for me all day, that I may not be mistaken, for I feel just like I was going over there," pointing in the direction of a neighbor's house across the street. About twenty minutes before twelve o'clock that night she ceased from suffering and fell on sleep.

She had selected as hymns to be used at her funeral service, "I would not live alway," "Come, ye disconsolate," and, "Asleep in Jesus." On the afternoon of the next day a large congregation of sorrowing friends attended her funeral at the Methodist Church. The services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. E. Thomas, while the choir sang the beautiful hymns of her own selection. How tender the compassion of our Lord! How gently he leads his people, or bears them on eagles' wings!

"We shall obtain delivering grace
In the distressing hour."

"Let Us Not Be Weary."

"It's so hot; let's disband until the weather is cooler," said a sister a few evenings since as she came into the meeting. She might have been asked if anything else that she knew of had suspended operations because of the hot weather. Men of every calling, profession and trade follow their usual avocations and ply their accustomed trades, and the young people were never so persistent in their demands for social entertainment. There has been an entertainment in town every night for a week, the preparation for which has made much work for older members of many households. One young girl, totally dilapidated from this same week's dissipations, said, "My feet are so sore I can scarcely walk;" yet on she went. Even while I write clouds of dust rise on the air and settle only to rise again as another carriage of pleasure seekers pass; not all young people, either. Middle-aged and grey-haired fathers and mothers are among them seeking a day's pleasure ten miles away. My sisters, does heat and drouth and dust tell more quickly on the worker in the Lord's vineyard than on others? While they are transacting business or seeking pleasure with untiring zest, with no thought of cessation, must the W. F. M. S. division of the Lord's army stack arms and halt in the shade for rest? Do God's commands to go forward, his promises to sustain, his exceeding great reward, hold out before us, fail to arouse in us the same degree of enthusiasm and energy that moves the seeker after pleasure? Let this not be so. While these blister their feet and wear the roses out of their cheeks, we should be mindful of the command and promise: "Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not." Take up the battle anew, gird on the armor, and push the conquest for King Immanuel. Like Napoleon's drummer-boy, we must know no retreat, but beat a charge that shall wake the dead. Even Summer heat and dust may be overcome, and we may rise to a more blessed and loyal plane of Christian service, and the cause of the Master be much advanced before the bracing Autumn weather, for which we sigh, and during which we promise better service shall have come.

Especially is this a time for gleaning missionary information. Where there is opportunity for nothing else, we can read, and as we learn of the need of perishing millions, and hear the message that comes back from the workers, "Send more men," your love and zeal will rise to a heat more intense than that of August days, and certainly more enduring.

One of our workers in Brazil speaks of a little fellow who wanted to know something about the little Chinese (?) children in her school. You who read may smile at this, but there are older ones among us who seem to be little wiser than this child. If you haven't missionary reading, subscribe for some. There are few among us who can not afford to take the W. M. Advocate. Get a plan for securing the $100,000 and 100,000 members to working in your brain, and a feeling of responsibility for them in your heart, and this scheme, born of love and longing for the advancement of our Master's cause, will not fail because of your lack of information or of effort. The hot weather need not interfere with our prayer. Pray for the missionaries and their work. Pray for the church at home, that a baptism of the Spirit may beget love and zeal and liberality to such an extent that we may conscientiously and successfully pray, "Thy kingdom come."

The tenth annual report of the W. P. and H. M. Society shows such an advance in all departments of the work, and such immense possibilities for future work—extended and developed, as it has been, by the noble women of the Central Committee, and their co-workers—that truly it may be said, "Knowledge is the mother of zeal; lack of knowledge, its greatest foe."

Ten years ago it was deemed advisable by the General Conference to organize a "Woman's Department of Church Extension" for the purpose of aiding in the building of parsonages. By means of this organization—known later as the W. P. and H. M. Society—church statistics show that during the eight years following the establishment of this means of help, "one-half as many parsonages were built as had been built in the whole one hundred years prior to this movement."

The ninth annual report was still more encouraging, and the record for the year 1896 is an improvement all along the line, in numbers, interest, zeal, and money. Parsonages have been aided to the amount of nearly $10,000; supplies of food and clothing sent to the families of our frontier preachers; schools established for the mountain people of North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Georgia, for the Cubans in Florida, and city missions organized in the various cities to teach the ignorant and help the fallen from the slums of vice and crime, from whence thousands are led to Christ and helped to live better and purer lives. Who can estimate the power for good exerted by these consecrated Christian women, or realize the result of their labors? Only when "faith is lost in sight," and "they that lead many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." Dr. Atkins said at the convention in Asheville: "This W. P. and H. M. Society is the unified efforts of consecrated Southern womanhood against all the devilry of humanity. If the efforts of this combination, striking at the foundations of evil by saving the homes, fail, then the gospel must fail. This complex Christian work, so mighty, so holy, so woman-like, by its nature and hers, is specially and peculiarly the work suited to our women."

That God's blessing has rested on this work from the beginning to the present hour is plainly manifest, and in this decennial year of its existence the following resolution was adopted by the Central Committee: "In view of the fact that this year marks the first decade of our existence as an organization, we will call upon our women throughout the church to celebrate this year by earnest effort to raise $20,000 for the general work."

No labor for the Master can be more noble and acceptable than educating the ignorant, building homes for the preachers, and bringing the glad news of salvation into the desolate homes of poverty and guilt and sorrow.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. H Rogers, Walthall, Miss., Sept. 4: "I have closed all of my protracted meetings. Great good was accomplished for Christ. About two hundred souls were converted to God; one hundred and twelve accessions to our church. Thank God for this wonderful victory. We were ably assisted by Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss. Success to the ADVOCATE."

Rev. M. L. White, P. C., Montrose, Miss., Sept. 3: "Just closed meeting at Mt. Zion. Bros. J. H. Evans and L. J. Jones rendered splendid help. Church greatly revived; twelve accessions to church. The church house has been repaired, with new weatherboarding, new pulpit, and altar; now ready to paint it. Will have better benches soon. So you see these people have something to get happy about."

Rev. J. R. Roy, Columbia circuit, Columbia, La., Sept. 4: "Hard times is the cry here, and with some it is true. Notwithstanding all this, we have had a good year. We have lived and have built a nice parsonage at Columbia. We have the best parsonage in the district, I think (the district parsonage not excepted). We have held only one protracted meeting. This was a grand success. The humble, consecrated R. C. Grace, of the Olla circuit, did the preaching. His preaching was pure and simple, so that all might feast. We had seventeen additions to the church, all on profession of faith. Have four meetings to hold yet. Pray for us."

W. H. Underwood, Magnolia, Aug. 31: "Our protracted meeting at Live Oak began on the twenty third instant, and continued five days. Our faithful pastor, Bro. Carroll, did the preaching the first two days, when Bro. Ed. T. Denson came to his aid, preaching, praying, and singing in great power. Live Oak circuit was Bro. Denson's first pastoral charge, and he, by his deep piety, zealous and faithful work, greatly endeared himself to all the people. The visible results of the meeting are fifteen accessions, many conversions, and the entire membership greatly revived. There were some persons converted and added to the membership for whom the church had been praying for years. Other nominal members were gloriously converted, and have gone earnestly to work. A young men's prayer meeting has been organized, from which we expect much fruit. To God be all the praise. We ask the prayers of all former pastors."

Rev. J. A. Wilson, P. C., Salem circuit, Smyrna, Miss., Aug. 29: "The Lord has given us the victory. Thank God for his omnipresence and power. We have just finished our fourth revival meeting on our work, as follows: At Salem we had a glorious meeting, beginning the fourth Sunday in July, with increasing interest at every service. Estimated results: Church greatly revived, twenty conversions, seven accessions. Two more of the converted number are going to join at my next appointment. Rev. J. C. Park, of Kosciusko, assisted us three days. He was filled with the Spirit and power. His sermons were full of soul-stirring thoughts and could only be surpassed by Bishop Galloway. At Smyrna a meeting beginning the first Sunday in August. Here the Methodists and Cumberland Presbyterians worship together in the same house. We had a union meeting. Estimated results: Part of the church revived. Brethren, help us to build a church here at Smyrna. We have asked many of you to help us, and it seems our asking has been in vain. At Tabernacle we began a revival service the second Sunday in August, and, not being able to do the preaching, closed the meeting on the following Wednesday night with about twenty-five penitents at the altar and one accession. The church was greatly revived. After a week's rest we began a glorious revival at Macedonia. The Lord was with us from the very beginning. About seventeen converted or reclaimed, five accessions, and the church wonderfully revived. Rev. W. A. Bowlin, from the Rural Hill circuit, assisted me two and a half days, rendering valuable service. Bro. Bowlin preached three grand sermons during this time. He is full of the Methodist fire. Souls were awakened and were found appealing to God for redemption. To God be all the glory! Pray for us."

Rev. D. Scarborough: "We are about our Master's business on the Neshoba circuit. This work consists of six churches, with a membership of 540 members, and embraces almost half of this county (Neshoba). We preach twice every Sunday in the month except one. The Lord is with us, and is graciously blessing our poor efforts. Our protracted meetings were seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The first one held was at Hester's Chapel, beginning on Saturday before the second Sunday in July. Here we were assisted by Rev. A. T. Bell, who preached the Word with power and earnestness. About twenty conversions, thirteen accessions, and reconciliations between offended parties, were the results. A weekly prayer meeting was also established. We next planted our battery at Cook's Chapel, where, with the efficient help of Rev. G. H. Thompson, we fought the devil for five days. There were many difficulties in the way, on account of which the meeting was not satisfactory. The Word was preached faithfully, and, we feel, will accomplish good. One member came to us from the Congregational Methodist Church. We went from this church to Pine Grove, where we began on the fourth Sunday in July. The meeting lasted four days, and was blest of the Lord. We are indebted to Rev. J. C. Long for three earnest sermons. Penitents were at the altar, but, so far as we could tell, there were no conversions. The church seemed to be revived. The next meeting was held at North Bend, beginning on the first Sunday in August. This community was ready for a revival. The day before we completed the hull of a new church, which is of larger dimensions than the old one. There had been perfect unity among the brethren in building the new church, and, therefore, they were in a good condition for the Lord to bless them. The meeting lasted five days. Rev. J. C. Long was with us on Sunday, and, with the exception of two sermons by Rev. S. Q. Shepperd, a Baptist brother, we did all of the preaching. Bro. J. A. Burton, an exhorter, rendered appreciative help. There were a number of conversions and twelve accessions. We left this church on Thursday evening, and went to Mars Hill, where we began a five days' meeting the following Saturday. Here, too, the brethren had made sacrifices for the Lord in order to ceil their church, and, therefore, were prepared to receive the gospel. Here we had a good meeting. Three family altars were erected, and all promised to live better lives. There were no accessions. Rev. C. McDonald, of Morton, Miss., did all of the preaching except one sermon, which was delivered by Rev. F. B. Ormond. We praise the Lord for what we have accomplished up to date, and trust him for yet greater things."

Rev. Irvin Miller, Walnut Grove, Miss., Sept. 3: "I am filling three appointments on the Carthage circuit this year. I also preach at Harperville once a month. I have held three protracted meetings, viz: At Harperville, Singleton, and Rocky Point. At Harperville we held a union meeting with the Congregational Methodists and the Cumberland Presbyterians. Bro. Ballow, pastor of the Congregational, and Bro. Millen, pastor of the Cumberland Church, assisted in the meeting. Bro. C. McDonald was with us from Monday till Friday, and preached with more unction and power of the Holy Spirit than I ever heard him. Our presiding elder, Bro. Simmons, preached two sermons for us, to the edification and delight of all. We had a gracious revival, though not a large number of accessions. We organized a Methodist Episcopal Church with sixteen members, and it was attached to the Forest and Morton circuit by the presiding elder, who was present when the organization was made. Congregations increased, and the interest grew to the end. I regard this as a very important point, and I believe in a few years we will have a large and flourishing organization here. This is the place where Harperville College is located, and I think no village of its size excells Harperville in the intelligence and moral status of its population. At Singleton we had a splendid meeting. No ministerial help. We expected Bro. J. R. Hays, but his family were sick. Christians were abundantly blessed and 'built up in their most holy faith.' Congregations were overflowing all the time. Our Baptist friends attended in large numbers, and assisted with their prayer and songs, and rejoiced with us in the love of God. Five accessions to the church. At Rocky Point we had a glorious, old-fashioned revival of religion. Christians of every name and denomination were brought nearer to God, and caused to love him more. Many shouts of praise went up to God and the Lamb. In this revival I was reminded of my early Christian life in my old native State (Kentucky). Again I had to conduct the meeting alone, Bro. Hays not having reached me; but God was with us, and blessed the people. At this point and at Singleton I only had the preaching to do. The brethren conducted the prayer and experience meetings, and the people did the singing (the best I have heard in years). Five accessions to the church here. At this place and at Singleton they have organized singing classes, and the young people all sing (at church as well as in the class). We have one more meeting to hold, at Liberty, commencing next Saturday. I have preached between thirty and forty sermons in the series of meetings I have held, and am still well and hearty, and ready for work. To God be all the praise."

SAVAGES have healthy children. So-called uncivilized women have no trouble in the bearing of children. They have practically no sickness and comparatively little pain at that time. It is because they live natural lives. It is certainly unnatural that there should be pain and danger attending the greatest and most wonderful function of which a human being is capable. Civilized women are the ones whose lives and training seem to unfit them for the performance of the duties of wifehood and motherhood. However, if they are kept in a perfectly strong and healthy condition during the period of gestation, there is no reason why the coming of baby should be dreaded. Perhaps the greatest usefulness of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is in preparing women for this ordeal. It acts directly on the organs distinctly feminine and makes them strong and healthy. It insures the well-being of both mother and child. Thousands of letters similar to the following have been received:
"I can recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as being far ahead of any other medicine for a woman raising a family. I have three children; for the first two I suffered each time for twelve hours. Before my last child was born, I took 'Favorite Prescription' using only three bottles of it, and when I was confined, I suffered very little, and was in labor only a very short time." Mrs. Nancy J. Porter, of Rodney, Monona Co., Iowa.
Every woman in America ought to have Doctor Pierce's "Common Sense Medical Adviser." It is a handsomely illustrated volume of a thousand and eight pages, containing several chapters devoted entirely to the reproductive physiology of women. "I never can forgive him." Ah! Then you never expect to be forgiven, do you? "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

Instead of dwelling continually upon the sacrifices you have made for Christ, suppose you try for one year the plan of meditating daily upon the blessings you have received from him.

When a doubt arises as to the propriety of a certain course of conduct, instead of asking, "Is there any harm in it?" it would be better if the question were put a little differently, viz.: "Is there any harm in letting it alone?" In many cases this simple change of phrascology would result in great and lasting good.

"Honor the Lord with thy substance" is a divine command, and it applies to the poor as well as the rich, provided they are not so utterly destitute as to be dependent upon others for support. Moreover, it is one of those commands that has a promise connected with it: "So shall thy barns be filled with plenty."

Not only giving, but the manner of giving, counts for something. Some men give in such a way that a man of refined sensibilities dreads to ask them for a donation for any cause, no matter how good. Others make you feel that you have conferred a favor on them by giving them an opportunity to contribute. "The Lord loves a cheerful giver," and men are like the Lord in that respect.

It would be both interesting and instructive if statistics could be gathered showing how many Methodist people are lost to the church annually through a change of residence. New-comers in a community, especially in a city, need attention which oftentimes they do not receive. If no Methodist calls upon them but the pastor, and they go to church several times without receiving any recognition on the part of church members, they drift off to other churches, or else cease to attend church at all.

Miracles Prohibited by Law.

Shrader, "the divine healer," arrived in this city a few days ago and began business. New Orleans being a veritable Paradise for humbugs, he was in a fair way to eclipse his previous record when, lo! he was interdicted by the courts. Under a statute which requires a State license as a prerequisite to the practice of the healing art, Dr. T. S. Kennedy, president of the State Board of Medical Examiners, procured an injunction restraining him from the further exercise of his "divine" calling. All honor to Dr. Kennedy! If he had pursued this course a year ago, when a miserable fraud was performing miracles here daily by the score, the citizens of Mississippi and Louisiana would have been several thousand dollars better off than they are now.

Decidedly Rich.

There appeared in the Times-Democrat, on the ninth, an article headed "The Sunday Law a Failure," and signed "A Sufferer." We quote as follows:

"New Orleans, Sept. 8, 1896.

"To the Editor of the Times-Democrat:

"I ask your indulgence and space in order to show how the Sunday law is a perfect farce. Royal and St. Charles street saloons have been hermetically closed since the pretended enforcement of this obnoxious law. These saloons have heavy expenses. They have all run through the past Summer with a very heavy loss. I am confident some of the proprietors have suffered a loss of $10 a day for the past four months. This Fall and Winter is the only salvation for them, while the city is filled with strangers, to catch up on their losses and make some money to carry them through next Summer. The saloons on St. Charles street depend on the patrons of the two theatres during the Winter season for their support. Now, under this law they are deprived of the best day in the week. The theatres are packed almost to suffocation on Sunday nights. The male portion of the audience at intermission desire some kind of refreshments: saloons are closed; no chance for a glass of beer."

This writer, a saloon keeper, admits that his bar room and all others in a certain part of the city are "hermetically closed" on Sunday, which before the enforcement of the Sunday law was the most profitable day of the week. Now, it seems to us that according to his own admission the Sunday law is anything else but a failure in his section of the city. The closing of the saloons is the very purpose of the law. If, as this writer states, there are some sections of the city in which the law is not so well enforced, that is no reason why all attempt at enforcement should be given up, as under the old regime. Let the police look after those saloons which are still defying the law and close them as "hermetically" as they have closed that operated by "A Sufferer," and all will be well. Society will gain in a multitude of ways, albeit the saloon keepers have to submit to a reduction of revenue. The world was not made in a day, and it is impossible all at once to change the habits of thousands of men who have been accustomed all through life to defy law with impunity. A good beginning has been made, and we are sure that the city authorities will continue their present policy, and will receive the plaudits of all good citizens.

Educational Statistics.

The Board of Education of the M. E. Church, South, has compiled a table of educational statistics which is worthy of attention. The table is not complete, several of our schools having failed to make the reports asked for. But even in their incomplete form our educational statistics are decidedly gratifying. We have ninety-four colleges with an attendance last year of 16,011—an average of one hundred and seventy pupils to each college. We are not doing for the cause of higher education one-half of what we ought to do; but it will doubtless be a surprise to many of our people that we are doing so much. These figures will make a good gag to put in the mouths of religionists of a certain class who are continually prating about the ignorance of Methodists. When one of these fellows comes around it would be well to ask him how many colleges his church has, and then give him our statistics, and also those of the M. E. Church, which are as follows: Number of colleges, 202; number of pupils, 42,249.

Light in the East.

So far as our memory goes, no foreigner who has ever visited the United States has received so much attention from the press as has the distinguished Chinese viceroy, Li Hung Chang. Not only the secular papers, but the church papers of all denominations have teemed with accounts of the various incidents of his visit. Many of them have given whole pages to him. On account of his greatness of character (Gen. Grant regarded him and Bismarck and Gladstone as the three greatest men of the age), as well as on account of his high position, it will doubtless be of interest to our readers to know his opinion of our civilization. Fortunately he gave that opinion in few words at a banquet given in his honor a few days before his departure. He stated that the things which had most impressed him were: "the liberty and freedom enjoyed by the people, the welfare and prosperity in their industrial and commercial pursuits, the characteristics of their classical, historical, and philosophical and poetical literature, the manner of application of the scientific discoveries and inventions for promoting the happiness of mankind and the display of their artistic taste in the architecture of the public buildings, sculpture, and paintings of historical figures and facts," and expressed his purpose of introducing "these very means and ends of civilization into China."

There is no doubt that if he could do so, he would at once make many radical changes in the character of the civilization of his native land; but, of course, the manners and customs of four thousand years can not be changed in a day. But the change will come. Christian civilization is destined to leaven even the huge lump of Chinese conservatism. And we have no doubt that the dawn of the new era will be very greatly hastened by the visit of this illustrous statesman to the great nations of Christendom.

Bank Failures.

Within the last three weeks three national banks have failed in this city—the American, the Union and the Mutual. The Mutual made an entirely honest failure, and it is believed that its depositors will get their money, dollar for dollar. The failure of the other two was due to deep-dyed criminality on the part of their officials or employees. These failures coming in such rapid succession very naturally created a panic, and there would doubtless have been a disastrous run upon many of the banks but for the wise and timely action of the clearing house in limiting the amount to be drawn out on checks by any depositor in any one day to $100. Provision has been made for the issuance of certificates of deposit, by means of which business can be conducted expeditiously without danger to the banks. The panic has now almost passed away, and business moves on in a normal way.

It is a very singular fact that the two banks which have failed through internal crookedness were examined only a few months since by a government expert and pronounced entirely safe, whereas it now turns out that both were at that very time on the verge of utter ruin. Clearly the government needs to devise some new system of bank supervision, or else to be more careful in its selection of examiners. A few more cases of this sort will destroy public confidence in the reports of these government officials.

The Bank of Commerce has also failed, but will meet its obligations in full.

Redeem Our Pledges and Remove Our Reproach.

The General Conference of 1886 adopted the following resolutions concerning Christian education and our educational institutions:

Resolved, That Christian education is one of the greatest instrumentalities that can possibly be employed for the enlightenment, conversion, and salvation of the world.

3. That as a church we will do all in our power to rehabilitate, endow, and place upon a solid basis the institutions of learning within our bounds, so as to place the facilities for complete Christian education within the reach of our people.

This action was taken by a unanimous vote. It records first a solemn conviction of the great value of Christian education, and in the second place it pledges to the public the faith of the church to do all in its power to provide facilities for such education. Upon this profession of faith and pledge of support earnest and true men have undertaken the management of our educational institutions. Have we kept faith with these men and with the general public, or has our action created expectations which have not been realized?

Something has been done toward fulfilling our pledges. Some progress has been made, notably in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Mississippi. But neither in those States, nor in others where less has been done, has the work of the church been equal to the resolutions of the General Conference. In nearly or quite all of the Conferences in which there is a male college an annual collection is taken for its maintenance. (It seems to be generally conceded that the income of our female colleges from their boarding departments and the tuition fees in art and music place them beyond many of the difficulties by which our male colleges are hampered and hindered.) From the Conference collections some sort of support is given to these institutions. But it is quite time that we had inaugurated a more decided advance. Our colleges must be supplied with better buildings and more adequate endowments. Harvard University alone is worth more than all the male and female colleges in Southern Methodism combined. New England has one college for every four thousand square miles, and five dollars worth of property for every man, woman, and child within her borders; while in the South there is one college for every seven thousand square miles, and one dollar's worth of college property per capita.

Every year the inequality in the matter of endowment and equipment between our colleges and the institutions of other sections grows greater. The gifts during the year 1892 to three Northern institutions which we could name, aggregate more than the combined gifts to all our Southern Methodist institutions since the war. With the closing of the year 1892 there was a most notable development of benevolence toward colleges about Chicago and the Northwest. The Armours and Rockefellers gave millions to education with a hearty goodwill.

Our people can not afford to follow so far behind in the educational work of the United States. Considerations of pride, if not of piety and patriotism, should constrain us at once to set about a great educational advance. It is idle to talk of the greater wealth of other sections. That fact is freely and frankly admitted, and the plea in extenuation, which is based on it, answers very well as an excuse for our past negligence in this great matter; but an excuse endows no colleges. Many of our people are poor; but not a few of them are rich. When all is said in our defense that can be said the fact remains that we have not done, and we are not doing, as well as we could. The history that we are making is not creditable, and the provision that we are making for posterity is not wholly inadequate.

In the recorded action of the General Conference we have exhibited the intelligence which sees and the conscience which acknowledges our obligation to do this great work. In the discrepancy between the action of the General Conference and the action of the church we have recorded our own condemnation. It is time now to bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and not plausible excuses for omissions of duty. Our plans should be such as will secure the co-operation of all our people, the poor as well as the rich. It will take the efforts of all to do what is required. The Conference assessments and collections will furnish opportunities for the contributions of those who can not give large amounts. Let these collections be pressed in every charge. But rich men and women must not stop with giving enough to meet the assessments. Many of them singly and alone must give more than any Conference would dare to assess upon all the charges within its jurisdiction. Take, for example, the North Carolina Conference, where an assessment of $5,000 is made for Trinity College. There are scores of Methodists within the bounds of the North Carolina Conferences each of whom should give twice this amount to Trinity College. Or, take the North Georgia Conference, which assesses $4,000 for Emory College, but in which there are not less than one hundred men who are able to give, and who ought to give, Emory College $5,000 or $10,000 apiece. Similar statements might justly be made of the Virginians and Randolph-Macon, of the Holston Methodists and Emory and Henry, of the Alabamians and Southern University, of the Mississippians and Millsaps, and all the rest of our Conferences and colleges. Vanderbilt University should be more perfectly equipped and richly endowed by gifts from every part of the church.

We conclude for the present our observations upon this subject by recording the opinion that the awakening of the church on this great question rests mainly with the preachers. We have never known the church to neglect long any duty upon which the pulpit earnestly insisted. And among the duties of the preachers in charge, as set forth in our book of Discipline, is this:

"To preach upon the subject of Christian education, and to urge upon parents the importance of educating their children, advising them to patronize, as far as practicable, these institutions of learning under the care of our church."—Nashville Advocate.

In the Living Present.

In our Crescent City there are 41 Roman Catholic and 149 Protestant Churches. The latter, though, are mostly small; the former imposingly large. Roman Catholic asylums receive annually from the city $24,375. Protestant institutions of similar character only $2,200. The majority of our city government and nearly all employees are devotees of the Pope. All of the portresses of our public schools and more than half of the teachers are Romanists.

The reason given why Great Britain declines formally to annex Zanzibar is, that in such case it would have to abolish slavery. But without slave labor the clove-plantations would not prove profitable. It is, alas! true that with many Christianity is only a matter of eloquence, which practically the dollar holds chief sway.

The Bishop of Strassburg inveighs against the law making it compulsory for parents to send their children, six to fourteen years old, to school. Analphabetes had never attempted wreckage of State and Church. The reverse is true. We admit that Romanism thrives best in the soil of ignorance.

The Greeks worshiped Pan as one of their gods. He was supposed to create sudden and general fright. He recently swayed his scepter in New Orleans. Within a few weeks four of our banks succumbed to his machinations. Panic scorns reason.

Lafayette, the friend of Washington, remarked: "If ever the freedom of the American people is destroyed, it will be at the hand of the Roman priesthood." It should never be forgotten that the present Pope in one of his encyclia urges the clergy of his church: "To do everything in their power to change the Constitution of these States in accordance with the principles of the true church."

In the Nineteenth Century Father R. F. Clark, S. J., assures "that the secret of Jesuitic influence is found in (1) the care with which the recruits are selected. (2) The length and thoroughness of their training. (3) The spirit of implicit obedience inculcated." He denies that it is one of their tenets that the end sanctifies the means. But what of the Jesuit influence in regard to the Bartholomew massacre?

At a meeting of Christian Alliance at Old Orchard, Maine, on Aug. 18, the fabulous sum of $101,324 was given to the cause of foreign missions. Some gave as much as $25,000. The Western Watchman, of St. Louis (Catholic), denounces the effort, and, under the caption of "Salvation by Hysterics," says that Tetzel's escapades were childplay to the practices of said Alliance. We remember Thomson's lines in his "Seasons:"

"Base envy withers at another's joy,
And hates the excellence it can not reach."

ICH DIEN.

It is a great mistake to suppose that "criticism" and "censoriousness" are synonymous terms. The true critic is not a man who takes a fiendish delight in pointing out flaws. On the contrary, he is a thoroughly fair-minded man who is as ready to recognize merit as to censure the want of it.

Connecticut is trying a new thing in the way of legislation against the sale of liquor on the Sabbath. Hitherto the penalties have always been inflicted solely upon the seller. A law which went into effect at the beginning of August subject the buyer also to punishment. The result is that, when the police make a raid upon a saloon that is breaking the Sabbath law, they take into custody not only the bar keeper, but also the patrons whom he is serving. The penalty imposed upon the drinker in most cases is a fine of a few dollars and costs.

One of our great American railroads recently made a careful investigation to ascertain what proportion of accidents on its various lines are due to the use of intoxicants on the part of its employees. The conclusion reached was that forty per cent. of the accidents are due to the failure in duty on the part of drinking men. It is needless to say that this road is exerting itself vigorously to promote the cause of total abstinence among its employees.

Mansfield Female College Opening.

The forty-fifth session of this time-honored institution of Christian education opened its doors for the reception of pupils on Sept. 2. The opening, as a result of President and Mrs. Sligh's commendable effort and unremitting zeal to make this grand old institution second to none, and the peer of any in the South, was a satisfactory one, notwithstanding the unprecedented drouth which has prevailed in this section and throughout all North Louisiana, with dire consequences. The local patronage of this session compares favorably with that of former openings, while the boarding department exceeds our expectation by a handsome majority.

We are all greatly encouraged at the favorable outlook for our college. President and Mrs. Sligh seem to be fully equal to the great duties and responsibilities incident to college work. Their wonderful adaptability to the work for which nature seems to have fitted them have inspired the friends of Mansfield Female College with hope and renewed activity, and a day pregnant with possibilities of great achievements is dawning upon us. Mansfield College will not prove a laggard in the procession of modern greatness.

President T. S. Sligh, with his characteristic foresight and due appreciation for the comfort of his pupils, has been energetically engaged in the improvement of the college premises ever since our last commencement, making substantial repairs and many needed changes. Every apartment of the spacious college building has been thoroughly renovated under the skillful supervision of Mrs. T. S. Sligh; therefore, the sanitary status of the premises is of the best.

Our financial agent, Bro. J. L. P. Sheppard, has not been unmindful of the "one thing needful;" and on several occasions he has presented the claims of our college to the people with fair results, and every dollar thus collected will be judiciously invested at once in college improvements.

This institution of learning is meeting the high demands made upon it. With a superior faculty, and the healthiest and most beautiful locality in the State, where the best influences prevail for the development of character, we ask at the hands of all who desire their daughters to attain unto rare accomplishments in mind and heart a favorable consideration of our claim upon them.

Result of Local Option in Bolivar County.

The whisky men secured a petition to the Honorable Board of Supervisors of our county praying an election to be ordered, whether or not whisky or intoxicating liquors should be sold in our county in less quantities than one gallon. The election was ordered for the twenty-eighth of August, and both sides went to work in earnest. On our side many a prayer went up from secret and public places to God to rid us of this awful evil, or save our wives and children from the hands of the devil. Letters were written, people talked to, prohibition clubs organized all over the county, and each move consigned to the direction of God. We looked to Christ to lead us to victory, and he answered our prayers. The good people of our county, both white and black, arose with one accord to the battle, and the victory was won by a vote of four to one. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," for through his mercy once more old Bolivar county has rid herself of this stigma, and this time by an overwhelming majority. Three years ago we won the battle by a majority of only 13; this time it is 4 to 1. We are proud of old Bolivar, as she takes the lead of her sister counties of the Delta, and plants God's standard high up on the Rock of Ages, where many a poor mother's heart and wife's tongue will greet the folds, as they unfurl in the heavenly breezes, with a joyous shout of hosannah to God in the highest, peace and good-will to all mankind. Too long has the "prince of this world" wrought havoc with this evil in our glorious land, which seemeth to be the garden-spot of the South, and we feel that we can not praise God enough for his goodness and mercy.

Bethel Camp Meeting.

Bethel Camp Meeting, in Wilkinson county, Miss., was held Aug. 13-23, 1896. Is there any older or more historic camp meeting in Mississippi than this one? Dr. Winans, in his journal, speaks of the session of 1814, naming the preachers present, and giving a particular account of the excellent meeting of that date, eighty-two years ago. The inference from Dr. Winans' journal is that it was not, at that time, a new camp meeting, but had existed for some years. For a number of years the meetings were held twice annually, Spring and Fall. These grounds have been hallowed by the foot-prints and sermons and songs and prayers and tears of many of our greatest and best men, who have long since "to glory gone." Among them Winans, Drake, Tommie Owen, Ira Byrd, Lorenzo Dow, Marvin—afterward Bishop—W. H. Watkins, and J. G. Jones. Here Marvin preached for a year during the Civil War, and held one of the greatest revivals known to our fathers, which is still fresh in the memory of many of them. Is Jerusalem itself more sacred than these hallowed grounds?

The meeting of the present year was a great success. New tents had been erected, and large preparations generally made. Good order prevailed. The preaching was largely done by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, the evangelist. Frequent sermons were delivered by Revs. W. B. Lewis, E. T. Denson, J. F. Foster, G. D. Anders, B. F. Lewis, and this writer. Other preachers, traveling and local, were present, rendering valuable assistance. Bro. McIntosh, as a revivalist, more than met expectations. He has the faculty of getting hold of the people, of moving and wielding them, of drawing them to him, of capturing, conquering, and subjugating them in the name of his Lord and King. Hundreds, from hour to hour, with rapt attention hung upon his ministry. He did a work which it is probable no other man could have done. Some of the services equaled, if not excelled, anything which we ever before witnessed.

The singing, led by Prof. C. W. Smith and the excellent choir, had much to do with the success of the meeting, as also did the active, zealous work of a large number of laymen and elect women, including young men and young women. Five prayer meetings, into which great earnestness and faith were put, were held each afternoon at five o'clock—by the older men, the older women, the young men, the young ladies, and the children. These meetings were invariably followed by the best services.

We had probably not less than one hundred conversions. A large number of backsliders were reclaimed. Hundreds promised to live better lives, many pledged the erection of family altars, scores pledged to give up dancing, cards, whisky, etc. Surely none will be so light as to go back on these sacred promises. Henceforth we expect to see the church more prosperous in this section of the country. Bethel has taken on new life. A number have decided to build tents another year. We thank and praise God, and take courage.

Whitworth College.

The opening sermon for Whitworth College, for the session of 1896-7, was delivered on last Sabbath morning by Rev. T. L. Mellen of Wesson. Luke xii, 23, was his text, and, as he expounded it, he unfolded some beautiful and impressive thoughts on "Character-Building." For thirty-five minutes he held the large congregation at his command. The sermon, from introduction to peroration, was logical and scholarly—just what you would expect from him.

At night President Chambers gave us one of his "talks"—as he called it—from Galatians vi, 2. His "talk" touched the heart of pupil and people alike, as was evidenced by the consecration service which followed. 'Twas a touching scene—college girls and members of the church kneeling at the altar together, consecrating themselves to God, and pledging themselves to bear one another's burdens. May the Holy Spirit seal their vows!

The college opened better this year than for many years past, which shows that the faith of the people in "old Whitworth" is still strong, and that the love of her friends is true and genuine. There are at this writing 119 matriculations, 75 of whom are boarders. There are still others to come.

President Chambers deserves, and must have, the confidence and support of every Methodist within the bounds of the patronizing territory of his school. He is rehabilitating the college, and everything about it is partaking of his pluck, push, and progress.

Dear Madame:—Yours to hand. I recommend the Moore treatment because I have tried it, and know it to be just what he says it is. I was cured by it, and have remained so eight years; have known of many others being cured of the very worst cases. By all means get it. Yours truly,

W. E. PENN,

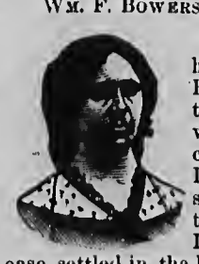
EUREKA SPRINGS, ARK., May 24, 1894.

The above is a letter written by the late Rev. W. E. Penn, the noted Evangelist, to Mrs. W. H. Watson, New Albion, N. Y.

Cured in '92 Well in '96.

34 years ago I had risings in my head, had Catarrh 30 years, hearing failed, for many years could not hear loud conversation two feet away, had continual roaring in ears, hoarseness, throat sore and dry, intense pain over eyes, and "stopped up" feeling in my head. General health so impaired was not able to work. I used Aerial Medication in 1892. It stopped the roaring, pain and soreness in my head and throat, fully restored my hearing, and for four years have been free from Catarrh, and able to work.

WM. F. BOWERS, Howell, Ark.



Aerial Medication has triumphed and I am cured. One thousand dollars would be nothing compared to this. I have had bitter sufferings from Catarrh. Since I had Lagrippe the disease settled in the back of my head and my sufferings have been almost unbearable. I thank God I ever heard of your treatment, which has no equal. I can speak in the highest terms of Aerial Medication.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BY REV. R. H. WYNN.

Prayer Meeting Topic for September.

THE ENEMIES OF CHRIST.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 20—ENEMIES BECAUSE OF BIGOTRY.

(Luke xi, 15, 38; xiii. 14-16; John ix, 13-17.)

Christ's conflict with the ruling classes in the Jewish Church was a conflict of truth with a narrow and base type of bigotry. Church history furnishes the sad reflection that it has not been left alone to open unbelievers to vent their hatred from without, but that the fiercest passions of human nature have been manifest in contests within the church itself. Truth has ever been compelled to defend itself against bigotry, and has often been even compelled to patiently wait for partisan bigots to settle their differences.

Christ's pure teaching was opposed to the mass of human tradition which the Jewish teachers magnified almost to the entire exclusion of pure revelation, to the cumbersome ceremonies which they imposed upon the consciences of the people; and especially was it opposed to the sinful lives which were behind their masks of self-righteousness. Under the cloak of righteous zeal they dogged the steps of Christ in order that they might have opportunity to accuse him. They endeavored to find flaws in his teaching, and immoralities in his life, but were always driven to confusion by his powerful reasoning and by his discernment of their hearts. It was a ridiculous extremity to which they were brought when, being compelled to admit the truth of Christ's miracles, they explained them as being due to league with Beelzebub. Christ answers the accusation by showing the folly of Satan's working against his own interests, of overthrowing his own seat of power, in casting out evil spirits from their victims; and he shows plainly that the miracle being admitted by them, there is no other alternative but to attribute it to divine power. When they complained that he did not comply with their ceremonial law, in washing his hands before dinner, he turns their attention to the subject of their own moral impurity, which is of much more consequence than ritual impurity.

When they complained of his breaking the Sabbath in performing a miracle of healing, he reminds them of inconsistency, in that they perform acts of mercy to their brutes on the Sabbath day, and that an act of mercy to a human being on the Sabbath must also be right. With the reply, it is said, that "his adversaries were ashamed."

TIRED MOTHERS.

A little elbow leans upon your knee,
Your tired knee that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers folding yours so tight;
You do not prize this blessing over much,
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day;
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surprising strange to me,
That while I wore the badge of motherhood
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly,
The little child that brought me only good.

And if some night when you sit down to rest,
You miss this elbow from your tired knee—
This restless, curling head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the while feet into the grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging at their gown,
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap or jacket on my chamber floor;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear it patter in my house once more,

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But, ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head;
My singing birdling from its nest has flown:
The little boy I used to kiss is dead!

—Neville, in The Union Signal.

Debt.

When I was a very small boy, in pinafores, and went to a woman's school, it so happened that I wanted a stick of slate pencil, and had no money to buy it with. I was afraid of being scolded for losing my pencils so often, for I was a real careless little fellow, and so did not dare to ask at home; what then was John to do? There was a little shop in the place, where nuts, and tops, and cakes, and balls were sold by old Mrs. Dearson, and sometimes I had seen boys and girls get trusted by the old lady. I argued with myself that Christmas was coming, and that somebody or other would be sure to give me a penny then, and perhaps even a whole silver sixpence. I would, therefore, go into debt for a stick of slate pencil, and be sure to pay at Christmas. I did not feel easy about it, but still I screwed my courage up, and went into the shop. One farthing was the amount, and as I had never owed anything before, and my credit was good, the pencil was handed over by the kind dame, and I was in debt. It did not please me much, and I felt as if I had done wrong, but I little knew how soon I should smart for it. How my father came to hear of this little stroke of business I never knew, but some little bird or other whistled it to him, and he was very soon down upon me in right earnest. God bless him for it; he was a sensible man, and none of your children spoilers; he did not intend to bring up his children to speculate and play at what big rogues call financing, and, therefore, he knocked my getting into debt on the head at once, and no mistake. He gave me a very powerful lecture upon getting into debt, and how like it was to stealing, and upon the way in which people were ruined by it; and how a boy who would owe a farthing might one day owe a hundred pounds, and get into prison, and bring his family into disgrace. It was a lecture, indeed; I think I can hear it now, and can feel my ears tingling at the recollection of it. Then I was marched off to the shop like a deserter marched into barracks, crying bitterly all down the street, and feeling dreadfully ashamed because I thought everybody knew I was in debt. The farthing was paid, amid many solemn warnings, and the poor debtor was set free, like a bird let out of a cage. How sweet it felt to be out of debt.—Spurgeon.

Helped by Being Hindered.

There is nothing we have more cause to be grateful for than hindrances and obstacles. Having an easy time is having a hard time. If we are slipping or sliding, we are not going up hill; yet going up hill is essential to an outlook from a lofty summit. Mountain climbing is better than hammock swinging for him who would gain strength and develop his muscles, but it requires energy and effort to resist hindrances and overcome obstacles. It goes against nature; and that is one reason why it is better for a man. If a young man has to work for a living, he is more likely to succeed than if he has everything he wants. If his studies are not in the line of his inclinations, he can gain more from them than if they were all in the direction of his tastes and fancies. Even when he is interrupted in his studies, and is compelled by the state of his health or the needs of others to turn aside from his chosen pursuit, he may be the gainer beyond his highest anticipations; for his best self is called out in the meeting or the enduring of unlooked-for burdens and trials. A moral and mental gymnasium is sure to be furnished with appliances for exercising the muscles and testing and taxing the strength. Rocking chairs and lounges have no place there.—Sunday-School Times.

Remember the Aged and Lonely.

In this hurrying age it behooves us all to cultivate a habit of being generous in the bestowal of small courtesies, especially upon the aged and lonely. One who is in the whirl of a busy career may never miss slight attentions, but another who sits apart and sees life's "great occasion drifting by" is apt to feel hurt if notice is withheld. It is the sign of a gracious spirit to cherish such persons in thoughtful remembrance, and to recognize them in all possible ways.

Soul Insurance.

A little boy on his father's knee said:

"Papa, is your soul insured!"

"Why do you ask, my son?"

"Because I heard Uncle Frank say that you had your house insured and your life insured, but he did not think you thought of your soul, and he was afraid you would lose it. Can't you get it insured right away?"

It was all too true, and the father was led to seek the divine guarantee of his soul's well-being.—Exchange.

This would be a pleasant world if people would only give the same name to the same quality in others as in themselves. But we call ours firmness, and that of others obstinacy, and so for many other qualities.

Study.

Whatever you do or do not do, learn to think. Think long, think hard, think accurately. Don't go round on crutches; learn to think for yourself. Think on your feet. Think out-of doors. Keep your eyes open. Make everything about you a subject of thought. Think clear through a thing. Think down to the bottom of a subject. Don't be afraid of hard things. Hard things are good for folks. Greek and calculus make mental muscle. Keep a clear head by keeping a sound body.—Selected.

Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt gave his daughter Gertrude, who recently married Mr. Harry Payne Whitney, a wedding present of $5,000,000 and celebrated the wedding by giving a handsome check to each of the fifty-two servants that attend himself and family and keep his two houses in order, and by placing a large sum of money in the hands of a trusted friend to be devoted to charity. His health will not permit him to be his own almoner. The gift is believed to be $100,000, and it is to be placed where it will do the greatest good to the greatest number. There are, says Mr. W. E. Curtis, very few more generous men in the world than Cornelius Vanderbilt, and few devote more time and money and labor for the benefit of their fellow-creatures. He is a director in thirty-four public charities or philanthropic institutions, and contributes largely to the support of each. He is vice-president of the Young Men's Christian Association and president of the railway branch, giving his personal attention to its management, and attending the devotional meetings every Sunday afternoon and Thursday evening when he is in the city. He is senior warden of St. Bartholomew's Church, and has been superintendent of the Sunday-school. He has a mission school on the east side also, in which his children are engaged as well as he, so that the demands upon his time from religious and charitable duties are great.—Central Advocate.

He is the best reader who makes books help him to think, instead of making them give him thoughts. The proper work of books is to stimulate, rather than to store the mind. Bushnell could not read much, and probably never became well read in the popular sense; for, as he said, if a book interested him it made him think so much that he had to put the book away and watch his own thoughts; and if it did not make him think he could not read it at all. To be barred out from books in such a delightful way as that is better than to be infinitely well read in the storage way. To know when to drop a book is one of the gifts of an artistic reader. Then, too, one must dare to read a few books over and over, and not fret for fear he is falling behind in the great rush of the "new book" world. The world will not soon outstrip its best, and such a reader will be in at the finish, let him go ever so appreciatively slow. One must not be in a feverish haste to accomplish a great amount of reading, but should submit gracefully to the "vacant mood" when it comes, and remember that Wordsworth had it also, and that he glorified it.—Sunday-School Times

Whenever we look around to shun a mortal's frown or catch his smile, we may rest assured there is something wrong; we are off the proper ground of divine service. We like the assurance of holding the divine commission and of enjoying the divine presence, both of which are absolutely essential. No man is in a position to serve others who is not wholly independent of them; but a man who knows his proper place can stoop and wash his brethren's feet.—McIntosh.

Gratitude is a means of grace. Many a mortal would be consoled in his mere annoyances could he get a glimpse of the real trouble from which God saves him. Others, in comparatively light affliction, would cease murmuring could they realize the heartbreak which abides with some one else.—Christian Advocate.

Christianity wants nothing so much in the world as sunny people, and the old are hungrier for love than for bread, and the oil of joy is very cheap, and if you can help the poor on with a garment of praise, it will be better for them than blankets.—Prof. Drummond.

Contentment is an angel who teaches us how to be rich without money.

HYGIENE.

Equanimity a Sign of Health.

Worry is a curse, and a source of much unhappiness. It seams the face with lines and furrows, and has a most depressing effect upon that hypersensitive organ, the stomach, which at such times becomes a most unwilling laggard servant. Indeed, it is safe to say than unless encouraged by a cheerful temper and bright, or at least, hopeful thought, the stomach will play truant, or sulk, and do no good work. The physiological explanation of this is the close alliance of the great sympathetic nerves, which are worse than the telegraph for carrying bad news; the worry and anxiety which depress the brain produce simultaneously a semi-paralysis of the nerves of the stomach; gastric juices will not flow, and, presto!—there is indigestion.

One sign of mental health is serenity of temper and a self-control which enables us to bear with equanimity the petty trials and jars of life, especially those arising from contact with scolding, irrasible, irritating persons.

Serenity of mind comes easy to some and hard to others.

It can be taught and learned. We ought to have teachers who are able to educate us in this department of our natures, quite as much as in music or art. Think of a school of classes for training men and women to hold themselves serene amid all the trials which beset them! As it is now, most of our educators urge us to be ambitious to excel others; and in the end if not careful, we lose our mental equipoise, and with it health and happiness.

One of the secrets of the mind-cure is the help it gives to those who have lost the mental equipoise through worry to throw it on again. Unburdening themselves, they are once more able to do their work and rejoice.—Journal of Hygiene.

An eminent English authority on insanity says that a form of brain disease, which may be described as a breaking down of the great center of mind and motion in the brain, is increasing with alarming rapidity. From a collation of facts in various lunatic asylums he draws the conclusion that the most frequent of all causes of the malady is the use of alcohol. There seems to be no cure for this dreadful mental paralysis, and the brain-worker can only prevent its approach by taking into his system nourishment which is food for the brain, instead of stimulants which are fatal to it, and by keeping a proper balance between his physical income and resources and his mental expenditure.—Exchange.

FROM TH WORK.

Rev. O. L Savage, Cockrum, Miss., Sept. 2: "I have just closed out my last meeting for this Conference year. Results: 60 accessions—by letter, 5, baptized 3 infants. Was assisted by D. H. T. Gaines, of Tunica mission. He is pure gold. His preaching is of a high order. My people think he is a great man."

Rev. R. L Phillips, P C, Middleton, Miss., Sept. 5: "On the third Sunday in July we opened a meeting at Mathis School-house, with Rev. D. C. Farmer assisting. This was a barren field, without a house of worship; so we held the morning services under a bush arbor. The Holy Ghost was manifest from the beginning in overcoming indifference, obstinacy, and unbelief. The results: A church organized and named 'Mt. Carmel.' Subscriptions raised and committee appointed to build a house of worship Several conversions and reclamations, and many hearts and homes made happy by the love of God. Bro. Farmer did us noble service, preaching and working in the power of the Holy Spirit. 'From victory unto victory,' blessed be God! Another battle opened Aug. 1 at old Oak Grove. Bros. Chambers, Osmond and others are familiar with the decadence of this church and its unfortunate history. Bros. W. W. Moore and J N. Broadway each gave us two days' valuable help Here Satan was well entrenched behind great mountains of sectarian bitterness, backslidden reprobacy, and infidelity; but, glory be to God! at the sound of the trumpet the walls fell, men and women were convicted, and soon crying to God for mercy; old feuds were dug up and thrown out of the field, finally resulting in a number of sound conversions, many reclamations, eight accessions to the church, and one baptism."

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only One way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

OBITUARIES.

HALL.—Mrs. P. E. Hall, whose maiden name was Walker, was born in Chester county, S. C., April 30, 1827. She was married to Capt. Hall, Sept. 8, 1843. She joined the Methodist Church in 1847. Her membership has been for many years at Walnut Grove, Miss. Her Christian life was consistent and outspoken, so that the loved ones left behind have no doubt of her eternal happiness. She was the mother of thirteen children, five of whom have gone on before. The eight living are expecting to meet the mother in heaven. The family home is in the northern part of Scott county, Miss.

On Aug. 11, in the afternoon, she lay down for a rest, and in a short while she was found dead, with her hands lying across her chest. We suppose she died of some heart disease, without a moan or struggle. There was no person in her room with her, but in a few feet of her in another part of the house.

She was buried on the thirteenth at Hillsboro. The children were all present at the funeral services except one, and a large number of friends and neighbors. May there be a happy reunion of the husband and children in the better world!

C. McDONALD

Morton, Miss.

UPTON.—Mary Anna Calhoun, daughter of John C. and Elizabeth Calhoun, was born near Athens, La., Jan. 25, 1834. In early childhood she professed religion and joined the Presbyterian Church—the church of her mother. She was married to Levi L Upton, son of Rev. T J Upton, of our Conference, Oct. 12, 1879. She was the mother of seven children, six of whom survive her. She died in Rayville, La., July 30, 1896. She was buried in the old family cemetery at Athens by the side of her mother and father. She was a graduate of the Homer Masonic Female College in 1871. Her life was devoted to teaching. She was honored and loved as an educator by the patrons and pupils. As a teacher, she was kind, painstaking, thorough, and conscientious. Many of her pupils now occupy prominent positions in Church and State, all of whom love to honor her for the help rendered them. She was a younger sister of Sister T. S. Sligh, vice-president of our Mansfield College. Her labors in the Master's cause were an inspiration and a benediction. Many souls will rise up in the judgment and call her blessed. The State has lost one of her best and most consecrated educators, and the church a consecrated, zealous Christian worker. As a wife, she was a model, loving, tender, and true. Wise in counsel and firm of purpose, she proved God's true helpmeet to her husband. As a mother, she was devoted, but firm, always bearing in mind the duties of a Christian mother. She was a leader in every good work for the advancement of Christ's kingdom and the cause of humanity. She has entered her eternal rest.

While living in New Iberia (there being no Presbyterian Church there) she joined the Methodist Church with her husband, in which communion she lived and died, honoring the church by her faithful Christian life, and being honored by the church for her beautiful life of Christian fidelity. May the God of all grace bless the husband and orphan children!

FARRISH.—Death has made our number one less in our Lonisville Church. Sister Bettie Farrish, wife of Mr Frank Farrish, left us the beautiful second Sabbath of August for that Sabbath that never ends, "where the weary are at rest." She was stricken with apoplexy, and for five weeks oscillated between life and death, keeping us in hope and despair. Finally the fatal moment came, and mortal life yielded, and eternal life was gained.

Sister Farrish became a Christian in early life, and lived such to the end She was a woman of many noble traits of character. She was always in her place at church when circumstances would admit. She was a true neighbor, one in time of need. A companion of undying affection, would make any sacrifice for the comfort of her husband and only child, a daughter. But in the vigor of motherly womanhood she is taken away, and leaves sorrow-stricken ones in that home she once made so happy. We weep with those that weep, and expect to rejoice with those for whom we sorrow in that eternal day above.

Sister Farrish was about forty-five years old; had been married a little more than twenty-five years. She leaves two sisters and a brother to follow as the last of a large family. May her husband and daughter join her "in the sweet by-and-by!" D W. Bann.

OAKMAN.—Died on the twenty-first of August, Mary Emma, daughter of R G. and Mary Oakman, aged eight years ten months and nine days.

As a friend and relation, we sympathize with the deeply afflicted parents in this sad bereavement. Is there no calm? "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Bitter was the hour of parting; yet that hour to all must come. But the blessed Bible tells us of a glorious home above, and a joyous reunion of earth's severed ties of love.

Little Emma was indeed a lovely child. None knew her but to love, none loved her but to praise. When dying, she said, "All come and kiss me good night, and let me go to sleep;" then, calling her mother, said, "Mama, where shall I sleep to-night?" and with a sweet smile she looked up, and said, "Two roads—one so pretty;" then sweetly fell asleep in Jesus to wake no more till the resurrection morn.

In a grand old forest solemn,
Where bright flowers bloom,
The wild winds are sighing
Above her tomb.

Gently loving hands laid the clay, but her spirit went up to God.

AUNT MAIT.

DAY.—Mrs. Nancy T. Day died in Sunflower county, Miss., in her eighty-fourth year She was a native of Amite county, Miss. Her former home was Yazoo county She was visiting her friend, Mrs. Hinton, of Lawrence Dearing; was taken sick, and died there on the second day of August, 1896 Kind friends and loving relatives nursed her to the last.

Hers was a life full of days and good deeds. She had lived her allotted time, and, as she said, "was borrowing from the Lord;" was ready, willing and waiting to answer to her name on the roll-call in heaven.

She was a member of the M. E. Church. Two of her sons were ministers—Elisha T. Day, Baptist; Wiley P H. Day, Protestant Methodist. Her old age was cheered and brightened by the love and attention of her daughter, Mrs Martha Chisholm, and her grandchildren Sue was loved and respected by all who knew her. Well done, good and faithful servant; thou art truly at rest

J. E. R.

GRIFFIN.—Nancy Thom was born in West Feliciana parish, June 3, 1855; was married to P. W. Griffin, Dec. 18, 1873, and died Aug. 18, 1896.

A member of the Methodist Church from her childhood, she had the reputation among her neighbors of being a sincere, honest Christian. The Bible was cherished by her, and she was always found ready to lend a helping hand to any who were in need.

A large concourse of neighbors and friends attended the burial as she was laid away in the New Hope Graveyard. A husband and eight children mourn her loss.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, cure for them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements in this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul," I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by state officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

McKinley's front yard in Canton was not large enough to hold the delegations that called upon him on Sept. 11. The crowd was so large that three people fainted.

The Congressional Library at Washington has received a valuable addition to its collection in the shape of the letters of Washington collected by the late Dr. Joseph Toners.

T. V. Powderly, ex-general master workman of the Knights of Labor, has come out strong for McKinley, and in a speech at Cooper Union, New York, attacked the Cleveland administration with bitterness.

Typhoid fever and other diseases are so prevalent in Daviess county, Ky., that the deputy sheriff who served the notices for the last petit jury panel found only one man able to go to court.

The Chicago Board of Education has ruled that Jewish teachers be allowed to abstain from work on their principal church holidays, for which privilege the pay of the substitute teachers will be deducted from the salaries of the absentees.

Chairman Hanna, of the Republican National Committee, has given the "lily whites" of Louisiana to understand that their ticket will not be recognized by the National Committee on the ground that the committee does not intend to draw the color line or have official knowledge of any such line in this campaign.

The Democratic Convention of the First and Second Congressional Districts of Louisiana met on Sept. 12, in this city, to nominate candidates for the Fifty-fifth Congress. The First District Convention nominated for Congress Ex Mayor John Fitzpatrick (who has positively declined the nomination), and the Second District put up Ex-Congressman R. C. Davey.

Thousands of Sound Money Democrats did honor to the representatives of their party for President and Vice-President at the Auditorium, Louisville, on Sept. 12. The occasion was the formal notification to the candidates of the action of the Indianapolis Convention. Senator Don Caffery, from the far south, made the speech notifying Hon. John M. Palmer, the hoary-headed Federal general. Sectionalism was again disregarded when the eloquent New Yorker, Colonel John R. Fellows, tendered to General S. B. Buckner, a gallant Confederate, the honor of second place on the national ticket.

FOREIGN.

It is said that the deposition of the Sultan is being seriously debated by the powers.

The new Shah of Persia is anxious to open the country to international commerce, and favors the introduction of electricity and steam.

A violent cyclone swept over portions of Paris last week. Buildings, roofs, chimneys and boats were demolished. Many persons were injured.

The first Canadian Christian Endeavor Convention will be held in Ottawa, Oct. 6 to 9. Among the special features will be a service at Aylmer, Quebec, the birthplace of Dr. F. E. Clark, the father of the great Endeavor movement.

The protest of the British and Italian embassies at the deportation of Armenians has had but little effect. The Turkish government has sent a circular to its ministers abroad, saying that in view of insuring the maintenance of order there, it has been decided to send to their native countries all unemployed strangers, and the provincial officials have been instructed to watch all such persons and prevent their return to Constantinople.

Perfection in Cake-Making.

Housekeepers frequently wonder why it is that they can not make biscuit and cake that are light and palatable and that taste as delicious as the biscuit and cake made by their mothers and grandmothers, the delightful memory of which even to this day creates a sensation of pleasure to the palate. The trouble arises from the highly adulterated state of the materials they have to work with, particularly the cream-of-tartar and soda used to raise or leaven the food. Cream-of-tartar and soda that are now procurable for domestic purposes contain large quantities of lime, earth, alum and other adulterants, frequently from five to twenty-five per cent., and consequently vary so much in strength that no person can tell the exact quantity to use, or properly combine them, to insure perfect results. From using too much or too little, or because of the adulterants in them, bitter, salt, yellow, or heavy biscuits or cakes are frequently made. These adulterants are also injurious to health.

All this trouble may be avoided by the use of the popular Royal Baking Powder. Where this preparation is employed in the place of cream-of-tartar and soda, its perfect leavening power always insures light, flaky, digestible biscuit, cakes, and pastry, that are perfectly wholesome and free from the impurities invariably present when the old raising preparations are employed.

The Royal Baking Powder, we are informed by the most reliable scientists, is perfectly pure, being made from highly refined ingredients, carefully tested, and so exactly proportioned and combined that it never fails to produce the best and uniform results. An additional advantage in its employment comes from the fact that bread or other food made with it may be eaten while hot without fear of indigestion or any unpleasant results, while being equally sweet, moist, and grateful to the palate when cold.

A Chance for Women to Make Money.

I see so many men giving their experience in the Dish Washer business, that one would almost think the men had "taken to washing the dishes." But ladies can do just as well as men. I have been devoting my time for over a year to selling Climax Dish Washers. My husband has aided mornings and evenings, and we have cleared over $5,000 in a year. The trouble with people is they won't try new things, and so let the golden opportunities pass. Every family wants a Dish Washer, and any one can sell them if they TRY. I do not canvass at all; people come or send after Washers. I have examined all the Dish Washers made, but the Climax has no equal. You can get complete instructions by addressing the Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio. I want ladies everywhere to try this business and let us hear how they succeed.

WILD With Eczema

I was a sufferer for eight years from Eczema, but now am entirely cured. The palms of my hands were covered and badly inflamed; little white blisters appeared, then would peel off, leaving a red, smooth surface, which would burn like fire and itch. On the inside of the upper part of my limbs, great red blotches would appear, and as soon as I became warm, the burning and itching would begin. Night after night I would lie awake and scratch, and almost go wild. I got a box of CUTICURA, and a bottle of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, and after a few applications I noticed the redness and inflammation disappear; before I had used one box there was not a sign of Eczema left. I can truthfully assert that $2.00 worth of CUTICURA REMEDIES cured me.

Iuka Normal Institute flourished last year. Prospects are for a boom in '96 and '97. This prospect forces us to close out our primary and intermediate departments that we may accommodate a greater boarding patronage. We can receive 100 more boarders by doing this. We want this 100. Our plan is, for $80 ($40 on entrance and $40 Jan. 19, '97) to give meals, coal oil, fuel, furnished room except bed clothing, and tuition in any of our literary departments 10 months to any student who has never attended the Normal, until 100 have applied. Students who accept will board with the President.

BEAUTIFUL SNOW.

O the snow, the beautiful snow,
Filling the sky and the earth below,
Over the house-tops, over the street,
Over the heads of the people you meet,
Dancing,
Flirting,
Skimming along.
Beautiful snow, it can do nothing wrong,
Flying to kiss a fair lady's cheek;
Clinging to lips in a frolicsome freak.
Beautiful snow, from the heavens above,
Pure as an angel and fickle as love!

O the snow, the beautiful snow!
How the flakes gather and laugh as they go!
Whirling about in its maddening fun,
It plays in its glee with everyone.
Chasing,
Laughing,
Hurrying by,
It lights up the face and it sparkles the eye;
And even the dogs, with a bark and a bound,
Snap at the crystals that eddy around.
The town is alive, and its heart in a glow
To welcome the coming of beautiful snow.

How the wild crowd goes swaying along,
Hailing each other with humor and song!
How the gay sledges like meteors flash by,
Bright for a moment, then lost to the eye!
Ringing,
Swinging,
Dashing they go,
Over the crest of the beautiful snow.
Come so pure when it falls from the sky,
To be trampled in mud by the crowd rushing by;
To be trampled and tracked by the thousands of feet
Till it blends with the horrible filth in the street.

Once I was pure as the snow—but I fell,
Fell, like the snow-flakes, from heaven to hell;
Fell, to be trampled as the filth of the street,
Fell, to be scoffed, to be spit on, and beat,
Pleading,
Cursing,
Dreading to die,
Selling my soul to whoever would buy;
Dealing in shame for a morsel of bread,
Hating the living and fearing the dead.
Merciful God! have I fallen so low?
And yet I was once like this beautiful snow!

Once I was fair as the beautiful snow,
With an eye like its crystals, a heart like its glow;
Once I was loved for my innocent grace—
Flattered and sought for the charm of my face.
Father,
Mother,
Sisters, all,
God and myself, I have lost by my fall.
The veriest wretch that goes shivering by
Will take a wide sweep, lest I wander too nigh,
For all that is on, or about me, I know
There is nothing that's pure but the beautiful snow.

How strange it should be that this beautiful snow
Should fall on a sinner with nowhere to go!
How strange it would be, when the night comes again,
If the snow and the ice struck my desperate brain,
Freezing,
Dying alone,
Too wicked for prayer, too weak for a moan
To be heard in the crash of the crazy town,
Gone mad in its joy at the snow's coming down;
To lie and to die in my terrible woe,
With a bed and a shroud of the beautiful snow.

The Methodist Review—September-October.

We have just been able to command an hour, in the midst of special pressure of pastoral duties, to give to the last number of our Review. Two of the articles we think it well to call special attention to—that on "Modern Evangelists" and "Lucius Q. C. Lamar." The hearty thanks of all American Christendom are due the Rev. Robert Wilson for his article on "Evangelists;" dispassionate, clear, and admirably put. The only thing to be criticised adversely in the article is that the writer has not allowed himself space for some vital points which he omits. They are points which lie at the very foundation of the whole question. Is it stating it too strongly when we say that eight pastors out of every ten find, after their first year of service, that they can not command for a series of meetings conducted by themselves alone the attendance of the outside world? Is it not equally true that every student of human nature is readily aware that even the most eloquent and tender of pastors finds, when his congregation has become accustomed to his methods, tone and manner, that their emotions do not respond to him as they do to one to whom they have not before listened? As teacher and expounder of Scripture, the pastor may be, and usually is, superior to the evangelist. As an edifying and saving force in his own church and the children of the church, the faithful pastor is the greater force; but Methodism has converted the outside world to the upbuilding of all other churches. Who will reach this outside world if we relegate the revival meetings to the pastors alone?

The writer of the Review article refers to aid from other pastors. Our experience is that there is a growing and almost overwhelming tide of objection upon the part of the churches of to-day to the absence of pastors from their charges. Two weeks' absence now will cause more murmuring upon the part of the churches than a month would have done thirty years ago.

Two sentences in the article on Lamar, the great Mississippian, awaken some personal memories, the recital of which may give an added insight to the deeper sympathies of Col. Lamar—such, perhaps, as your readers might take pleasure in. The reviewer says: "Col. Lamar was a most entertaining conversationalist; versatile and commanding when his attention was aroused." And again: "He had the kindest heart."

Our first personal contact with Mr. Lamar was in a meeting of the Vanderbilt University Board of Trust. He had been for some time a member of the Board, but had not been present at any of its sessions. The special meeting involved in this memory was held in the parlor of the writer on High street, Nashville, Tenn. We had made an effort several times to persuade Bishop McTyeire that Dr. Albert Taylor Bledsoe ought to find a place in the Vanderbilt University faculty. The Bishop usually made nominations prior to the date of which this was written. He could not be moved to make this special nomination. The meeting referred to was to close the annual session of the Board. We were near adjournment—nine P. M.—when the writer ventured to place the name of Dr. Bledsoe before the Board. A few opinions had been expressed, pro and con, in an informal way, when Mr. Lamar, half reclining on a sofa, and up to this point taking no part in the business of the Board, said, "I wish to second the nomination." He then began, without rising, a recital of his estimate of Dr. Bledsoe as thinker, scholar and inspirer, passing to an analysis of his character. He gave great emphasis to the child-like tenderness which underlay a seemingly stormy temperament; his love of truth, his tireless search for it, his hatred for all that was mean, interspersing the talk with personal incidents. During the talk he had arisen to an erect sitting position. His voice thrilling with emotion, his words flowing as from a pent-up fountain, every ear was attent. He had captured not only the attention of the members of the Board, but so overwhelmed all objection that no voice was raised to even question the wisdom of the choice. The vote was taken, and on every ballot cast "Aye" was written. Adjournment came at thirty minutes to one A. M. He had talked uninterruptedly more than two hours. We were all surprised, thinking that he had not talked more than thirty minutes. The Board adjourned sine die; the members shook hands and parted; Mr. Lamar lingered. When all had gone he arose from his seat, extended his hand to me, and with deep pathos in his voice said: "Sir, I want to thank you. You can not conceive how happy you have made me. I came to this meeting of the Board with a hope that I could do something toward placing Dr. Bledsoe in the university; but, after reaching here, had despaired of my purpose, and concluded not to mention his name; was about to leave with a sense of heavy burden and regret. You have made me happy, sir." His heart glowed in his face as he spoke. It is well known that some days later Bishop McTyeire vetoed the election. The university was in a formative state. We had made the mistake of electing too many presidents from the colleges to places in the university faculty. Men accustomed to rule could not easily agree or obey. The Bishop feared that Dr. Bledsoe's temperament would add fuel to the flames which made his position already too warm for comfort. Later the Bishop came fully to recognize the fact that the head of the university government should be the chancellor; that the government in the hands of a president of a Board of Trust—not a university trained man—was not only an anomaly, but fraught with many dangers. He said as much to me later at a time of great trial to him. As nearly as I now remember his words, they were: "No other president, after I am gone, will live on the campus, or attempt to do the work it seemed necessary for me to do in the beginning of the university. No other president will, or ought to, attempt this work." Mr. Lamar was too deeply wounded by the veto ever to return to the university, though several times urged to do so. I met him again during his congressional career. It was but a little while after the splendid victory he had won when, as leader of the minority in the House, he had foiled the effort of a dominant majority to pass a bill very obnoxious to the South. I complimented him on the skill which he had exhibited in parliamentary tactics, and mentioned the debt which we all owed him. With equal humility and magnanimity he instantly replied: "The debt you owe is to Mr. Blaine, the Speaker of the House. It was through his promptings and unfailing kindness that the victory was won." Well may the reviewer say, "His genius was unfettered or unclogged by selfishness."

Years later, as Missionary Treasurer, I had reason to visit Washington, and called on Mr. Lamar when he was Secretary of the Interior, on a question involving our Indian missions. When I entered his office it was half filled with clerks and visitors. In five minutes he had managed matters so that we were alone. He threw himself on a settee, and said, "Now we will talk." Business was soon over. Then he recurred to the university incident above given, and out of a full heart told me over again his yearning for his old friend, Dr. Bledsoe, and talked of his great regret that the church had failed to gain the full benefit of his magnificent powers.

This led up to his touching on his own relation to the church. After making a modest avowal of his sense of the inadequateness of his church service, he touched upon some religions problems he had been pondering. At this juncture he surprised me by saying: "Senator Jackson was kind enough to hand me a copy of your funeral discourse on General Harding. There is a sentence in it which you could not have uttered without much previous thought." After quoting the sentence, he said: "Have you a sermon in manuscript in which you have elaborated the argument leading to your conclusion? If so, please send me the manuscript." He added: "I shall not be satisfied until I have gone through the proofs. If you are right, your position will be of great help and comfort to me, and in this life here I need all the help I can get." He followed with words which left no doubt in my mind of the depth and earnestness of his inward spiritual life.

Religious Freedom.

Has every man the right to formulate his religion according to the dictates of his own conscience? This depends a good deal on the character of his conscience. We do not think that the conscience of a Mormon would be a safe guide in religious matters. Whilst right and wrong are eternal and unchangeable, yet our perception of right and wrong is changeable. The mind may be perverted and biased by early training and the habits and associations of life, and, in consequence, take up erroneous views of divine truth. Men—so-called Christians—have lived and died believing in doctrines nowhere taught in the Bible. I heard an aged Universalist say and reiterate that the Bible taught and declared that God would punish us thoroughly and thoroughly (?) for the deeds done in the body, and would then take the whole human family to himself. This man was a brave and honest man, and he lived and died in this faith; yet I can not find that the Bible teaches any such doctrine. Many men—especially moral men, who do not belong to any church—are especially prone to form their own views of religious truth; but the trouble with most of these men is that they endeavor to mold the teachings of the Bible, or rather their views of the teaching of the Bible, to suit their lives, instead of squaring their lives by the teaching of the Bible. Most men relish a placebo for a conscience which condones their manner of living, and in forming their religious belief. When left to themselves they will deal very gently with themselves, and their theology is not apt to be of the orthodox kind. This same principle has given rise to Universalism, Mormonism, and other similar heresies; but the tendency of the present day is to the multiplication of religious "isms." In some sections of our country—happily not in the South—these new "isms" literally tread on the heels of each other in order to air themselves in the public gaze. We can not think that this tends to promote, or does, in fact, promote true scriptural piety. On the contrary, we must think the tendency is hostile to true, sincere, purer religion, especially when we hear some of these new apostles exclaiming that all religions are good enough; that Catholicism, Buddhism, and all are well enough, whilst they go on to elucidate some new theology that makes these distinctions immaterial. The truth of the matter is, that in some sections, when they come across a doctrine of the Bible which can not be explained away or evaded, they come right out and repudiate it. This is all wrong. The Bible must stand as a cemented whole, as an entirety; and whenever anyone repudiates a plain teaching of the Holy Scriptures, he establishes a precedent for some other original thinker to do likewise, until finally we have no Bible.

Innovation in religious matters is the order of the day. The biblical injunction against removing the landmarks seems to have been forgotten. One cries, "Lo! here is the true doctrine" (a new one), and another cries, "Lo! there;" and among them all they make a perfect babel of confusion. There is no safety except in clinging close to the faith as once delivered to the saints, and you may put it down and stand by it—nay, even die by it—whenever any new "ism" requires that a plain teaching of the Holy Scriptures shall be explained away, doubted or denied, the same "ism" is a heresy, and the teachers of the same heretics—nothing more or less. God's Holy Word doesn't change. Divine truth is the same to-day as it was "when the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy." A man said to me not long since, "Do you think it anything strange that new developments should take place in religion, and now faiths spring up, and that religious thought is not capable of higher advancement, even as in any science?" The reply to this was, that our faith, if it be genuine, is the same faith that Abraham exercised. We can neither claim nor attain to any higher advancement in religious thought than did Abraham when he exercised that faith that caused him to be the friend of God. Neither have the conditions changed.

In the beginning man, through natural depravity, was a fallen being in rebellion against God, and such is his natural state now, and will ever remain, except through his acceptance of the atonement. Two things have always been, and will always be, necessary to salvation: the faith of the sinner, which enables him to lay hold of the atonement; and the grace of God, which saves him. These things, faith and grace, have never changed. They secure salvation, always have done so, and always will. Two and two made four in the time of the apostles, and will make four in the time of the last man who shall live on the earth. The religion of a people is the great factor in their civilization, and a bad religion—or which is nearly the same thing, a loose and uncertain religion—tends to deterioration and disintegration. The evil propensities of men are only held in check by law and the force of public opinion; and when public opinion tolerates and allows "isms" of doubtful or no biblical soundness, then the bad passions of bad men will mold and fashion for themselves a religious "ism," and the creed so formed will be colored by and will justify their evil practices.

Thomas Jefferson, the most potential factor in the formation of our federal organic law, was practically an infidel, and he seems to have exerted his utmost efforts to make us a people without a religion, so far as mere law could; hence it is that our Constitution is so particular to put religion in the background, and, as a consequence, we have found great trouble in legally suppressing Mormonism, in legally punishing Mormons. Whilst Mr. Jefferson was President he refused, on the request of the clergy, to proclaim a day of national Thanksgiving. But we soon elected a President of more respect and reverence for religion, who, by proclamation, called the people together once a year to praise and thank God, and the practice has ever since been followed.

Now is the time above all others when we should be careful to walk in "antiquam viam." Let us walk in the way our fathers trod. Let us, as they did, accept the Bible as the revealed Word of God from Genesis to Revelation. And those things which the Bible says should not be done let us not do, but be careful to do and perform what it enjoins. The Bible is our only guide—without it everything is dark—and we have no more right to disregard one part than we have to disregard another. If we can change one part, we can change the whole. Woe unto him who undertakes to change or disregard any part of God's Word; and that sect or "ism" that disregards any portion of Holy Scripture, or with impious effrontery tries to explain it away, are heretics and enemies of the common good.

Many a weak and struggling church would be made strong and independent if persons of means and influence would settle the question of their church home, not upon the ground of personal advantage in the shape of fine music, superior preaching and social standing, but upon the basis of pure usefulness. Every Christian ought to put to himself the inquiry, "Where am I most needed?" and after answering it at the mercy-seat in the light of providential indications, he should follow the dictate of conscience and grace, and heartily and fully work for the success of the enterprise with which the Spirit of God has identified him. As the result, he would find his own spiritual good and that of his family, as well as the cause of Christ, greatly advanced by his wise decision and worthy action.—Presbyterian.

Great is the tyranny of rush. Hurry makes slaves of us all. The on-sweeping movements of our lives and of our age deprive us of the sense of restfulness. We begrudge the time necessary to think composedly and adequately. We want to do everything upon short metre. Our prayer meetings, our Sabbath services, our closet devotions, and our family worship come under the sweep of this impetuous, hurrying and anxious spirit, as well as our business and our pleasure. Leisure seems absent from our nature and from our experience. Push and stir drive us hither and thither at will. As to the result, we lack calmness of soul, orderly procedure, and steady and dignified action. We become fretful, impatient and inconsistent. We fail to get the best out of either our physical, mental and spiritual faculties.—Exchange.

Dr. Theodore Cuyler quotes a Southern slave of the old times, who replied to one who said: "I hope your master has gone to heaven," with the very wise remark: "I's afraid he has not gone dar, for I neber heard him speak o' dat. When he goes to de Nort', or to Virginny Springs, he allus be gittin' ready fur weeks. I neber see him gittin' ready fur goin' to heben." Dear reader, will anyone have reason to believe you have gone to heaven when you are dead? Do you spend any time in preparation? What do you read on Sunday? You go to church, to be sure, but do you wait on God in the sanctuary?

The following notice appeared in the midst of the list of deaths in the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, last week: "Smith.—A Requiem Mass for the repose of the soul of Miss Hannah P. Smith will be offered at St. Clement's Church, Twentieth and Cherry streets, on Tuesday, August 18, at 7:30 A. M." We give this as a sign of the times, and indicative of the decay of Protestantism in a section of the Episcopal Church of Pennsylvania. The church mentioned in this notice is not under the jurisdiction of Archbishop Ryan, but is still of unquestioned standing in the Protestant Episcopal Church.—Exchange.

Let not the political issues of the day cause neglect of religious duties. Church ordinances have their claims as well as the gold or silver club. The prayer meeting calls for attendance as well as the party rally. The soul must not be starved for the sake of keeping partisan zeal at a high pressure. God's interests must not suffer while promoting what we regard as our country's welfare. Our duty to State and Church should not, and need not, conflict; but if the choice between them has to be made, let not religion's demands be sacrificed.—Selected.

The teetotal and prohibition sentiment is marching on in the minds of the people. Inquiries were lately addressed to the great railway lines of this country as to their attitude toward the drink habit among their employees. The managers of twenty-five of these lines, which employ 180,000 men, say they will not tolerate a drinking man in their employ. Thus the bogus personal liberty dogma is not recognized in a service where sober men and clear heads are required.—Muscatine Journal.

One of our wide-awake preachers, writing us on business, says: "It seems to be literally true that the people do their economizing in hard times by withholding church dues." Well, if they keep this up something worse than hard times will come upon them. Our people ought to read Malachi and see how God deals with those who withhold their offerings from his house.—Central Methodist.

Christ went about doing good. He didn't sit down in a comfortable place and talk about it.

TO A WATER-FOWL.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Whither, midst falling dew,
While glow the heavens with the last steps of day,
Far, through their rosy depths, dost thou pursue
Thy solitary way?

Vainly the fowler's eye
Might mark thy distant flight to do thee wrong,
As, darkly painted on the crimson sky,
Thy figure floats along.

Seek'st thou the plashy brink
Of weedy lake, or marge of river wide,
Or where the rocking billows rise and sink
On the chafed ocean-side?

There is a Power whose care
Teaches thy way along that pathless coast—
The desert and illimitable air—
Lone wanderer, but not lost.

All day thy wings have fanned,
At that far height, the cold, thin atmosphere;
Yet stoop not, weary, to the welcome land,
Though the dark night is near.

And soon that toil shall end;
Soon shalt thou find a Summer home, and rest,
And scream among thy fellows; reeds shall bend,
Soon o'er thy sheltered nest.

Thou'rt gone, the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form; yet, on my heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given
And shall not soon depart:

He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright.

"Gilderoy" and the Presiding Eldership.

I usually read "Gilderoy's" articles with a great deal of interest and profit, and generally agree with him; but I must say his late article in the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 3, was a surprise to me. I mean the part that referred to presiding elders and the size of districts. He refers to presiding elders as "overseers," or "supervisors," and used the terms as distinguishing them from laborers. He says: "We have a Bishop this year who knows our territory about as well as any man among us. If I am not mistaken, he is powerfully opposed to wasting men and money, especially so for overseers on the Lord's farm." He also advocates large districts and week-day Quarterly Conferences, or fewer visits. Which? And the next breath he advocates "small farms and intensive farming." Well, where is he at? I suppose he does not consider the district part of the farm, nor the presiding elder one of the laborers. Well, if the district is not part of the farm, and our own presiding elder one of the laborers, I would not want to have to labor. I believe our presiding elder (Bro. Weems) does as much and as hard work, if not the hardest, of any man in his district; and, furthermore, I believe his work results in as much good and at as little cost, according to amount of work done, as the work of any man in his district—yes, more—and that the people pay his salary as freely as any other man in the district. Furthermore, I believe, and am sure, his visits, sermons and talks in the Quarterly Conferences results in more money being collected, and the preacher getting more after paying his part, than he would otherwise get.

The quarterly visits of the presiding elder is a stimulant to preacher and people. Then his preaching and work does a great deal of good. I said "work;" I ought to have said "overseeing."

How many times we are just moving on, not very much being done, and very little money being collected, and the preacher really almost suffering, and it is announced that the quarterly meeting is to be on such a Sunday, and the presiding elder is to be with us. It just puts new inspiration into the whole work. I tell you, sometimes I wish the quarterly meeting would come oftener, even if I do have to divide the money with the presiding elder.

Now, I believe in "small farms and intensive farming" in every department of church work. I do not believe that any district ought to have more than fourteen appointments, and twelve would be better, and then give each full time—a full Saturday and Sunday. Let the presiding elder come into the neighborhood Friday, and remain until Monday, visiting the people, praying, preaching, holding love-feast, administering sacrament, etc., and you would not hear any more complaints about presiding elder's salary. Then let them go home and rest, and prepare for the next Sunday. I fully believe that our present plan of large districts, and no time to remain in a work, many times having to go to a work in the middle of the week, and the people all busy, and hold a quarterly meeting with a very few, is the cause of all the complaint.

Every work—city, town, circuit and mission—ought to have two full days, Saturday and Sunday. Let the presiding elder preach in the city Saturday, at eleven o'clock; hold Quarterly Conference Saturday eve ning; hold love-feast Sunday morning, preach at eleven o'clock, administer sacrament, preach at night, and return home on Monday, and all would be satisfied.

We need not expect the people in a city, town or county to be satisfied for the presiding elder to come in some night in the week, and maybe not preach; just hold a Quarterly Conference, and go. They scarcely even see him, or hear him. You need not expect them to be satisfied. Well, as large as the districts are, they can not be otherwise.

Now, my idea is to cut down the districts to twelve or fourteen appointments, and put live men like ours on the districts, and give them time to rest and study, and then let them go through the district preaching, praying, and singing, and we will have no more trouble. But if you want to do away with one of the most important officers and the most important work, overseeing of the church, then just enlarge the district, spread out the presiding elder's work, overseeing, and you will certainly accomplish your purpose. Judge by the past and present, and you will see the effects. Small farms and intensive farming is the thing. There may have been a time when it would do, but that time has passed.

May God graciously bless the Bishops, presiding elders, pastors, and all the people! A. D. MILLER.

Hermanville, Miss., Sept. 11, 1896.

Partial Legislation.

There is in our country large companies of great wealth running their shops and mills with ceaseless roar and din from year's end to year's end without suspense or cooling off, unless to repair furnace or machinery, protected in their disregard of the holy Sabbath by the laws of the land. Other wealthy corporations run their railroad trains utterly regardless of any law proposing to hold high over all employments the sacredness of the Sabbath; while others who may run a more successful trade on that day demand a like exemption from any business observance of the Lord's day.

The law-making powers of the land guarantee to these great money-eyed corporations and companies by special legislation these unrestricted privileges of the Sabbath to carry on their money making, and goading their employees to faithful work on that day to their own profit and emolument.

In our towns and cities, and in the country, too, there are many poor mechanics whose families need every cent they can make in shop or earn at wages. But class legislation requires the proprietor to close up shop and the journeyman to leave his job unfinished.

There are also many ten thousand farmers who are hard pressed to work from the soil a subsistence for their wives and little ones, who, whatever the pressure may be, must leave his plow unpushed and his hoe unhandled.

Our entire country, State and National, requires every officer, from President down to ward official, to make oath under God—in "so help me God"—for the faithful performance of the duties of his office. This can only be taken as recognizing God's authority as supreme and high over all; yet this invading the sanctity of the holy Sabbath, and setting aside this supreme authority, so widely and so emphatically acknowledged, to the exception of the one class and to the prejudice of the other, denying in such act God's right to command for the day, is as complete a profane sacrilege of the day as to substitute pagan idol and heathen temple for the altar of the God whose vast supremacy they pretend acknowledged when they take the oath of office.

If the Word of God is any authority—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy"—the farmer has as much right in the sight of God to "drive his team afield" as the railroad magnate to send his trains, with their millions of freight, thundering along their track. The farmer makes for the less disturbance of the public.

This is our class legislation, giving certain privileges to the strong and moneyed men of the land, to the prejudice of the poor man, the orphan, the widow, the wives, mothers and daughters of those who patronize the sale of intoxicating drinks.

Hennington Camp Ground.

The twenty-fifth annual meeting was held Aug. 20-30, inclusive.

Rev. Geo. R. Stuart and David Sullins, of Cleveland, Tenn., did most of the preaching. We had with us also, among our own brethren, Revs. E. H. Mennger, I. W. Cooper, W. L. Blackwell, B. W. Lewis, and A. B. Nicholson. Bro. D. C. Rawls, a local brother, spent a few days with us.

The results of the meeting were about 150 conversions and 50 accessions to the Methodist Church. Many promised to go to other churches; at least 75 will or have joined the church. This will go down in the history of the Hennington Camp Meeting as one of the best meetings held on these sacred grounds.

There were two collections taken. A brother in the ministry, worn and sick, needed a little of this world's goods. The preacher made the statement, and about $40 was cheerfully given. A thank-offering was taken, resulting in collection of $271.50, and turned over to the treasurer of the Mississippi Orphans' Home. How cheerfully people give to this great cause, and how few of our people have been given an opportunity! Let us praise God for what has already been done in this work and hope for more.

Bro. Stuart did most of the preaching, and did it well. He is especially apt in illustrations; his preaching might be styled "pictorial."

Dr. David Sullins is a grand man, either out of or in the pulpit. You can not touch him without feeling that you have touched a man, true and tried, with broad mind and big heart. While listening to him, I could not help wishing that I could have heard him when evidences of age were absent. It is so pleasant to meet an old man, growing old gracefully—to use his own figure, "ripening evenly and well."

Charley Tillman, of Atlanta, led the singing; and saying this is enough for all who have ever heard him. They will be ready to testify that the singing was good. Give Charley a choir, and he is a host in himself.

All in all, everything passed off pleasantly, and, best of all, the Lord was with us in power. M. L. B.

A Good Resolution.

Resolved by the Leake County Sunday-school Convention:

Resolved, That our senators and representatives in Congress be requested to use their best efforts to suppress the saloon business in all the public buildings owned and controlled by the United States, especially in the Capitol and other public buildings in Washington, where all our federal laws originate, are interpreted and enforced, to the end that a government of the people, for the people and by the people may be ably and conscientiously represented by level-headed, clear-minded men in the fear of God and in the love of truth.

Resolved, That the secretary of this convention furnish each one of our senators and representatives in Congress a copy of these resolutions.

FOR THE WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Week of Prayer and Thanksgiving for the W. F. M. S. of the North Mississippi Conference begins Sept. 21, and ends Sept. 27. Let this be made truly a week of prayer throughout our Conference. Prayer not only for the cause of missions abroad, and for our missionaries and work already established, but prayer for the church at home, that God may send his Spirit in convicting power into the hearts of his people, and arouse a mighty interest in the spread of his kingdom. Pray also fervently for an increase of members in our membership, especially in your own auxiliary, and work as you pray.

Let the first service be one of earnest thanksgiving for what has already been accomplished through the W. F. M. S. of the North Mississippi Conference. Ps. ciii, 1-5. Ps. oxvi, 1, 2, 12. Ps. cvii, 1, 8, 15, 21. II. Cor. ix, 15.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 22.

Intercessory Prayer.

Luke xi, 5-8. Matt. ix, 37, 38. John xvii, 9, 10, 20, 21.

Cor. xvi, 2.) VI. The perfecting of character. (II. Cor. viii, 7.) VII. Your own happiness. (Acts xx, 35.) VIII. God's glory. (Prov. iii, 9.)

FRIDAY, SEPT. 25.

Individual Responsibility.

Gen. iv, 9, 10. Prov. xxiv, 11, 12. Luke x, 25-37.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 26.

No service will be held, but let all remember to present the cause of missions in their closets before a throne of grace.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 27.

Let each auxiliary on this day either ask the pastor to preach a sermon on missions at 11 A. M., or else hold a public missionary meeting on Sunday night, by consent of the pastor.

If possible, the services of Mrs. Campbell, returned missionary from Soochow, China, and at present acting field secretary of the W. B. F. M., will be secured for our Week of Thanksgiving and Prayer, and she will visit as many auxiliaries as practicable. May God give us a week of great blessing and power!

Corinth District Meeting.

A joint meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary and Parsonage and Home Mission Societies of the Corinth district was held at Booneville, Miss., Aug. 29 and 30, conducted by the district secretaries, with Mrs. Bass, of Corinth, as recording secretary for both. The preparation service the night preceding, led by Mrs. J. R. Thrasher, was one of spiritual refreshing. Rev. A. P. Sage welcomed the ladies in behalf of his church, and greatly encouraged them by his words of hearty approval and commendation.

Saturday morning was given to the work of the Foreign Missionary Society, and was presided over by Mrs. E. D. Robbins, district secretary. The afternoon was devoted to the Parsonage and Home Mission work, with Mrs. Thrasher in the chair. Each of the five auxiliaries in the district sent a delegate or written report. All have done much local work. One new parsonage has been built, and two others bought and repaired since the organization of this work in the district, which is an evidence of the good accomplished at home, and interest is increasing in the general work. The paper read by Mrs. Dr. Bynum on "Our Literature" was instructive and helpful to all present. She gave many unquestionable reasons why all of our church literature should be in every Methodist family, and especially did she stress the importance of circulating the Woman's Missionary Advocate and Our Homes as sources from which to gain information in regard to woman's work in Southern Methodism. The papers on "The Benefits to be Derived from Monthly Meetings," by Mrs. Sadler, and, "Why Every Local Aid Society Should Become Connectional," by Mrs. Tucker, contained some valuable suggestions, and were discussed to the profit of all present. The address of welcome by Mrs. Rees made all delegates and visitors feel the warm hospitality of that city, "which, like our national capital, is one of magnificent distances," rendered so by the hills upon which it is built. Miss Anna Murray, of Ripley, responded with grace and appreciation, and beautifully voiced the sentiment of the visitors. Fraternal greetings were extended by the local W. C. T. U. and the Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church. Two recitations, well rendered by Misses Flora McKay and Mary Tucker, were very impressive, and sent some valuable truths to the hearts of the hearers. Rev. J. M. Wyatt preached the annual sermon from the text, "God is love"—a most inspiring theme. The papers on "That Then Owest," by Mrs. Mary Haskins, and "Woman's Part in the Evangelization of the World," read by Mrs. Wyatt, placed upon each Christian the thought of individual responsibility to our God and to our fellow-man. Mrs. J. S. Featherston presented the great demand for connectional work in the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. The interest manifested by the attendance at the business sessions, and the full house each night, was most gratifying to those earnest workers. The beautiful music rendered by the choir was thrilling and inspiring, and, altogether, we believe the Corinth district meeting will redound to the good of our cause and the glory of God.

An Appeal to the Vicksburg District.

In 1887 work was begun in our Conference in Woman's Department of Church Extension, having been organized at the session of Annual Conference, December, 1886.

This being my district, I considered it my duty to organize first at home; therefore, it was honored with the first auxiliary. In 1889 this was the banner district. Fifteen adult auxiliaries, with about 266 members, and 4 Home Builders, with 95 members; total, 19 auxiliaries, with 316 (about) members, had been organized. Three large flourishing Sabbath-schools were organized of persons who would not attend the church Sunday-schools; the superintendents of two working in both schools—one in the forenoon, and the other in the afternoon. The other was repeatedly mentioned and highly praised in the county paper by the present superintendent of public schools in Claiborne county. The receipts for regular fund from the auxiliaries from February, 1889, to December, 1889, amounted to about $92.06; the local fund, $67.50.

The December previous, at Annual Conference held in Vicksburg, at my solicitation an anniversary meeting of the Board of Church Extension was held, a speaker secured, who was Bishop Hargrove, who kindly consented to present our work and take a collection for parsonage at Carpenteria, California, which amounted to $103.66, and was credited to Vicksburg Auxiliary. Of the 23 persons in the Conference who were made life patrons of P. W. L. fund, four were of this district—one a minister on the district at the time. Some fine reports, with touching incidents, were received of mission work in pastoral charges. In 1890 my health gave way, and I was unable to work anywhere for some time, but added three auxiliaries to the district afterwards as district secretary.

CHURCHES AND PARSONAGES.

Number of parsonages in 1886, 9—valued at $11,450; number of churches, 10—valued at $88,400. In 1889, 12 parsonages—increase of 3, valued at $14,825; churches, 50½—increase of 10½, valued at $91,000. Several of these were aided by the Board of Church Extension, and one parsonage by Conference Board to the amount of $15.88. At present there are 15 pastoral charges, with 14 parsonages, valued at $16,500, being $2,100 more than the next highest in the Conference; number of churches, 45, valued at $66,350.

I think it was Mrs. Hargrove who said a few auxiliaries of only one member had reported, and she wished the district secretaries would endeavor to obtain one where more could not be secured. One earnest, consecrated woman, whose heart is alive to its needs, and fully appreciates the great work, could, with the Lord's help, accomplish much good.

Will not the ministers and all church members kindly help us, that we may do much more than we have ever done? MRS. E. D. JONES,
Dist. Sec.

Miss Elizabeth E. Holding.

In the death of Miss Holding the P. and H. M. S. suffers the same bereavement that is such a sore affliction to the W. F. M. S. She was ours, also, and we will miss the inspiration of her life and her tender, encouraging words in The Evangel, and our hearts go out in sympathy to Miss Gibson, who feels so keenly the loss of her co-worker. The account "of her last illness and the events that preceded it," in the September Evangel, is a beautiful tribute from Miss Gibson to the memory of one greatly beloved.

THE BABY ROLL.

I hope that the delegates to our annual meeting, now fast approaching, may spare time from larger aims to take up for discussion the Baby Roll. Without being specially authorized, I have, during the year, agitated the subject to some small extent, and the responses have been under the circumstances, quite encouraging. It is true, the dues are very small—only 25 cents per member; but this is a case where the pennies would rapidly multiply into dollars, if only a little pains were taken to see the mothers of the church (whether or not members of the society), for nearly every mother would gladly pay the trifling amount necessary to enroll her little one's name on this list. If all the babies in our Conference were on the roll, the sum derived from this source would swell our receipts very perceptibly, and it would be very sweet to have our babies helping to build homes for the babies of our preachers. Can any refuse to let them do this work? Is not the Savior calling, "Let the little ones come unto me?" I shall send up the roll to the annual meeting that the delegates may see what auxiliaries have taken an interest in this work. MRS. H. W. FOOTE.

Notice.

The fifth annual meeting of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of North Mississippi will convene in Oxford, Miss., Oct. 24-27. Opening service at 8 P. M. In order that the meeting may benefit the entire connection, all societies are earnestly requested to send representatives. Certificates should be procured wherever tickets are bought, by both delegates and visitors.

Notify Mrs. M. S. Collier, of Oxford, Miss., of names of delegates, and hour of arrival.

Sisters, let us come up to this meeting in the name of the Lord, earnestly beseeching his presence with us. Coming thus, we can not fail to be blessed.

Armies of Shadows.

An old man said he had had a great deal of trouble in his time, but the worst trouble he ever had was the trouble which didn't happen. The devil fights a good many of his battles with armies composed of shadows. A shadow can be made to move, and look more dreadful than anything of life. Don't worry about things you can't help, but be strong and of good courage by always having faith in God. If you hear a lion roar when you are where you ought to be, go forward and slay him. It will make a good beehive. When the tempter tries to dishearten you by calling attention to the trouble which is almost certain to happen next month, say, "The Lord is my Shepherd," and depend on him to lead you safely through it.—Ram's Horn.

Being ready to die is a small matter in comparison with being ready to live. He who is fitted to live even for a single day is in a state of fitness to die whenever God sees that dying is better than living for him. Living is the great thing. Dying is a mere incident in life.—Sunday-School Times.

Growing In Popularity.

THE MANY ADVANTAGES OFFERED BY THE BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS IN VIRGINIA.

The advances made as a health resort by the pretty town of Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va., are phenomenal. But they are merited. This lovely spot nestles in the hills of Mecklenburg County and has an altitude of 600 feet above the level of the sea. The Buffalo Lithia Springs are eight miles from Clarksville, on the Great Southern system, and a branch line of the Atlantic and Danville road delivers passengers immediately at the springs.

The hotel, of which the popular proprietor, Col. Thomas F. Goode, is the host, is doing business and will remain open until Oct. 1. The buildings are on the cottage plan, can accommodate 300 persons, while every facility exists for invalids to bathe in the mineral waters at the desired temperatures.

Medical men in all parts of the country are profuse in their praise of the therapeutic value of the water of the Buffalo Lithia Springs. It is a remedy for many of the ills to which flesh is heir, including rheumatism, gout, kidney disease and kindred ailments.

The locality is one of nature's grandest works. There are abundant facilities for fishing, boating, hunting and driving in the immediate vicinity. The hotel accommodations are excellent and the rates are remarkably reasonable.

Buffalo Lithia Springs will soon become a veritable Mecca for the pleasure-seeker as well as the invalid.—New York World.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Wilson Moore, P. C., Wesley circuit, Louisiana Conference, Sept. 9: "We are moving onward and upward on Wesley circuit. Our meetings have resulted in 35 or 40 conversions, and a goodly number of accessions. We are in the midst of the drouth, but are having a spiritual feast. Our collections will be short by reason of the drouth, but we intend to do our best."

Rev. Ben. P. Jaco, Olive Branch circuit, Sept. 9: "This morning leaves us at home after our revivals are all over. Have had fine meetings at each church. Had a good many conversions, several accessions, and a great awakening among the members of the church. Bro. J. H. Smith did us fine work, preaching a week at Kelly, Miss. Bro. J. R. Roberson was also with us at Olive Branch, where we had a gracious revival. We are greatly indebted to him for his most excellent services. Had a great meeting at Oak Grove. We were mainly assisted here by Bro. J. A. Bell, who made good talks and led the singing. He is a great power for God and the salvation of souls."

Rev. A. D. Miller, Hermanville, Miss., Sept. 8: "We have just held a two days' meeting at Carlisle Church, on Hermanville circuit, Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, and we had two of the most pleasant days I have spent in a long time. Dr. J. B. Murrah (president of Millsaps College) was with us, and preached four as fine sermons as it has been my privilege to listen to in a long time. My people were perfectly delighted with him and greatly edified. His visit will not soon be forgotten. He will ever find a hearty welcome here. We had large congregations, fine order, and good interest. It was a very profitable meeting indeed. May God graciously bless the good people of Carlisle Church, the Hermanville circuit, and everywhere, and bless and give the ADVOCATE and its editor great prosperity!"

Rev. J. Wilson Brown, P. C., Madison circuit, Mississippi Conference, Sept. 12: "Thursday after the second Sunday in August we closed a five days' meeting at Pocahontas. It was a precious season of grace. Over 20 accessions. Bro. J. S. Parker rendered delightful and effective aid, alternating with the pastor in preaching. A week later we closed a meeting of same duration at Pearl River. There was a revival and four accessions. With the exception of two sermons by Bro. Parker, Dr. Irvin Miller did the preaching. He was among many dear friends. His sermons were excellent. Bro. Norsworthy, our presiding elder, was helpful and effective, as usual, at third Quarterly Conference, Sept. 5 and 6. We reported 9 infants and 13 adults baptized, and 32 accessions for the quarter."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Lake, Miss.: "The twenty-first camp meeting at the Lake Camp Ground closed on the night of the second of September, with, perhaps, fifty or sixty penitents at the altar. There were about seventy families tented on the ground. The best of order prevailed throughout. The preaching was clear, scriptural, strong, and powerful. There were fifteen traveling and five local preachers present. There were about forty conversions and reclamations. Geo. D. Anders, J. T. Nicholson, P. H. Howse and J. M. Weems did most of the preaching. J. W. Chambers, R. F. Witt and W. M. Williams preached once each. Other preachers did good work in the altar. The choir, led by Miss Pattie Lewis, assisted by Mrs. Mamie Buckly and J. T. Lewis, did its part well. To God be all the glory."

Rev. E. E. Langford, P. C., Tranquil charge, Sept. 5: "We began a meeting the fifth Sunday in August at Pleasant Hill Church, and closed the following Friday night. Bro. J. D. Ellis, of Yazoo circuit, did the preaching, which was truly accompanied by the Holy Spirit, for there was such an awakening as I have not before witnessed for years. Backsliders were reclaimed, family altars established, scores of souls converted, forty-three accessions to the church, and a prayer meeting established by young converts. Among the number who joined the church were five or six fathers of grown children; yet they have never before taken a step heavenwards. In our 'testimony' service, on Friday night, there was an eagerness, seldom seen, to get up and tell of God's love and wonderful power to save. The older members were warmed up and promised to live nearer to God than ever before. Glory to God!"

Rev. P. E. Duncan: "I have just closed four of my protracted meetings, with gracious revivals at each one. The last one held at Maben I think specially worthy of mention. We have there a beautiful new church, but upon it there rested a church debt of two hundred and twenty-five dollars—a silent, yet seemingly insuperable barrier to an onward movement. They brought their offerings into the Lord's house and paid the debt, and he opened the windows of heaven and poured them out blessings until their cups of joy overflowed. Sixteen were added to our church, and several will join other churches. At the last service we asked them for money to seat the church, and they quickly responded with $169, making, with the amount already raised by the ladies, over $200 for that purpose. I wish to make grateful acknowledgement for valuable services rendered by our efficient presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, and Rev. W. H. Sanders."

Rev. S. B. Beall, Abbeville, La.: "Since our last report we closed a two weeks' meeting at Prairie Gregg, Aug. 11. Bro. Bernard, of New Iberia, was with us, and rendered faithful service; stood in favor with everyone. Bro. A. S. J. Neil, of Jackson Street, Lake Charles, came to our rescue and help on the fifth day of the meeting, and from that time did most of the preaching. Bro. Neil is truly a man of God and an efficient worker in the great cause. His preaching is of a high order, is clear, and every word seems surcharged with Holy-Ghost power, producing conviction and conversion in the lives of many. Anyone desiring assistance in the work will do well to secure his services. The church members were aroused to a sense of duty and Christian activity. Many souls enjoyed the refreshing presence and life-giving influences of the Holy Spirit, and were heard to exclaim, 'Glory to God!' We had fifteen accessions to the church. Baptized fifteen, and married a couple. We have received two parties into the church since the meeting closed, and yet several others to follow. God has wonderfully blessed our efforts this year, and we are ready to undertake to do greater things in his name. All praise be to Father, Son, and Blessed Spirit!"

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, P. C., Durant district, North Mississippi Conference, Sept. 10: "I have just closed a nine days' meeting at old Center Ridge, which resulted in great victory for God and Methodism in that vicinity. We had three services a day. Congregations were large, ranging from two to four hundred. The Holy Ghost came upon the people in great power, baptizing one hundred persons, who claimed Christ as their Savior. Had fifty-three accessions to the Methodist Church, and two to the Baptist Church. I was ably assisted by Rev. W. D. Bass. We are now in a meeting at Plattsburg, and the Lord is with us. Have had several conversions to date, and prospects for a great revival are encouraging. Bro. Bass is a power for God, and is mightily used of him in the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of Methodism. And that his work is durable is known by the fact that pocketbooks were baptized, and their old rusty hinges oiled and opened to God's cause, and every dollar of the pastor's salary raised in cash and subscription. They also cheerfully paid him one hundred dollars. Any pastor would do well to secure the services of Bro. Bass. He is loyal in every sense, and works in perfect harmony with the pastor and presiding elder. My Conference report will be doubled by reason of his help. And the Methodist flag in this charge is hoisted to a healthy atmosphere, and the flames of God's love are so kindled that Rural Hill charge shall be known and heard of in a coming day. Our new church at Center Ridge is nicely painted, and lumber on the ground with which to ceil between now and Conference. Have also bought and paid for two large lamps (three hundred candle power). Have also painted Rural Hill Church, finished ceiling, and repapered parsonage. 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow.'"

Insanity is the horrible dream of the night perpetually present during the day. Insanity in women is oftener due to disease of the organs distinctly feminine than to any other cause. The insane asylums of the country are full of women whose carelessness of their health in this particular line has sentenced them to a life that is less desirable than death. The weakness or shock that causes such insanity is frequently the result of childbirth. At the time when a woman's greatest usefulness should begin she is taken away from her duties, and from those she loves, and for months, or years, or forever is shut away from them by the bolts and bars of a hospital. Such things are absolutely unnecessary. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will prepare women for the trying time of parturition so that there will be no danger and comparatively little pain. It is the only medicine in the world that will accomplish this purpose. It is the only medicine of its kind devised by a regularly graduated, experienced and skillful specialist in the treatment of the diseases of women. It will cure any weakness or disease of the feminine organs. It strengthens and purifies them, relieving them of inflammation, soothing all pain, promoting regularity, and putting a stop to debilitating drains.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets aid the cure of all sorts of diseases by gently stimulating and invigorating the liver, by toning up the stomach, and by restoring to the entire digestive tract a regular, steady, natural, healthy action. Don't let an unscrupulous druggist delude you into believing that anything else is "just as good." He makes more money on the "just as good."

Politics in the Pulpit.

A short time since a prominent St. Louis divine stated from the pulpit on Sunday that he was going to vote for So-and-So for President of the United States. The announcement was greeted with a storm of applause which lasted several minutes. This is the first instance of this sort we have known in Southern Methodism, and we sincerely hope it will be the last. A preacher has no right to carry partisan politics into the pulpit, not even to the extent of declaring his partisan affiliations.

This is more especially the case in a time of great political excitement. If one preacher has a right to do a thing of this sort, all others have the same right. Let this become universal; let all our pulpits be arrayed in the garb of political partisanism, and who can fail to see the disaster that would result therefrom?

New Light upon an Old Subject.

Light has been thrown upon the hereditary effects of the drink habit by the investigations of Prof. Peelman, of the University of Bohn. In the early part of the present century a woman died who had been for years a confirmed drunkard. The record made by her descendants is thus summarized: "162 were professional beggars, 106 were of illegitimate birth, 181 were women who made a trade of unchasity, 64 were inmates of poorhouses, 7 were condemned for murder, and 76 others were convicted of serious crimes."

The publication of such facts from unquestionable sources we regard as the very best method of promoting the cause of temperance. The man or woman who continues the drink habit with such facts staring him in the face may as well be let alone. "Ephraim is joined to his idols."

A Warning That Should Be Heeded.

About two weeks ago three young men, accused of a nameless crime, narrowly escaped death at the hands of an incensed body of citizens at Libertyville, Iowa. That they were not lynched was due to the firmness and strategy of the sheriff. It now transpires that they were entirely innocent, and were the victims of the hallucination of a girl of unsound mind. The people of Libertyville and vicinity were horrified, as well as they might be, when they learned how near they came to putting an end to the lives of the accused parties. Here is a striking example of the tendency and danger of lynch law that ought to make a deep and lasting impression not only upon the community where this incident occurred, but upon every other community where there is any disposition upon the part of the people to substitute mob force for the authority of the courts.—Central Advocate.

Anarchism.

Anarchism is nihilism in Russia, and represents the extreme wing of French communism, and British and German socialism. It aims at sociological evolution. It holds that the foundation of laws regulating society is bad; hence the bad superstructure. It should not be deemed a misfortune when a defective building is torn down in order to make room for a modern edifice.

Religion is declared to be the root of all evil. Innate superstition and ignorance had secured its dominancy. Specifying religion, of every kind, legalized possession of property. But the claim is preposterous. All should possess all goods in common. Taking from the opulent is hence not theft, but a solemn right. Religion also encourages wedlock. But this relation tyrannizes the sexes. Hence existing immorality and unrest. Anarchism would easily solve the "woman's rights" question. Again, religion buries much capital in costly churches and temples. They are places of hebetation. Preachers are declared agents of this process. Are hence enemies of our race. Religion teaches the worship of the unknown. The idea of God is unthinkable and, hence, irrational. To enforce the whole a conscious hereafter, a heaven and hell, had been cunningly provided.

Anarchism feels assured that moral suasion will never reveal the truth and bring the desired result. Hence recourse is had to revolution. Dynamite, the torch, poison, the dagger are the favorite weapons. Ruin, devastation, destruction are declared the advance guard in securing the terrestrial paradise. As in the case of Phœnix, existing affairs must be consumed by fire, in order that the new and ideal society can rise from the ashes.

Fearful! Yes. And true. Have portrayed only part of the anarchist design. The system has many adherers. Thought formerly that only the few unwashed, disappointed and impracticable literati had embraced anarchism; but we were mistaken. Extravagance, bankruptcy, poverty, crime, add daily to their number. Are often found in quarters where not expected.

What do? We must admit that society is sick. It is bleeding from many wounds; its sores are numerous and chronically ulcerous. Superficiality, hypocrisy, arrogance, greed, prevarication, abound. High and low in their clutch. Hagenbeck would not sit idly by if his lions, tigers and leopards were lacerating each other.

We admit that sociology is not easily understood. Is as complicated as the question of finance—about which, at present, a great many incompetents talk nonsense. Philanthropists should dive into its depths and suggest remedies. Some of us are sinfully conservative. The old is not good because old, nor the new bad because of its newness. Impeding progress is a crime. Common sense teaches accommodation to ever-changing circumstances. Our earth is in constant motion. So the human heart. Society partakes of these characteristics. Perfection the conscious or unconscious aim. Upward, forward. But the remedy suggested by anarchism will not answer the designed end.

We hold that the Christian religion is the only panacea for suffering society. Men must embrace the religion set forth in the Bible and live according to its precepts. In the wounds of Jesus all wounds of society can be healed. General practice of the doctrine set forth in the Master's beatitudes would soon bring about that craved-for terrestrial paradise. The religion of Jesus is not the cause, but the cure of human ills. The only cure. We must work and pray for its general adoption.

But here misgiving possesses our soul. From appearances the millennium will not soon come. Has not sterile churchism supplanted true Christianity? Forms and symbols abound. Shibboleths and Siboleths. "Have the name to live." Indifference everywhere. Stagnation. Pharisaism rampant. Outsiders filled with aversion.

We fear that stereotype orthodoxism is the cause of the manifest ecclesiastical inanition. Content with the laurels achieved. In church life progress has not been emphasized. Higher, deeper. "Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" The ignoramus may imagine that there is no more for him to learn. The conceited Christian that there are no more graces for him to acquire. Shout, Victory! while Satan carries off the spoils. Save the perishing. By the beauty of your life entice outcasts to your way of thinking. Accommodate yourself to the ever-changing circumstances. Forward. A.

Independent Preachers.

Independence of character a rarity. Most men like ivy, requiring the sturdy oak or stone-wall on which to lean. But this independence frequently degenerates into obstinacy. Stubbornness is odious in high and low.

Yes, Methodist preachers are, as a class, very independent. Usually men of marked individuality. Most of them not trained for the ministry from early boyhood. Hence devoid of professionalism. Character of many fully developed when the ministry was embraced. The itinerancy, too, encourages independence.

But, though independent, Methodist preachers are no less true. Before they became preachers they were Christians; before they became Christians they were men. The office of preacher does not divorce former worth. Only adds thereto. A preacher who is not a Christian is a monstrosity. If not a man, he is a disgrace to any calling. Now, Christianity prevents equivocation; manhood, duplicity. When our preachers joined the itinerancy they promised implicit obedience to their official superiors, submission to their godly judgment. They keep their promise.

Lawlessness is not independence. I'm independent, says the toper, and he quaffs another glass of ale; I'm independent, says the thief, and he robs his neighbor. True independence moves within the precinct of law and order. Too independent to transgress accepted statutes.

It is possible that unfortunate circumstances weaken and even abolish sympathy with the system of our church. Have known such cases. Should this have transpired, the independent preacher will seek severance from the church of which he is a member. His religion and manhood forbid unholy agitation to convert our membership to his peculiar way of thinking. Have promised to keep, not mend our rules. Hence severance. We lament the loss, but laud the manhood.

Methodist preachers are independent of secular pursuits. Are assured that the Lord and his people will provide. If the membership discovers that the preacher is entirely dependent on them for support, that support will be given. They are also independent of praise or blame. Certainly, they court favor with the people. Abhor rudeness. Study how to be polite, urbane. But, convinced that they are certainly on the Lord's side, walking with him in prayer, led by his Spirit, they would under no circumstances sacrifice religion and manhood for the good will of the people. They know well that popularity is of chameleon character. That those who shouted, "Hosanna!" one day, cried, "Crucify him!" on the day succeeding.

However, Methodist preachers are not independent of the means of grace. Are often alone with God, and on their knees. Study the Bible habitually—not only professionally. Not independent of Christian graces. Are humble, meek, courageous. Are affectionate and kind—to wife and children first. Not independent of fellow-preachers. Are a chain. If one link suffers, the chain suffers. Predecessors may be successors. Take care of each other's reputation. Not independent of the library. Abhor the fanaticism which decries books and exults in noise. Spend several hours every day with wholesome publications. Desires to give to his people the best. They know that dullness and monotony nauseate. Try to be eloquent.

Independent! Fie! on preachers of crouching, crying disposition. Abjectly servile. Basely time-serving. Rich and poor, high and low, superiors and inferiors, are sinners, and if saved, they are saved by grace. Methodist preachers appreciate self-respect. Next to the pearl of great price, this self-respect is deemed most valuable. Self-respect makes independent.

A.

The Memphis Advocate reports the death in that city recently of a Methodist woman, Mrs. Mary M. Porter, who was more than ninety-nine years old.

Depreciatory Criticism.

Some of our best sermons fail to accomplish the desired end. Love's labor lost. The wind not less responsive than the hearers.

One of the causes of the apparent failure of our efforts is attributable to traducing comment. Sometimes fellow-preachers are unwittingly entrapped by this vice. Insinuatingly intimate the generality of plagiarism; that old sermons are too often reproduced; that the manner of the speaker had marred his discourse; that the sermon was sadly devoid of logic or elegance, etc. Hearing such and similar comment, the lesson of the sermon, even of subsequent discourses, is no longer heeded. Suspicion of imposition or imperfection renders edification impossible.

It was on the night succeeding our conversion that we incidentally overheard an elderly preacher in the presence of fellow workers mercilessly criticise the sermon of a young brother preached that night. That sermon, though crude, had done us much good. That criticism almost caused us to abandon our religious aspirations.

At times faithful preachers are amazed that their discourses, though searching and full of holy fire, fail to move certain parties. Neither the terrors of the law nor the charms of infinite love find any effect. Inquiry will frequently reveal that some wicked critic, perhaps a father, mother, or brother, has caused the hardness of heart by repeated disparaging comment. We knew of a large family where none of the children are converted. Revivals come and go, but they remain unmoved. Discovered that the worldly mother was the cause. In the presence of her children repeatedly ridiculed some utterances of the preacher, made light of the whole effort, creating thus utter indifference about holy things.

Even should the sermon be poor, there is always something to praise. Invariably is the text excellent, because taken from the Bible. Say something commendatory of every pulpit effort. Approve the good. Laud the laudable. Detracting criticism will enable the fowls of hell to come and "devour the seed." A.

In the Living Present.

The Pope, in a recent encyclical, advised that every Roman Catholic subscribe to a paper of his church. Now the Northwestern Catholic quotes the paragraph in question, but complains that the subscribers are sadly in arrears with payment. Only one-third paid. Another encyclical is demanded ordering subscribers to pay for their paper.

Jennie Chandler says in The Journal of Hygiene that women are almost generally addicted to pessimism. Recommends as only cure cultivation of beauty. Beauty is rightfully the realm of the fair sex. Should individually cultivate physical, mental and spiritual beauty. Man is as old as he feels; woman as old as she looks.

The Hungarians know how to reimburse themselves when robbed. The term of office of the mayor of Kopespar having expired, the city council, by unanimous vote, in acknowledging his great worth, granted him a donation of three thousand florins. In a second resolution that council admits that the outgoing mayor had certainly embezzled that number of florins. Going to court being too expensive, the money donated is confiscated for reimbursement.

Not to vote as we pray is the height of inconsequence. Political emancipation very necessary. The Independent assures our Roman Catholic papers, one and all, support the Chicago platform and ticket. The devotion of Tammany to the Roman pontiff is as well established as its political status. Be a free man, Vote as you pray. If the political sinner be cast into hell, whore will the ecclesiastical saint, being the former, be found?

Dyspepsy general. Healthy, robust men and women a rarity. Emaciated, pallid. Intellectual dyspepsy not less general than the physical. Religious books insipid, church organs dull. Even the Bible nauseates. Incapable of original thought. But the worst of all is spiritual dyspepsy. Prayer deemed superfluous. Divine worship a bore. The end is darkness here and hereafter. Said the Latin: "Mens sana incorpore sano."

Bishop Ireland, exceedingly crafty, orders that the church schools of his diocese hereafter do not charge tuition. Making them free-schools. At the same time he urges all Roman Catholics no longer to send their children to our public schools. The latter would wean the children away from the church. Both schools being now free, the church school should be preferred by the faithful.

Presbyterianism in our country has derived much strength from immigration. Scotland has added many members. Belfast, in that country, has 275 Presbyterian Churches and Chapels. We admire the dignity and conservative element in Presbyterianism. In our country it is trying to learn aggressiveness from Methodism. Might we not reciprocate this imitative quality? ICH DIEN.

ELEMENTS OF THE DIFFERENTIAL AND INTEGRAL CALCULUS. WITH EXAMPLES AND PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS. By J. W. Nicholson, A. M., LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the Louisiana State University and A. and M. College. 8 vo. 286 pages. 1896. University Publishing Co., New York and New Orleans.

This carefully prepared text-book by an able and experienced mathematician is a striking departure from the old-time methods of treating the topics involved, and has been characterized as "a successful effort to modernize calculus—to develop its principles by proceeding from the simple to the complex." The work has been prepared specially for beginners, but the author has aimed also to make it sufficiently comprehensive for the requirement of the usual college course. Originality, lucidity, and practical value are some of the special features. Dr. Alfred Hume, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Mississippi, thus commends it:

"Prof. Nicholson's Calculus, based on his conception, Proportional Variations, introduces the student to the subject by a method at once simple, natural and comprehensive. Metaphysical difficulties are avoided, the questioning mind of the thoughtful beginner is satisfied, and the reader soon finds himself the intelligent possessor of a tool with which he can work with increasing pleasure and power as he progresses. It is a work of great practical unity. Space is very properly given to some applications to problems in mechanics. I feel no hesitation in saying that, in my opinion, this admirable text-book should receive the careful consideration of workers in mathematics generally."

The work has received equally high praise from many other prominent educators.

THE FAMILY A NECESSITY OF CIVILIZATION. By Rev. John B. Robins, A. M., D. D., author of "Christ and Our Country," and "The Influence of the Death of Jesus." 16 mo. 317 pages. 1896. Price, $1. Published by the author, Atlanta, Ga.

This book, dedicated to "all persons interested in the purity of the home and the elevation of the children of American citizens," is a clear and forceful presentation of some facts that need to be strongly emphasized just now. Loose and iniquitous divorce laws, the growth of club life, and great laxity of sentiment respecting social purity, are some of the disintegrating forces at work threatening the destruction of family life, with all its hallowed associations and beneficent influences. The only hope of the country, the author shows, is in preserving the sanctity of the home, and in training the children of the land to love "the pure, the beautiful, and good." Upon Christian parents, aided by the church, the Sunday-school, and the Christian college, devolves this momentous task. The author rightly says: "The home is the foundation upon which all else rests. The one thing to study on the part of a statesman, a minister of the gospel, and a historian, is the home life of a people. There are no powers of law, nor arms, nor churches, that can sustain a nation when its homes are contaminated and its children corrupted. Revolution is the only remedy left."

The book contains much wholesome truth and many valuable suggestions, and ought to be widely read. It can not fail to prove of absorbing interest to all parents, and to preachers, teachers, and older young people. Among the subjects treated are: Marriage, The Purpose of Married Life, Heredity, Christian Nurture, and the Punishment of Children.

Goodness expands the heart and makes it humble. The larger, the better, the nobler your heart is, the more you will be inclined to make allowance for others, and the more you will say and feel, "God, be merciful to me a sinner!"—Robertson.

The session of the Illinois Conference of the M. E. Church held at Tuscola, last week, was memorable on account of a sermon preached by W. H. Milburn, chaplain of the United States Senate. He joined that Conference fifty-three years ago. Almost all the actors in the events of that period have passed away. He still maintains his place among the great pulpit and platform orators of the world. That a blind man should have accomplished so much is certainly wonderful. His example should be a stimulus to young men of limited facilities for the acquisition of knowledge.

We hear much of the smallness of individual contributions to missions and other church benevolences. The people are constantly berated for doing so little. This is all wrong. People who give at all give a great deal more than the average per member in any church. In many instances they give more than a hundred times as much. It follows that the blame for the smallness of the average does not rest upon those who give, but upon those who do not give. That is the way a good Baptist brother put it. He was right. Let us quit abusing those who give, and try to devise some method of reaching those who do not.—Nashville Advocate.

Vacation days are ending. Recruited health and restored energies are now to be enlisted in the service of our blessed Master. The call for redoubled effort is loud and pressing. The pulpit should present the claims of the gospel with greater zeal and force than ever. The Sabbath-school should be pushed along all lines with increasing vigor. The weekly prayer-meeting and Sabbath services should be engaged in with the largest possible interest and devotion. Begin the campaign for Jesus Christ at once. Wait not for a convenient season, or more favorable occasion, but bring to the Lord's work a more active brain, a more consecrated heart, a riper character, a nobler manhood, a richer experience and constantly multiplying power. Give to the cause of Christ the best of your command.—Presbyterian.

Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference.

We have closed the third round, and entered upon the fourth, on Sardis district. This is, perhaps, the best average district in the Conference. Every charge, save Burgess mission, has a parsonage, or will have next year. We have a good class of people, practical farmers, with comfortable homes, and good-livers, merchants, professional and business men. They are intelligent, appreciative, and loyal to the church. Notwithstanding drouth and short crops, our preachers will be well cared for.

The district is served by an excellent corps of pastors, faithful, earnest men, who believe in and proclaim a free, full, and present salvation. The impress for good left by my earnest, devoted predecessor, Rev. H., C. Morehead, is seen over the district.

Mid-Summer, with us, is the protracted meeting season; the time when kings, the preachers, go forth to battle. It is surprising how the spirit and zeal of preacher and people rise to the demands of the "big meeting," and impel them forward under all the discomforts of the "heated term." The protracted meeting is the occasion of focal interest for the year. The people look forward to it, and through drouth and heat and dust come out in eager crowds. The preacher is wonderfully sustained amid the turmoil of body and travail of spirit incident to the occasion. While the mercury mounts far up into the nineties, in the sweltering heat, with wilted collar and clinging garments with songs and words of power, he shouts the battle cry, and leads the marshalled hosts to certain victory. Service ended, he goes home with some good brother, cools off, dries out, says his prayers, sleeps well and wakes to renew the conflict on the morrow.

Revival fires have burned brightly in many places. One pastor, a veteran of forty campaigns, writes: "We are having a fine meeting; the woods are on fire. A man over fifty years old converted last night." Another, at the close of his round of meetings, reports 57 received on profession of faith. The entire charge on a solid foundation—The Rock of Ages;" and then adds, "We give God all the glory." Another still reports over 50 conversions at one meeting, and over 70 on the entire circuit. At two quarterly meetings the pastors, being unordained, candidates awaited the coming of the presiding elder for baptism. Not by immersion, but by the equally orthodox and better method of affusion.

Meetings of more or less success have been held in almost every charge. And so the work moves forward. Sinners are converted, believers are edified, the churches strengthened, and God is glorified.

As by common consent, our preachers have, for the most part, adopted the plan of helping one another rather than of sending off for the professional revivalist. This is well. The sympathies of the people are bestowed upon their own pastors, and our preachers are found closer together in the fellowship of toil. This plan is more economical, and the money expended is kept within the district. A few brethren from outside the district have rendered good service. We expect to make a good report at the Annual Conference.

T. C. WIER, P. E.

Will the preachers of the Mississippi Conference please remit me their church extension funds by check on New Orleans, New York, Jackson or Vicksburg, or postoffice order on Vicksburg? I would like to collect every dollar before Conference meets.

A MOST SUCCESSFUL OPENING OF THIS SPLENDID INSTITUTION.

This time-honored institution began its session this morning with the brightest opening in its history. The large chapel was crowded with patrons, pupils and friends of the college. There were about 140 pupils present the first day, and a large number have not yet entered. There are between 50 and 60 in the boarding department, and quite a number to come between this and October. Already six States are represented. President Beeson made a plain, practical talk, referring to the improvements that have been made and will be made. He then gave intermission and asked the patrons to meet his faculty. A more intellectual looking corps of teachers could hardly be gotten together. They shewed themselves to be professional teachers well posted in their work. We were struck at the intelligent appearance of the student body. The boarders are from eight or ten different colleges, and many of them seem already to be fine scholars. They were attracted to this college by the excellent faculty and high curriculum. Young ladies will not be compelled to pass by Meridian to go to other colleges.

It was quite a compliment to President Beeson that many of his old students passed by other colleges to follow him. This is a fine recommendation.

We learn from President Beeson there is one thing needed in order for this institution to grow. That is more room. The bed rooms are all taken, and he is now having his sitting-rooms and other rooms prepared for special purposes and making bedrooms of them. He is determined not to turn pupils away, nor to put them in rooms out of the college. That would injure the reputation of a boarding school. But the business men of the city ought to get together and take some steps towards enlarging the college buildings. — Meridian Daily Herald, Sept. 16.

Epworth College Opening.

Epworth College opened yesterday (Sept. 16) with fifty boarders, and many more to follow. A nice program had been prepared, and quite a number of visitors took part in the same. Rev. J. W. Honnoli gracefully retired from the presidency, and Dr. Standifer was placed at the head of said college. A happy and efficient faculty will second his efforts to make this the best female college in the land.

Holly Springs is fortunate in securing such an affable, dignified, scholarly president. Standifer will make an enviable history for Epworth College. Let the lovers of Christian education find no small reason sufficient for withholding their support from this movement. Inspiring young lives with holy and pure purposes is not a matter to be discouraged for small reasons.

The advantage of location by this college is not inconsiderable. Holly Springs is high and healthy and accessible. The cultured people of Holly Springs will support their own schools. Therefore, Epworth College is destined to be the peer of any other college in the education of the daughters of Mississippi.

Prayer Meeting Topic for September.

THE ENEMIES OF CHRIST.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 27—ENEMIES BY INDIFFERENCE.

(Luke xiv, 16-20; xxiii, 12; John vii, 3 5).

I.—THE EXCUSE MAKERS.

In our Lord's parable of the marriage feast we have an illustration of indifference to Christ, and of the excuses which it offers. There is shown the facility with which people make excuses for rejecting Christ, not a single one of the invited guests having the slightest difficulty in framing an excuse. There is also shown the variety of excuses which are made by different individuals, and yet the unity in variety, in that while each one has a different excuse, yet all spring from the common ground of preference of worldly interest to the benefits of the gospel. Another point of the parable is that, while the excuses of those invited to the feast were entirely satisfactory to themselves, they were, nevertheless, not valid to the master of the feast; and this shows that, however satisfactory to themselves are the excuses of men for indifference, they are, nevertheless, excuses which will not excuse.

A failure to accept Christ's invitation of grace through indifference to its privileges and preference of earthly joys, is an act of base ingratitude, and everyone who is guilty of it according to Christ's own teaching numbers one of his enemies.

II.—PILATE AND HEROD.

On the day of Christ's trial and crucifixion Pontius Pilate, governer of Judea, and Herod Antipas, governor of Galilee and Perea, who had previously been enemies, were reconciled. Their previous differences were probably over some question of disputed jurisdiction. Pilate sent Christ to Herod because he desired to evade an unpleasant responsibility, and Herod may have accepted this act as a concession to his authority, or as an act of honor to him while a visitor in Jerusalem. Herod sent him back to Pilate in mock royalty, but without passing any sentence upon him. Thus a lack of desire on the part of Pilate to be responsible for Christ's death resulted in a reconciliation with Herod, but his indifference to Christ was sufficient to cause him to consent to His death when he was forced to a decision, and when any other decision would have been adverse to his own interests. The indifference of Herod to Christ's fate was apparently not disturbed by his conscience. He seemed to conclude that it made little difference whether he were put to death or not.

III.—CHRIST'S BRETHREN.

Christ had four brothers, whose names were James, Joseph, Simon, and Judas. None of them seemed to have believed on him fully before the time of his death, but became disciples afterward. Their skeptical spirit causes them to urge Jesus, on one occasion, to prove that he was what he claimed to be, by leaving obscure Galilee, where he was laboring, and by going into Judæa, where he might have opportunity to do mighty works that would attract national attention, and would convince men that he was the Messiah. Their unbelief seems to have been due to the false idea that they possessed of the character of the Messiah and his work.

Missionary Society at Grenada Collegiate Institute.

On the reopening of the Grenada Collegiate Institute the young ladies reorganized their missionary society on the first Sabbath, with Mrs. Mary Hargrove in the chair. Mrs. Hargrove gave us a very pleasant little talk, giving us four very cogent reasons why we should be members of the W. F. M. S., and ended in obtaining sixty-five names.

Nominations were made and officers elected as follows: Miss Ardine Hays, Byhalia, Miss., president; Miss Mamie Easter, Aberdeen, Miss., vice-president; Miss Bessie Ramsey, Greenville, Miss., recording secretary; Miss Virgie Robersen, Chapeltown, Miss., corresponding secretary; Miss Callie Wiseman, Coldwater, Miss., treasurer; Mrs. Hargrove, Oxford, Miss., traveler.

It was decided that the young ladies would raise enough money to educate a Chinese girl in one of our Christian colleges in China, that she may guide her people to Christ. Only $40 is needed for this work, and Mrs. Malone, our president's dear wife, donated $10 of this sum at once. We are confident that we will make this a success. After a sweet prayer by Mrs. Hargrove we adjourned until the first Sabbath in October.

The Johnston Institute.

The Johnston Institute has opened up work with ninety-six students, most of whom are boarding pupils. They are coming in daily. We hear of many others who expect to enter with us soon. We are much gratified with the prospects for this session. The class in music has grown so large that we shall have to employ other help in that department. We have a very large class in elocution, and there are many of the students who will take our business course. All these large classes are due to the excellent instruction and the wonderfully cheap tuition. The work of building is steadily going on on the campus. Three new buildings are now going up, and others are contemplated. Our school is opening up the way to liberal education for many poor boys and girls.

Humbugs by the Score.

This is an age of arrant humbugs. Spiritualism, faith-cure, theosophy, Christian science, divine healing and all such are nothing but the baldest pretensions. To believe in them is a prostitution of reason; to follow after them is self-stultification. We have no compromise whatever to make with them. They are simply demoralizing and damning delusions without one single redeeming feature. We protest against this wholesale business of humbuggery and beg our people to put upon them the stamp of their indignant disapprobation. If there were even a nucleus of good, a modicum of sanity and healthfulness in such schemes as we have enumerated above, we might possibly bear with them. But they are evil, only evil, and that continually, with the devil at the helm. If men want light let them go to the Light of the world; if they want salvation and hope let them go to the Fountain of life. To run after spiritualism and this kindred brood of abominations is to decipher the problems of life by a phosphorescent glow rather than by a divinely-ordained luminary and to drink the green, slimy ooze of a stagnant pool rather than the crystal, health-giving waters of a celestial well-head. The patronizing of these contemptible humbugs is the standing disgrace of modern life. That intelligent, cultured, honorable men and women should run after an itinerant peddler of magic and manifest any faith whatever in thaumaturgic napkins is a mystery to us. Spiritualistic jugglers are plying a good trade, and the art of humbuggery is in its golden age.—Texas Advocate.

A YEAR AGO.

A year ago I
A year ago I had my baby here,
With hair of gold, and eyes to blue and clear;
A year ago I heard his pattering feet,
And listened to his childish babble sweet.
Now he is gone—gone whither? Who can say?
I only know he left me that sad day,
A year ago.

And is that all?
Is there no comfort for the sobbing heart?
No balm to ease, no hand to bind the smart?
Are all my hopes lost in a bleak Unknown,
And is my baby wandering forth alone?
My baby, whom I loved and tended so,
And soothed to sleep with mother-croonings low,
A year ago!

Nay, heart, not all!
For, seel beyond, in countries not unknown,
My baby waits, well loved, and not alone;
A strong Hand guides him, lest his feet should fall,
And loving ears are quick to hear his call;
He waits full happy, safe from all alarms;
For Jesus took my baby in his arms,
A year ago.

Promising Men.

He that has but four and spends five will soon need no purse, but he will most likely begin to use his wits to keep himself afloat, and take to all sorts of dodges to manage it.

Nine times out of ten they begin by making promises to pay on a certain day when it is certain they have nothing to pay with. They are as bold at fixing the time as if they had my lord's income. The day comes round as sure as Christmas, and then they haven't a penny-piece in the world, and so they make all sorts of excuses and begin to promise again. Those who are quick to promise are generally slow to perform. They promise mountains and perform molehills. He who gives you fair words and nothing more feeds you with an empty spoon, and hungry creditors soon grow tired of that game. Promising men are not great favorites if they are not performing men. When such a fellow is called a liar he thinks he is hardly done by; and yet he is so, as sure as eggs are eggs, and there's no denying it, as the boy said when the gardener caught him up the cherry tree.—Spurgeon.

Woman's Kingdom.

Even in the midst of this age which clamors for novelties and delights in changes of the most startling sort, we are not ashamed to confess our faith in the old-fashioned doctrine that woman's kingdom is pre-eminently the household. We can do this while at the same time unfeignedly rejoicing that woman's sphere has been so marvelously broadened in these later years. Now that women are found in all sorts of employments, so that it is much easier to say where she is not than where she is, there is far better opportunity than before for the permanent securing of "that holy household love that through our homes doth move." It is now not marriage or nothing, as a means of livelihood, nor are girls compelled to take the first offer through fear of coming to want. This is a very great blessing in that it enables them to wait with modesty and dignity until the right one appears, and helps them to avoid that hideous, heart rendering tragedy—union in form and in flesh where there is no union in reality and in spirit.

But this modern offering to women of so wide a choice in occupations, and the emancipation that springs from it, should not be suffered for a moment to dim the brightness of the truth that her noblest function, her chief profession, still is to be a wife and mother. The idea must in no way be permitted to gain currency that there is something finer and higher in being independent and working out a career in some more public position. It would be a sad day for the world if any such notion became generally accepted. Let it be emphasized that there is no higher title than queen of the home. What influences gather round and go forth from the fireside and the hearthstone! She who rocks the cradle really rules the world. The home is next the sanctuary in sacredness. It is itself a kind of sanctuary, consecrated with mother love. It is the cherished refuge from the storms of life and the best preparation for breasting those storms. "The love of mother," it has been said, "is the last cable that holds the youth to his moorings. Every other anchor drags, but while that holds he is almost certain to outride the wildest gales." It is the glory of the Anglo-Saxon race that it prizes its home. If the time comes when the word sounds less sweet to the American ear, or holds poorer meanings, the day of national decay and death will be perilously near. The hearthstone has well been called the corner-stone of the republic. It must be carefully laid, and then kept clean and bright that happy hearts may cluster about it and give hearty thanks to God.

She, then, who more than any other makes the home, may fitly feel that in its keeping is a field for her fullest energy and greatest honor. There is certainly no place where influences so strong and permanent can be exerted. There is no work that requires higher qualities or reaps more glorious reward. The reason why there is so much left for philanthropists to do is because the home work is done so badly. The greatest reform is needed there, and only woman can accomplish it. Man may be a head of the family, but woman is the heart controlling and diffusing its life-blood. Let her never be induced to depreciate the importance of the home, or be discontented with its burdens or desert its duties. Let her count them the highest possible privilege and her supremest crown of rejoicing.—Mid-Continent.

The Culture of the Imagination.

And I would say, shortly, two things that will help you. One is this: Endeavor to have before you some type of noble and elevated character. If you come across a young man, for instance, who habitually respects his father and mother—for piety lies at the foundation of character—who always regards women with respect whether they be poor or whether they be rich, who does not think his own precious self the end of his existence, who is willing to live for others besides himself, who never allows an impure word to cross his lips, and would scorn to say anything not perfectly true, and fears God and honors Christ—if you see such a man, or catch sight of his figure in the ways of life, lay hold of that man, and make him your friend if possible. If that is not possible, hear the man speak, and see what he does. For just as when a painter secures a noble face once, you will notice how it goes through all his work, so, too, here, you will find that friendship will have the saving action of sanctification upon your character.

Let me also say: Diet your imagination upon noble and princely books. If you have to read a good deal of trash in the daily newspapers for utilitarian purposes, forget it soon, and above all things never read a book, I beseech you—as a man having passed through temptation, I beseech you—never read a book that will ever leave a permanent stain upon your imagination. Take the great classics of humanity. Read them in the original if you are able; if not, in the translations. Say to yourself, "I will have the great books at any rate." Read Homer, read Virgil, read Dante, read Bunyan, read Shakespeare, and, above all—as a good and wholesome work, especially suitable for commercial life, which has not too much of the romantic—read the fiction of Sir Walter Scott. It is amazing how books elevate the imagination, and suggest great types and noble thoughts.—Ian MacLaren.

A Good Deed.

An innocent country girl recently came to this city on the invitation of a former friend and under promise of a good situation. Being a total stranger in the city, she asked a gentleman to direct her to a house the number and street of which she had written on a card. He kindly went with her to the place, but having his suspicions aroused by the appearance of things, he immediately reported the case to the police station near by. The house was well known to the officers as of worse than doubtful reputation; so one of them at once went, found the girl, and explained to her the nature of the place. She gladly accompanied him to a place of safety.

Praise is due this unknown gentleman for thus rescuing this innocent girl. He certainly did not go on the assumption that he was not his sister's keeper, but the moment he had a suspicion that she was in danger, he proceeded to take steps to save her. Servants of Jesus are trying to do this for multitudes of people, but the difficulty is many of these people are not willing to be rescued. Young people, for instance, will not believe what older and wiser people tell them about the dangers of certain places and persons and things. They insist on finding out for themselves. When they find out, it is often too late, as it probably would have been in the case cited, if there had been even a slight delay.—Pittsburg Advocate.

In the spiritual world a man is measured not by his genius, but by his likeness to God. God does not reason nor remember, but he loves.—F. W. Robertson.

One who is doing his best is pretty sure to have this recognized; and one who is not doing his best may be equally sure that it will be known. A keen observer said, in passing a building that was in process of construction: "I can always tell whether those fellows are doing 'time-work' or 'piece-work.' In one case the blows of their hammers drag along slowly, and seem to say, 'By the day, by the day;' in the other case the hammers strike briskly, and say, 'By the job, by the job.'" Consciously or unconsciously, our actions show to those around us the spirit that is prompting them. It is the work into which has gone the best life and energy of the worker that finally counts, in the sight of both God and men.—Sunday-School Times.

HYGIENE.

Physical Culture Don'ts.

The author of the Preston Papers furnishes "Educational Exchange," some excellent suggestions, under the above head. Here are some of them:

Don't stoop. Your chest is never too round or full for easy, deep breathing, and your shoulders give a much better appearance to your outline if back in proper place instead of aiming to get as far "behind thee" as possible. A good outline is not to be despised. Besides tailors and dressmakers find it much more difficult to get a good "fit" over stoop shoulders and hollow chest. If you have no regard for your chances of longevity, consider this.

Don't neglect your teeth. China ones may be more beautiful than yours, but they will never serve you half as well. Cleanliness will do much towards their preservation, and has the recommendation (in these days of financial stringency) of being cheap. There is "protection" in it which can not be monopolized by either leading political party.

Don't mistake idleness for rest. A change of occupation will bring a new set of forces and organs into play; and if your mind is weary take an opportunity to "relax" in some operation that is manual, capable of performance without much manual exertion. On the other hand, if more wearied physically than mentally, a few minutes of absolute rest, relaxing the entire body, a general "letting go" of yourself, followed by a brisk walk in the open air, will make a new creature of you. Mind, I say "brisk." A funeral pace is better than no exercise, of course: but for a genuine recreation of the entire self, I have never found anything better than a good walk at a smart pace. It starts the sluggish blood, quickens the pulse, compels the skin to extra duty and helps appetite and digestion. If you are boarding and your landlady increases the price of your "taxation without representation" at the table, "even up" by going to your physician less frequently. Do you know how to walk? Few people do.

Don't neglect nor underestimate the value of the bath, but be careful how, when and in what kind of bathing you indulge. For some purposes one kind at a certain time; for others an entirely different one, and at different times of the day, is most efficacious. Do you understand the hygienic rules for bathing? Have you ever tried sun, air, oil or dry friction baths? Of course for cleanliness there is only one kind—warm water and soap, which should be taken just before going to bed. A warm bath is also a wooer of sleep. Let the wakeful take the hint. On the other hand, a cold bath is a tonic, invigorating, exciting—but can not be endured by all, and should be used with care.

Don't live altogether indoors. Go out every day regardless of weather, except in the matter of protecting yourself against wet and cold. Wind and sunshine you ought to love—and rain and snow, also, when you can be sure of a warm room and warm dry clothing on your return to the house.

Don't sit in warm or damp clothing. If you find yourself obliged to remain in such, through accident, keep exercising until the clothing is dry. Do you dress properly, so as to guard against the evil effects of possible dampness in going to school?—National Educator.

OBITUARIES

GALLOWAY At the residence of her son-in-law, in Canton, Miss., Oct. —, 1895, our mother, Mrs S J. GALLOWAY, gently fell on sleep. She was happily married to Dr. Jas. H. Galloway, Oct —, 1854 Of this union seven children were born, six of whom yet live.

Mother was not faultless, for she was human; but many, many were her excellencies. A graduate herself, great was her appreciation of a collegiate training, and great was her desire that we should have one. With deep emotion I recall her toil and care for us; how she did work day after day—ay, and night after night—with us, and for us, in our books

The preacher always found in her a warm friend. I do not remember to have ever heard her speak unkindly of her pastor She loved them all. Said one when told of her death, while tears of grateful remembrance unbidden fell, "She was my best friend."

Great comfort was derived by our mother from singing. How earnestly she used to sing that sweet old song, "I love to steal awhile away from every cumb'ring care." Oh, she had learned the "secret place of the Most High"

Many times has she read the Bible through. She loved it; it was her chief consolation in her closing days Her faith was as simple as a little child's in its many and great promises.

When the last summons was made so profound was her confidence in God that she answered promptly, gladly, and without fear. Said she: "I am not afraid to die. It's all right with me." And so our mother died, and so died our father. They have met where parting will be no more.

It was their earnest prayer that all of us should be earnest, faithful Christians. May God grant that those prayers may be answered, and all of us be gathered home with them at last) G. H. GALLOWAY

COOPER It is with sad hearts we chronicle the death of Bro PATRICK M. COOPER, who departed this life Aug. 19, 1896

Bro Cooper was born near Mobile, Ala., March 17, 1843, his parents moving to Mississippi when he was but three years of age. At the age of eighteen he enlisted as a Confederate soldier in Company D, Eighteenth Mississippi Regiment, Virginia Army, and was wounded at Gettysburg. In 1868 he united with Tranquil M. E. Church, South, in which he lived a consistent member to the end of his life. In 1870 he was married to Miss Sallie Bergman, who, with four daughters, survives him.

No greater calamity ever befell our community and church than when Bro. Cooper died. As a soldier, he was brave and true, and ever at his post As a citizen, there were none better. He was always found on the moral side of every issue, and boldly asserted his convictions.

A proof of his real worth, and the esteem in which he was held, is the fact that at his death a cloud of sorrow arose over the homes of all who knew him; and those who knew him best were the most sorrowful, as they loved him best As a husband and father, there were none more devoted and kind than he. As a Christian, Bro. Cooper was very unassuming, but always loyal and consistent; and in his death our church loses one of her best men. For years he was a constant reader of the ADVOCATE.

Truly, God moves in a mysterious way, but he knows best; so we can only bow in humble submission to his will, and ask him for more of his grace to better enable us to undergo such sad affliations as this one

By his noble life he has written for himself a beautiful epitaph, which is "like apples of gold in pictures of silver." God comfort the bereft E. E. LANGFORD, P. C.

Free Run, Miss.

MCCARSTLE—MYRTLE MCCARSTLE, daughter of T M. and Lizzie McCarstle, died at Ethel, La., Aug. 26, 1896, at 3 o'clock P. M.

Little Myrtle was a sweet child, and had a great fondness for Sunday-school, and would not be satisfied on Sunday mornings until she was taken to Sunday-school, although, as the minister said at her grave, she had scarcely entered into life.

Fare thee well, little Myrtle; I hope to meet you in that beautiful city where you are now waiting and watching for papa and mama. Will they meet their little darling there? God grant that they may. UNCLE.

WHITTEN Bro. ISAAC WHITTEN was born in Florence, Ala., July 4, 1836; moved with his parents to Panola county, Miss., in infancy, and died July 29, 1896, in great peace.

His sufferings were intense, but he bore them with Christian fortitude.

He married Miss N. J Curry, Dec. 9, 1875. They were blessed with seven children—five boys and two girls—three of which have gone on before to the better land.

He joined the M. E. Church, South, when he was eighteen years old, and lived a consistent member until he was called up higher.

Bro. Whitten was a hard-working man, and his home was the home of the pastor, where he could rest at his tolnarant head.

The church has lost one of its faithful members, the community one of its best citizens. He is not dead, but sleeping in the blessed Lord. He leaves a loving companion, who was faithful and devoted to the end. Their children are all on the road to heaven.

I visited him during his last sickness. He told me that he was going home to live with Christ; that he had no fears of death.

May the bereaved ones be enabled to say, Thy will be done!

G. S. MORNHEAD, P. C.

Payne, Miss.

DAY—After suffering for seventy days with the dreaded disease, spinal meningitis, God said: "It is enough; come up higher;" and just as the clock was ready to strike twelve at night on June 25, the soul of little LUCY PEARL took its everlasting flight home to the God who gave it, there to meet her two little sisters who had gone on before her. She was four years eleven months and fourteen days old.

Her life here was short; but, oh, how pleasant to papa and mama and brothers and sisters! Her affections always seemed most for her papa, calling herself "papa's anger baby." Oh, how papa misses her, and how sad he feels when he comes home and no sweet little Pearl to meet him at the gate and lay her sweet little arms around his neck and kiss him! And how sad mama feels when she goes about her daily work not to have little Pearl to prattle around her feet and talk to her her sweet baby talk! But may God help us to look out from under this dark cloud and see the sunlight of his peace and comfort shining on our pathway, so we may walk safely, and at last meet our three little girls in heaven, where there will be no more parting!

PAPA.

CATO—Mrs. REBECCA CATO (nee Barlow) was born in Copiah county, Miss., Feb. 4, 1828, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs C. W. Ford, in Wesson, Miss., on the eighteenth day of January, 1896. She joined the Methodist Church in early life at Pleasant Valley, and lived for many years among the bright and shining lights of that neighborhood.

She was long and well known by this writer, and often, at her own home and at mine, have we talked of the trials of this life and of the "rest that remaineth for the people of God." She was a sweet Christian, having learned from her sainted mother to look to and put her trust in the Lord, to whom she was joined in a perpetual covenant here, and now enjoys the full benediction of her life of faith and trust in Him.

She was twice married—first to W. Fore, and last to Henry Cato She was the mother of nine children. Four of them have gone before her, and are now with mother at home. Five are still living, whose loss is but gain to those she has gone to join.

The bereaved ones mourn not as "those who have no hope," but as those who will meet her again in the sweet by-and-by.

J. R. BOWEN, L. E.

ELLIOTT—Mrs. ETTA CARROLL ELLIOTT (nee Sanderson), wife of R. M. Elliott, was born Aug. 21, 1863, and died at Lake Cormorant, Aug. 18, 1896, in her thirty-third year.

Her affliction was short and severe, yet with Christian fortitude and patience she fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. She joined the M. E. Church two years before her death, and demonstrated the reality of her religion by her godly walk and conversation. She leaves a husband and six broken-hearted children to weep for her. Loved ones, remember that God is too good to be unkind and too wise to err, and "whom he loveth he chasteneth." Your loss is her gain, and it will not be long until your weeping will be turned into joy if you follow her Christian example; and when around the throne of God you strike han in all mysteries of God's movements will be reconciled. May the God of heaven let his choicest blessing follow these motherless children, and may his Spirit guide and direct them through this life, and bring them to a saving knowledge of our Lord and Savior! is the prayer of their friend, H A. ROBINSON.

The September Ladies' Home Journal opens with an interestingly chatty paper on "The Personal Side of Dickens," by Stephen Fiske. A new study of the novelist by Alice Barber Stephens illustrates and well supplements the article. Jane G. Austin is pleasantly recalled in the opening chapters of "The Experiment in the Cloister." Biographical sketches (all with portraits), bring the readers into closer intimacy with "Three Daughters of Famous Men," and "Three Writers of the South." "The Young Man as a Citizen" is the title of Dr. Parkhurst's paper. Edward W. Bok expresses hearty endorsement of a more widespread enactment and enforcement of the "Curfew Law." A Washington story, "De Wukin's of Providence," by Edmah Proctor Clarke, a page of poems in pictorial settings, and Mrs. Whitney's letter to girls, and one of Mr. Burdette's humorous touchings. "Marketable Men and Women," are features of special interest. By The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia; one dollar per year, ten cents per copy.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured.

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result; and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes so unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

MRS. LILLIAN TILMAN,

The Memphis Christian Advocate and Ex-Gov. Stone endorse him highly.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A riot occurred at Leadville, Colo., on Sept. 21. Strikers attempted to burn and destroy two mines, and a conflict ensued. Five persons were killed.

Two outside parties in this city have been arrested for aiding and abetting the bookkeepers of the Union National Bank in embezzling money of the institution.

The last session of Congress authorized the construction of three more battle-ships of about 11,000 tons displacement and thirteen torpedo boats, three of which are to have a speed of 30 knots per hour.

The Rev. William M. Lane, an Episcopal rector of Alameda, Fla., has resigned because, as he says, so much gossip was excited in the church by his wearing a brown suit, smoking cigars purchased of a local dealer, and going to Oakland to attend the theatre.

Mrs. Minerva Nichols, of Philadelphia, has made an enviable reputation as an architect. She has a preference for domestic architecture, but she nevertheless designed the new Century Clubs for Philadelphia and Wilmington, both of which have been greatly admired.

Two evangelistic workers are traveling through Maine in a carriage ornamented with Bible texts and having an adjustable platform, from which exhortations are delivered. Handy racks hold all sorts of tracts, and the wagon is equipped with sleeping accommodations for the workers.

The New York State Democratic Convention has met and committed that State, as far as it could, to Bryan and the Chicago platform. Senator Hill, who has been for some time past the political dictator of the Democracy of New York, has kept away from the convention, refusing to take any part in its proceedings.

Columbia University will send a party of naturalists, under the leadership of Prof. Bashford Dean, to explore Puget Sound. Three zoologists and one botanist will accompany the party. The deep-sea work will be done with the "Albatross." The region is almost unexplored. Around Puget Sound it is exceedingly rich and promising in its marine and botanical life.

FOREIGN.

The study of Greek and Latin has been abolished in the public high schools of Norway and Sweden. This means the abolition of classical education altogether.

A hall of honor has been established in the Val de Grace Hospital, in Paris, where the names of French medical men who have died in the performance of their duty are to be inscribed on marble tablets.

According to advices received from London, the Anglo Egyptian expeditionary force advancing up the Nile has already successfully accomplished the nominal purpose of the campaign, namely, the occupation of Dongola.

There are unmistakable signs in Carlist circles that Spain may soon have to face most serious international trouble as well as the uprising in Cuba, the Philippine Islands and possibly Porto Rico. A rebellion at home may soon add to Spain's woes.

England has a "Society of the Crusades," which will make the pilgrimage to Jerusalem next September. The pilgrims will meet in the Christian Temple there and "consider the subject of a memorial to the English who fell in the crusades."

There is no disguising the fact that the situation in the Turkish Empire has assumed a most menacing aspect, and, unless the European powers reach some agreement in the near future, the general peace is likely to be broken. The more the recent riots in Constantinople are investigated the more certain it becomes that the massacre which followed the occupation of the Ottoman Bank by the Armenians was ordered by the Turkish authorities.

MARRIAGES.

The St. James Gazette has returned to the discussion of its proposition of a new dreibund to be formed by Great Britain, the United States and Italy for the settlement of the Armenian question, and says: "If Great Britain, the United States and Italy presented the Sultan with a joint demand that certain conditions must be complied with in three days' time, it is highly probable that his Russian advisers would intimate to Abdul Hamed that he would have to yield, and it is not impossible that the demand of the three powers would presently become that of united Europe."

THE CALM OF THE SOUL.

BY HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean,
And billows wild contend with angry roar,
'Tis said, far down beneath the wild commotion,
That peaceful stillness reigneth, evermore.

Far, far beneath, the noise of tempests dieth,
And silver waves chime ever peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it flieth,
Disturbs the Sabbath of that deeper sea.

So in the heart that knows thy love, O Purest!
There is a temple, sacred evermore,
And all the babble of life's angry voices
Dies in hushed stillness at its peaceful door.

Far, far away, the roar of passion dieth,
And loving thoughts rise calm and peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it flieth,
Disturbs the soul that dwells, O Lord, in thee.

O rest of rests! O peace, serene, eternal!
Thou ever livest, and thou changest never;
And in the secret of thy presence dwelleth
Fullness of joy, forever and forever.

Minnie's Seaside Rest.

BY MISS BELLE KEARNEY.

"A little one shall become a thousand."

The story of the widening influence of the life of Minnie Green, "who, being dead, yet speaketh," is one of the sweetest and most wonderful that can be imagined. She was born in Baltimore, twenty-five years ago, of wealthy and deeply pious parents. When a week old her father took his little daughter's hands, and, placing them in her mother's, consecrated them to God. "What you give to the Father he takes." These precious hands were taken and used by him in ways most marvelous. From the beginning the thoughts and acts of Minnie Green were those of the heavenly. In every minute detail of life she waited on the Lord to hear his whispers, and connected everything with the symbols of his incarnation. She always loved white, pure white. She would never wear any but white dresses. When Mrs. Green was in Paris with her once, she bought a number of embroidered brown linen dresses, but Minnie decidedly refused to wear them, saying that she wanted only pure white dresses, with crimson sashes, as the latter made her think of the blood of Jesus, and the whiteness of the purity that comes after being washed in the blood. Whenever Mrs. Green had occasion to correct Minnie—which she sometimes did, as the child was in many respects like other children—she would always put her on a bed, and, kneeling by the side, begin to pray. At last the little girl would say, "Pray no, mama; I am not willing;" and then, "Pray hard, mama, for I am not willing yet." At last, with a joyous cry, "It's all right now, mama; I am willing!" Then, drawing her little body up into an attitude of prayer, she would say, with uplifted face and hands, "Dear Jesus, take away this black spot." Then, after a short moment of waiting, "It's all right now, mama; I'm white." Mrs. Green said she never taught Minnie to pray. Her communion with God was always original and spontaneous. The child was converted at four years of age. Her faith was great. When her pet chicken was lost. Of course, it was a white chicken. She went off into a retired nook, shook hands and prayed, "Dear Jesus, I have lost my chicken; please send it back home." Then, running to her mother, she said: "It's all right; my chicken will be found. When you pray anything to anybody, it is sure. I have given my troubles to Jesus. They are his, not mine, any longer." Then she went off singing happily, fully assured that the lost would be restored—and it was.

Mrs. Green's character as "Lady Beautiful" was well known in Baltimore. Her door was ever open to welcome the needy and outcast, however lowly. She has been the instrument, used of God, in the salvation of many souls, and the rescuing of many shipwrecked lives, especially those of unfortunate women, whom she often allowed to go into the nursery and play with Minnie. Some of them testified afterward that it was the touch of the baby hands about their necks that had saved them.

Minnie Green went home to God when she was seven years old. When the little white casket containing her body was brought into the church, one of these redeemed Magdalens threw herself across it, and wailed, in an agony of grief, "She taught me to pray!"

The most perfect blossoming of the divinity in Minnie Green was her exquisite unselfishness. Often, when coming in from play, she would say, "Let me take the tired off somebody," and away she would go to the stables to help the coachman, in her childish fashion, with the horses, or into the kitchen to help the cook, or into the bed-rooms to help the maid with the housework.

After the unspeakable sorrow of Minnie's death came, her mother's great desire was to perpetuate the little one's memory by establishing a rescue home for fallen girls, so many of whom had been brought into the blessed light of God by the touch of those baby hands, now still forever. Another controlling motive in establishing this especial sort of mission was to prove to the world that such work could be done by pure womanly hands, and even those of little children, and be left stainless and undefiled. So a rescue home was founded, and successfully conducted for many years in Savannah, Ga., where Mrs. Green resided after leaving Baltimore. It was while she was in Savannah that she became actively engaged in W. C. T. U. work and other forms of philanthropy. Eventually the rescue home was transformed into an orphanage, still retaining the name "Minnie's Home," and here hundreds of little waifs were carefully trained for the duties and responsibilities of the life that stretched out vaguely beyond the sheltering walls. This work was especially hopeful and pleasant. Minnie's influence was widening. While very young she used to say, "Mama, send for a poor baby to play with me." She had made it possible for dozens of poor babies to be sent for and made happy. Finally Mrs. Green returned to Baltimore, and the orphanage was left in the hands of a Board of Managers. The expenses increased very heavily, and Mrs. Green, being too far away to supervise directly, finally concluded to dispose of the orphanage and invest the money in some other line of Christian endeavor.

"If Minnie were living," said Mrs. Green, "she would now be twenty-five years of age. She has been working in home missions for a long time; she is old enough now for the foreign field." The inspiration has found expression in "Minnie's Seaside Rest," a beautiful home that has recently been built on the beach at Old Orchard for tired missionaries to rest in during the Summer months. "Minnie's Seaside Rest" is an elegant house consisting of fifteen bed-rooms, a commodious parlor or reception-room, and a delightful dining-room—all furnished with every comfort that wealth or love could supply. There are two single beds in each room, and from nearly every window an extensive view of the Atlantic can be obtained. The table is loaded with delicious and wholesome food, the service is excellent, and the two lady managers cordial and charming in the extreme. The price of board is only four dollars a week, which covers merely the cost of the food. Three times as much would be asked at hotels for the same accommodations. On entering the reception-room one is attracted by a handsome painting in oil of a little girl dressed in pure white, with a weary look in the tender eyes, reclining in a great arm-chair. Beside it is a table with a rich covering, on which is a basket slightly tilted, emptying a quantity of luscious fruit. On the oak mantle that supports the picture there is carved the sentence, "Let me take the tired off somebody," which is the key-note of the days spent in this blessed place. Over a mantle further down the room is a beautiful white marble tablet bearing an inscription to the memory of little Minnie. The door of each room in this home bears the name of a foreign missionary, all of whom, save one, have gone to their eternal rest. On the mantle in the dining-room is carved, "The Lord is good; he will provide." Above is a picture of Christ, while on the walls are paintings, besides banners in bright colors bearing helpful messages of the saving and healing power of God. In the halls are various Scripture texts suggestive of restfulness, such as, "Come unto Me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden."

"Minnie's Seaside Rest" was intended especially for tired foreign missionaries; but, as this was its first season, other Christian workers were welcomed, among them ministers and their wives, superintendents of gospel training-schools, secretaries of Young Women's Christian Associations, rescue evangelists, and W. C. T. U. organizers. To the last class belonged the undersigned, who, for two restful, delightful weeks abided verily under the shadow of the Most High. The home is situated within ten feet of the ocean when the tide is in. The roar of the never-ceasing waves was in our ears day and night, the ozone of the salt sea air was in our lungs, and an abounding thankfulness to our heavenly Father for all his blessings rested in our inmost hearts.

Old Orchard beach is seven miles long, and is very hard and firm. It is incomparable for walking and driving, and affords the finest facilities for bathing. The climate is ideal, cool and bracing. Back of the beach lies the little town of Old Orchard, near which is a remarkably beautiful natural amphitheatre. The surrounding country is covered with a thick growth of pines, and is a wilderness of grasses and flowers. It can be quickly and easily reached by carriage or electric cars.

The only regret that Mrs. Green entertains concerning the "Seaside Rest" is, that its distance from the South makes it not easily accessible to Southern missionaries. She selected Old Orchard on account of its fine beach, and hopes that next Summer will bring many tired foreign missionaries from her beloved Southland to this haven of rest by the sea.

For further particulars address Mrs. Chas. Green, 1701 Park avenue, Baltimore, Md., or the matron-elect, Miss Mulford, 61 Quincy street, Roxbury, Mass.

Old Orchard is famous for its Summer convocations.

The fact of being in a State where constitutional prohibition reigns supreme is in itself inspiring, to say nothing of the natural charms of the country and the hospitable, whole-hearted people.

Some Things as Seen from the Standpoint of a Layman.

I have no desire whatever to enter into the public discussion of any subject; but, since the subject of the reduction of the number of districts in the North Mississippi Conference has been introduced in the papers, I feel inclined to write a short article in favor of the reduction, not only to eight, but to seven. I think Bro. Buchman is very much mistaken when he says that a large majority of the preachers in the Conference are in favor of the number of districts remaining as they are; but I believe, on the contrary, the larger portion of them would advocate reducing the number if they were not afraid of incurring the displeasure of the presiding elders. I do not think that the work of a presiding elder ought to be estimated altogether in dollars and cents; but, in all the business relations of the church, as well as in our secular affairs, we should have an eye to two things, i. e.: economy, and diligence in business. We have in this Conference 140 pastoral charges, which could be arranged into seven districts, with twenty charges each; and if this was done, there would be a saving of $2,057.30 annually—taking last year's statistics as a basis—and this amount would cover about three-fourths of the collection on the Conference fund; and if this reduction could be made, it would give our presiding elders something more to do. No greater misfortune can come to a man than to be placed in a position where he does not find constant employment. It is an admitted fact that the more a man has to do, the more he can and will do; and if we had twenty charges to the district, our presiding elders would preach more and mingle more with the people than they do now. The custom with presiding elders, as a general thing, is to leave home on Friday evening or Saturday morning, and go to the Quarterly Conference, preach once or twice on Saturday, and maybe twice on Sunday; and if they do not go home on Sunday night, they will on Monday, and for this kind of service they were paid last year an average of $1,028.65, being an average of, at least, $64.29 per sermon, which is very dear preaching these hard times, especially when we consider the character of some of the sermons.

Now, let us look at another side of this question. While the presiding elders were paid $1,028.65 for this kind of service, the preachers in charge were paid an average of $427.24, and they are supposed to be busy all the time. My humble opinion is, that we are too much disposed, as a church, to increase the number of our officials. I can not see the necessity, at present, of an increase in the number of our Bishops. In the language of Dr. Hoss: "Multiplying the occupants of an office beyond the actual needs of the times is one of the best methods of breaking it down in public estimation, especially so as it usually lends more or less help to the promotion of unfit men." This language applies with equal force to the office of presiding elder. I think it would be well for all of our preachers, from Bishops down to the preacher in charge of the humblest mission, to realize the fact that nine-tenths of the membership of the church have to labor constantly, in one form or another, to support their own families, and at the same time discharge their duties to their pastors, and contribute to the collections ordered by the church, which are getting to be very burdensome. Now, this membership has a right to demand of their preachers, one and all, that they "be diligent, never be unemployed, never be triflingly employed, never trifle away time, neither spend any more time at any place than is strictly necessary."

In an experience of thirty years as an official member, I have sometimes had to defend our preachers against the charge of "laziness, or having entered the ministry as an easy way of getting a living." If our Bishops could be more careful to arrange the size of the districts, and then fit the presiding elder to the district instead of fitting the district to the size of the presiding elder, I think we would have more efficient work.

I again quote from Dr. Hoss in his reference to Bishops, and I make it apply to presiding elders: "But mere goodness, even of the most pronounced sort, is not enough for a presiding elder. Intellectual endowments, scholarly attainments, unusual preaching ability, and that wide outlook upon the world which comes from actual experience in the affairs of every-day life—all these, while not equally important with ethical uprightness and a spiritual mind, are still of great value. A dull and ignorant man, or one with merely commonplace and dead level pulpit gifts, or one who lacks the saving virtue of common sense, ought not to be thought of in such a connection for a single moment. Nor should such a one be chosen who is still young enough to be in a raw and sappy state, or old enough to be approaching the line of ineffectiveness."

If this rule could be observed, we could easily have twenty charges in each district, and all be well looked after, and the Quarterly Conferences would then be occasions of great gatherings and of spiritual power.

Now, brethren, I have written thus plainly because these are my honest convictions; and I want to say, in conclusion, that what I have said has no special reference to any one of our present presiding elders or their predecessors, nor to all of them. I am a personal friend to each one of them, and love them all.

Selections.

A Masterly Utterance That Should Become Authoritative.

Bishop Vincent said to the Colorado Conference at its recent session at Leadville:

"I believe that no excuse, except illness, ought to be accepted by an Annual Conference for delinquency in the ministerial course of study. The man who does not, or will not, study the books assigned in this course is not fit for the ministry in our church. We need in our itinerant work students with trained intellects, who are acquainted with the Bible; who know how to master great books, how to make noble sermons, how to deal with men. From all the churches come applications for pastors of intelligence and culture. The needs of the age require educated men—men who, whether they have been through college or not, have learned how to study, how to get knowledge, how to guide the inquiring mind—who are 'apt to teach.' Our undergraduates, and those who are thinking of undertaking the duties of the itinerancy, ought to understand that they must apply themselves to their books, they must cultivate a liking for theological and biblical and literary study, or else abandon the hope of securing or maintaining a place in our ministry."

No more important word has been spoken by a Bishop to an Annual Conference. He is a poor student of Methodism who has not been forced to see that, with all our success for which we are so profoundly grateful, we are not producing preachers to meet the demand of this thoughtful and enlightened age. We are not pessimistic, but we dare not write out all that we have seen and heard of this matter. It is enough to say that in our patronizing Conferences it is becoming increasingly difficult to secure the men who have the preaching ability needed for our leading churches. The Macedonian cry is heard within all our borders for ministers who can sustain themselves in the pulpit. The appeal from devout laymen for relief in this respect is plaintive and pitiful. They tell us of the colossal men who stood in our pulpits a quarter of a century ago in New England, and ask why we are not developing such men to day. Bishop Vincent apprehends the situation, and voices the need with splendid courage.

Several causes have conspired to bring about this degeneracy in the pulpit. We have not kept steadily before us, as the simple and inexorable standard of ministerial success, the ability to preach the gospel intelligently and with power. Our ministers, as a whole, are indifferent to the demands of the study, and do not make proper preparation to preach. Too many seek to get on by an excess of pastoral visiting and by sensational methods; or, as a last resort to cover a failure, an evangelist is called in to produce an appearance of apparent success, and to divert the attention of the church from real conditions and results. With such inadequate preaching in our cities and larger towns, our churches are weakening most signally in the quality of our membership. Intelligent men and women, who hunger for the thoughtful and forceful presentation of the gospel—and who are entirely right in demanding such preaching—are drawn away from our churches to listen to ministers who make studious and diligent preparation for their pulpits.

We are not describing fancied or exceptional conditions, but the general situation among us. One of our most thoughtful ministers, who has been studying the question specially of late, said to us last week with great sadness: "Our pulpit has lost its hold upon the general public. We are no longer developing the strong preacher."

The case calls for radical measures of reform. As the ministry is responsible for the situation, it must work out the needed change. The stress must be put back upon the pulpit. "To rightly divide the word of truth" must be the chief concern of our preachers. Days and nights must be given to the preparation of sermons. When Jesus was so greatly exercised for the success of those whom he had chosen to carry on his work, he broke out with this urgent entreaty: "Sanctify them through the truth; thy word is truth." Exegetical preaching—the opening up and unfolding of the Scriptures as a specialist, and the application of revealed truth to the thoughts and intents of men under the nurturing influences of the Holy Spirit—is the power of God unto salvation. There is not, nor can there be, any equivalent or substitute for the comprehensive and searching presentation of the verities of the Bible. "Woe is me," exclaimed Paul, "if I preach not the gospel;" but he brooded over, prayed to and lived with Christ until he always had a gospel to preach. Whatever else the minister does, or does not do, he must unalterably secure the time to prepare his sermons. Everything else must wait upon that obligation, because, above all things and first of all duties, he is called to preach the gospel. It is an offense to men and to God to stand in the pulpit without having made laborious and conscientious effort to utter the right message.

Nothing need be added to Bishop Vincent's wise word about the proper guarding of the door of the Annual Conference. His utterance only needs courageous enforcement throughout the church. We should be more careful in the selection of men for the ministry; and, as he says, if the candidates do not meet the condition by cultivating studious habits and by creditably performing the preparatory work put upon them, better for them, much better, as it is infinitely better for the church, to let them drop out at once by the way.

Brethren in the ministry, we beseech you, give earnest heed to these things!—Exchange.

I have never known a Methodist join the Romish Church. I have known a few leave us for Anglicanism, and afterwards pass on to Romanism. On the other hand, there are converts from popery in almost every Wesleyan circuit with which I am acquainted, and I know a great many. It was my privilege a few years ago to attend a Roman Catholic mission in one of our provincial cities. The mission preacher was most pitiable in his lament over the very many secessions from "the true faith and the true church" in every part of England. And he gave facts and figures proving that the defections were very numerous, and justified his pitiable lament.—English Cor. Michigan Christian Advocate.

THE HEAVENWARD CALL.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

What shall I do, my Lord, my God,
To make my life worth more to thee?
Within my heart, through earth abroad,
Deep voices [illegible]

Through strange confusions of the time
I hear thy beckoning call resound:
There is a pathway more sublime
Than yet my laggard feet have found.

My coward heart, my flagging feet,
They hold me in bewildering gloom:
Come thou my stumbling steps to meet
And lift me unto larger room!

The dearest voice may lead astray:
Speak thou! Thy word my guide shall be.
Oh, not from life and men away,
But through them, with them, up to thee.

If is not much these hands can do:
Keep thou my spirit close to thine,
Till every thought thy love throbs through,
And all my words breathe truth divine!

With souls that seek thy pure abode,
Let my unfaltering soul aspire!
Make me a radiance on the road;
A bearer of thy sacred fire!

Some Things I Don't Like.

Good Bro. C—— tells us we have as good a right to an opinion as any man or woman living, and I do not believe he would tell us an untruth; so I have begun to think seriously that I really have a right to an opinion, and, as I have never yet asked of this editor even a small space in his valuable paper, I believe that I also have a right to ask for space enough to air that opinion.

While seated under the McIntosh tent yesterday in the town of R——, I read the article from "Rex" about the Sam Jones Camp Meeting, and, as he objects to the use of the "Amen," I'd better say, "Brother, thea's my sentiments."

He says, "Think of a song, entitled 'Beautiful Hands,' being sung as a solo at a camp meeting!"

What's wrong about that, brother? It might as well be beautiful feet as beautiful hands, for all the congregation knew about it. I once heard of a clown who told his audience he'd "give them the words," and they'd "get the air when they went outdoors." But the order is reversed. They give us the air, and if we want the words, we have to buy a new book at every meeting. I believe if I wanted to write a book to make money, I'd try writing a modern hymn book. It wouldn't make much difference whether there was any sense in what I wrote, or whether the metre was right or not. After it was set to music the "choir'd" get the words in somehow, whether they fit or not. I have eight or ten hymn books now, and am familiar with about as many pieces in each one. If I keep on going to these meetings, I'll either have to do like the darkies—sing regardless of the words—set up a second-hand hymn-book store, or quit singing at all; and I must confess it is a hard matter to decide which of the three I ought to do. I do not know much about music; so I am not competent to sit in judgment.

A lady who had been a music pupil told me that they used to have musical entertainments, and the duets were grand. Very often there would be four girls at each piano. As Bill Arp would say, "I was ruminating." I don't know whether they called it a solo, duet, trio, quartette, or quintette, but it was music to which I had been listening. I strained every nerve in my ear to catch even one word of what they were saying. Failing in this as a dernier resort, I turned to my good husband and offered him one dollar if he'd tell me what they were saying. Believe me, much as he likes to make dollars, he had to let that one slip through his fingers. Finally I heard a protracted sound, which seemed a little familiar, after which they sat down, and I was gratified to know that I had at least been able to partially recognize the word "Amen."

Now, I do not wish to quarrel with evangelists or their methods. I believe in them, and enjoy hearing them preach; and if they want a helper in the way of a professional singer, I do not object. Let them, as is the usual custom, have the "song service;" but when we begin to worship God in earnest, let's have the good old soul-stirring hymns that have helped our great-grandparents into the kingdom.

Brother, when you go to have a big meeting, why don't you get a professor of elocution to do your praying? Good old Bro. B—— may not pronounce all the words correctly; he may not bring out all the well rounded periods; then he may get excited and shout, or cry a little. You know our young people do not like that. It sounds harsh to their cultivated ears; so let's employ a good elocutionist. It doesn't make so much difference what he says as the manner in which he says it.

I claim that if singing is a part of the worship of God, the people who feel the spirit of worship are the ones who ought to do the singing, and not the choir.

I don't believe half of the preachers would have a "choir" at all if they could look into their faces as we are obliged to do. Bro. McIntosh told us the plain gospel truth, and if any of the brethren have not had, and want to have a good meeting, I'd say, "Send for Bro. McIntosh." How we thank him from the depths of our hearts for his good sermons, and yet we think he is making the same mistake that all our evangelists and many of our preachers are making, of hiring unconverted young people to do our singing for us. He told the dancing people to put Bro. P—— and Sister E—— in the ball-room ahead of them, and see how they'd look. It seems to me as much out of place to put those same dancers ahead of Bro. P—— and Sister E—— in the church of God.

Observe through one hour's service the looks and manners of some of the members of the choir. When I say "the choir," I do not mean anyone in particular. One will ask another if her bangs are all right, straighten out her lace, and show very plainly that she is conscious of being well dressed. Another will yawn or frown, and say: "I'm awful tired; I wish he'd hurry and get through;" then they'll smile, giggle, etc. Do you believe their songs ever reach the throne of grace? I, for one, do not.

Some may say, "Don't look at them." How is one to help it without shutting his eyes to the preacher as well? The picture is not overdrawn. I see it every time I go where there is a choir. The preacher does not see it because they are usually where Christ told Satan to get—behind him. If the preacher wants Satan in his congregation, I wish he'd put him behind all of us, so we could give our undivided attention to the preaching of the Word.

Brethren, let's pray over these things, and vote as we pray.

Our Church Papers.

The recent articles of "Layman" and Bro. J. A. Parker are calculated to call attention to a crying need existing at this time within the borders of our Zion, viz.: that of loyalty to our church papers. Certain members of our communion are busily circulating literature which is not only not authorized by our Conferences, but is positively antagonistic to the welfare and integrity of our church. These papers are, so far as the writer's knowledge goes, of a cheap, clap trap kind, containing a mixture of good and evil (very little good!), and are issued by private parties, or by organizations unfriendly to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, its interests and institutions.

If the people who read this disloyal literature would read our church organ, they would, at least, get the antidote with the poison; but when urged to subscribe, the cry of "hard times" is raised, and this in spite of the fact that the money scattered abroad among these enemies of the church would more than pay for the church paper.

"Layman" has called attention to the evil; Bro. Parker, like a skillful physician, has prescribed the remedy.

Notes by the Way.

Since my last I have spent a while with the brethren in the North Mississippi. A day at Winona was pleasantly spent with Bros. Ritchey and Stone. The latter, we were glad to note, has greatly improved since we met at Vaiden in June, indeed—he seems entirely himself again. He spent the vacation voted him by the brethren in regular work and improved every day. Bro. Ritchey we found busy caring for one of "Job's comforters" and cultivating a stiff neck. However he kindly introduced us to the brethren and aided us no little, for which we returned thanks. The Winona Training school, under the management of his son Steve—a Vanderbilt man—bids fair to rank high in the class of institutions devoted to that kind of work. We trust that Millsaps may reap a full share of those sent out to higher institutions.

By permission, we spent the Sabbath at Grenada. Dr. Lewis gave us right of way. Exercised us four times on Sunday, and sent us on our way rejoicing with a good collection for the Science Hall fund. The days spent in his delightful home were made doubly pleasant by the unmistakable welcome given.

From my childhood I had heard much of this little city. The comfortable parsonage, beautiful, well-furnished church and intelligent congregation which greeted me only added to the good opinion already formed.

It was our pleasure to visit the Collegiate Institute. Here we found Bro. Malone and his efficient corps of teachers busy looking after this great interest of the church. Already the question of room for others who were applying for admission was giving him great concern. More than sixty boarders were in and others looked for daily. We spent the hour of opening, Monday, in the chapel. We were greatly impressed with the general appearance of the student body. Our brethren of the North Mississippi have no need to send abroad with such an institution in their midst. Indeed, it is a thing of which to be proud. The large campus of six acres beautifully shaded with majestic live oaks, with necessary recreation grounds, impressed me favorably indeed.

The building itself is the most conveniently and comfortably arranged that it has yet been my privilege to see. Parents need have no fear for the health of their daughters from exposure. Here I found Sister T. B. Hargrove, who seemed as much at home in the school-room as at the secretary's desk of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Our girls are safe in such hands. Bro. Malone is held in high esteem by his brethren, but it is the concensus of all that she who shares alike his cares and his fortunes is worthy of the greater praise.

In Memoriam.

MRS. LUCINDA E. MOORE, wife of Rev. J. P. Moore, was born Sept. 23, 1863; was converted and joined the C. P. Church, September, 1879; was married to J. P. Moore, Dec. 22, 1882. She went with her husband to the M. E. Church, South, December, 1892. She was a true wife, a devoted mother, and an earnest Christian worker. She died July 8, 1896, from a surgical operation. She was a constant sufferer for twelve years, but bore it all in submission to the will of her heavenly Father.

JAMES PINKNEY MOORE was born near Muttona Springs, Attala county, Miss., Dec. 9, 1847. While attending a meeting at Muttona Springs, conducted by Rev. Robt. Clark, he became very much interested in his soul's salvation and in religion generally. He sought the Lord, and was converted one night in his room with Mr. Clark. Of his conversion his brother says: "I can never forget his appearance the morning after his happy conversion. While mother was getting breakfast he followed her, glorying God, telling her how happy he was. Since that day he ever lived a devoted Christian."

Soon after his conversion, with two neighbor boys he organized a young men's prayer meeting, which was faithfully kept up till the duties of life called the laborers to other fields of usefulness.

He joined the M. P. Church in 1866, and was a consistent and useful member till 1868, when he joined the C. P. Church. In 1869, while at school, he first received the impression that he ought to preach. About one year after this divine call he joined the Yazoo Presbytery, and, as he felt a call to preach was a call to prepare to preach, he went at once to Cooper Institute, when he acquired a fairly good education. He was ordained at Huntsville, Miss., in 1876 or '77, and went to work for the Master in great earnestness, preaching the gospel almost without money and without price; teaching school for a living. It was in this capacity I first knew him, and learned to love him. He was one of the truest, purest and sweetest-spirited men I ever knew. By kindness he won his way to the hearts of all his pupils.

He was happily married to Miss Lucinda E. Lamb, Dec. 10, 1882. They lived together in peace and happiness till she was torn from his fond embrace by the ruthless hand of death.

Desiring to devote his whole time to the ministry, and believing he could do more good in the itinerancy, he joined the North Mississippi Conference, December, 1892. As an itinerant preacher, he labored faithfully and very successfully till he fell a victim to disease, and after two weeks' patient suffering, on the evening of Aug. 5, just as the sun was setting, his Master called him from his earthly cares and toils to his heavenly reward, saying: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." J. A. POE.

Aberdeen, Miss., Sept 16, 1896.

Good-Bye.

MR. EDITOR: Please give me a little space to say good-bye to the many friends whom I met in Mississippi. It was a great pleasure for me to speak in the few places that I did, and I would have been so glad to have visited more; but circumstances did not permit. I enjoyed my visit to the North Mississippi Conference exceedingly. It was helpful to come in contact with such a body of men. I don't think that I ever met with a finer.

We have had a somewhat tedious trip across continent, but it was by no means unpleasant, and surely journeying mercies were granted us. The trip is much enlivened by the scenery along the Canadian Pacific railway. Never have I seen so much of the beautiful and grand as is glimpsed through the car windows of this road. If any of your readers are thinking of a tour, let them come at least to Vancouver, if they can not go further to Japan and China by the elegant Empress steamers.

This is by far the best route for missionaries to China. You can take the steamer here and not have further change until you reach Shanghai. We leave to-day and hope to be at Shanghai by Oct. 3. The Viceroy Li Hung Chang goes by the same steamer. He reached Vancouver yesterday, and was received right royally. I saw him riding out yesterday afternoon, and had I not known it was him, I would have just taken him for one of the many hundreds of Chinese mandarins that you see all over China. The pictures of him published in the papers are very good.

If you do not object, I will try and send you a line from the Far East now and then.

Fraternally, W. B. BURKE.

Does It Pay?

BY WILLMA H. ROUSE.

"Does it pay, I wonder," said the president of the Young Woman's Band, "to support a girl in a boarding-school? You see our Band has been keeping a girl in the Foochow boarding-school for four years, and now Miss Beaufield writes that she is married and gone. She says she is to teach a day school near Ku Cheng, one hundred miles from Foochow. I suppose she may be a great blessing to the people there. I'm sure I hope she may, for it was not easy to raise the twenty dollars a year to educate her."

"I wonder does it pay?" said Mrs. B——, as she carefully tucked away a very foreign-looking letter with a row of queer, green stamps across the top. "I don't know very much about day-schools in China. That country seems so far away and so unreal! It will only cost me twenty-four dollars a year to support one of these schools. I can save that if I try. I think I will take the support of a school for one year and see what comes of it."

"It does pay," said the missionary, when she visited the school and found the young bride of a month earnestly engaged in teaching her pupils the way of life.

"It does pay," she said again, as the second and third quarters' reports lay before her. "Three girls converted the second quarter, and four more the third quarter."

"Your school at Iong Palk pays," said the presiding elder at Conference time. "The people there are asking for a preacher, and I hope to send them one."

The preacher was sent there, and he felt that his greatest help in the village was that little day-school.

"All the girls but three converted," wrote the teacher the fourth quarter.

But about a week ago the pupils did not find their sweet little teacher in her place, and the villagers whispered that she was very ill.

"Let us pray for her," the children said, and ten girls met and offered prayer in a room that had never before echoed the voice of prayer.

"She is quite unconscious," said an old woman, as the young teacher's voice faintly sang "Jesus Saves."

"No, she is not unconscious," said another. "She asked for her baby just now, and when I told her it was dead she said, 'It is God's will.'"

"I am trusting, Lord, in Thee," sang the dying girl, and a heathen neighbor said, "She seems happy, and she knows she is dying. There is something in this new religion that makes people happy even in the face of death. Hark! She is praying."

Just as the sunlight streamed into the little room the sweet young soul took its flight; and men whose eyes had not been washed by tears for many years, stood outside her door and sobbed like children.

Three days later a committee of four waited upon the missionary in charge, and asked her to send another teacher to the place. "We need the school," they said. "We will pay the rent for a room. We thank God that for fifteen months we had a Christian woman with our people. We know how Christians live, and how they die." And the missionary said: "I will try to send you a teacher." Then she sat down and wrote this, that others might believe with her that boarding-schools and day-schools in China pay.

Ku-Cheng, China, May 1, 1896.
—Woman's Missionary Friend.

....In the first place, we ought always to remember that it is for this the church exists. It is a very great mistake, a fearful mistake indeed, to assume that obedience to this command is optional, and that Christian churches and Christian people can assist in evangelizing the nations or not, as may seem best. In fact, the modern missionary movement is, to a great extent, paralyzed by this mistaken notion. It is spoken of as a great benevolent enterprise, and even our own church officially places it among the benevolent objects for which contributions are solicited. In other words, Christians are importuned to be kind enough and good enough to assist Jesus Christ with a passing contribution as he marches by on his way to the conquest of the world. This is a very dangerous trifling with a very serious duty. Our Savior rebuked in scathing terms the pious mockery by which children tried to evade their obligations to their parents. Their service was consecrated to God, and hence it could not be owing to their parents. Anything given on their part to the parent to whom they owed life and being must be a purely voluntary gift. But what have we been doing? Our great duty, our life-work, our most solemn obligation, is laid aside, and in its place we substitute an occasional act of benevolence, often ostentatiously performed, and yet think God will hold us guiltless! This is simply trifling, whether we intend it as such or not. Jesus Christ left his church in the world for the supreme purpose of completing the work commenced by himself. He sent his followers into the world even as the Father had sent him. To accomplish this work, he maintains the church to-day. For this the church exists.—Bishop Thoburn.

A Definite Life-Plan for Each.

God has a definite life-plan for every human person, girding him, visibly or invisibly, for some exact thing which it will be the true significance and glory of his life to have accomplished.....Away then, O man, with thy feeble complaints and feverish despondencies! If God is really preparing us all to become that which is the very highest and best thing possible, there ought never to be a discouraged or uncheerful being.—Horace Bushnell.

Selections.

Where Is the Power Located?

Suppose we saw an army sitting down before a granite fort, and they told us they intended to batter it down. We might ask them, "How?" They point to a cannon ball. We but there is no power in that. It heavy, but if all the men in the army hurled it against the fort, they would make no impression. They say, "N but look at the cannon!" Well there is no power in that. A child may ride upon it, a bird may perch in its mouth; it is a machine, and nothing more. "But look at the powder!" Well, there is no power that; a child may spill it, a bird may peck it. Yet this powerless powder and powerless ball are put into the powerless cannon. One spark of fire enters it, and then, in the twinkling of an eye, that powder is a flash of lightning, and that ball a thunderbolt, which smites as if it had been sent from heaven. So it is with our church machinery to-day. We have all the instruments necessary for pulling down strongholds, and O for the baptism of fire!—Arthur's "Tongue of Fire."

Real Joy.

Not long before her death, in writing to a friend, Mrs. Mary Clemmer Hudson said:

"Though I am not old, I have sounded the deeps and shadows of all that is called society; till I find through my heart of hearts that that is of real value is the lowly contrite spirit, the clear mind, the loving, consecrated heart; all else emptiness, vanity, vexation of soul.

"I am very happy solely because I have reached that upper ether of spiritual calm which envy, jealousy and malice can not reach.

"I do common work, plenty of it, but in a spirit of consecration which ennobles it—at least, to me.

"There is no joy but calm to me. There is no noble life save that which is lived above the uncharitableness, the discontent, which fill human intercourse every day. I would say, Of such an atmosphere beware! At the last there can be no beauty for you or me but the beauty of holiness."—Selected.

Christ Not a Taskmaster.

Christ is not a taskmaster. He has not hedged us about with a set of arbitrary commandments, given merely as the expression of his authority and command. He has named us his "friends," and has chosen us that we should go and bring forth fruit. These commandments minister not only to his glory, but also to our needs—rather they minister to his glory because they minister to our needs. We can not see all the end which he desires to work through us, but we know him, and, therefore, we know that all his purposes minister to the highest good.—The Lookout.

Prayer.

God hears a prayer with the same certainty that the man at the other end of a telephone hears you when you talk to him. He is just as much each human being's father as if that human being was the only human being on earth. He has the same interest in each man that he would have if that man represented humanity.—Rev. A. W. Lamar.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. M. L White, Montrose, Miss., Sept. 19: "Closed meeting at Montrose, Sept. 10. Bros. D. C. Langford and J. H. Evans did the preaching. Membership greatly revived, many penitents at the altar. Several accessions to church. We have purchased a new organ for the church. Many of the young people are now praying in public. Epworth League is accomplishing good on this line. Just closed meeting at Clear Springs. Will never be forgotten. Several bright conversions. Baptists and Methodists shouted the praise of God. Prospects of building a church there. Bro. R. W. Burton assisted me here."

Rev. Wiley Brown, Bethel, Live Oak circuit, La., Sept. 17: "A four days' meeting at this place resulted in one accession to the church, and four who professed confession, with a number who were earnestly seeking salvation at the altar. Bro. J. F. Wynn, of Baker, La., and Lewis McManee, local of Grangeville, Ga., and the preacher in charge did the body of the preaching. This scribe preached once. Bros. Wynn and McManes did some strong, stirring preaching. There was a profound impression made on the large congregation in attendance. Bro. Carroll is in high favor with his people. I doubt if they would swap him for a Bishop."

Rev. C. C. Grisham, Toccopola, Miss., Sept. 19: "We have just closed our protracted meetings on the Toccopola circuit—six in all. The result was about 50 conversions, 34 additions, with more to follow. My ministerial help has been one sermon by my presiding elder, Bro. H. C. Morehead, and two sermons by Bro. Cole, L. P., from Coffeeville circuit. So with the exception of these three sermons, I had to do all the preaching at five of the meetings. One of our meetings was held in union with the Baptists, in which I did not have to work but little. God has been good to us. The church is revived. We work on the old plan; have the mourner's bench, and let the converts arise and tell the news or what the Lord has done for them. Finances are behind. Crops are very light in this section. But are very thankful for what we have."

Rev. W. T. Currie, Montgomery, La., Sept. 14: "The Holy Ghost is still baptizing us with fire from above. Last night we had a love-feast preceding our 8 P. M. service, which was indeed a feast to our souls. One soul was converted and one sanctified. Our Epworth League is progressing nicely; much good is being accomplished through this institution. Sixty-seven dollars has been raised by it for charity and help. Sabbath-schools and prayer meetings are good. The Sabbath-school yesterday was especially a feast. The infant class led in prayer, each little one praying separately. Up to date 263 have been received into our church. At least 500 have been converted. Three hundred have professed sanctification. We have about 200 family altars erected on the work. Although the drouth has injured the crops considerably, I think all collections will be paid in full. God has wonderfully blessed my labors this year. He now calls me into the evangelistical field. 'Where he leads me I will follow.' Glory! I will say to the brethren: 'Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace be with you.' 'Abstain from all appearance of evil. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.' 'Faithful is he that called you, who will also do it.' Brethren, pray for us."

Rev. W. J. Burt, P. C., Kossuth, Miss., Sept 19: "We have just closed a meeting at Wesley Chapel, in which we were assisted by Rev. H. M. Young, of Ripley circuit. The three churches of the community—Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian—all united and worked together. The Lord sent the power, and we had a sweet revival. At the close of the meeting we received four members and baptized five infants. Some of the converts will join other churches. We have held a protracted meeting at each church on the work—seven in all. We have been ably assisted by various brethren and abundantly blessed by the Lord. We have had seventy-five accessions on profession of faith. We have secured about ninety per cent. of our Conference collections. The old two-story dilapidated church at Rienzi has been torn down and another as handsome as the new church at Kossuth will soon be ready for dedication. This is our fourth year at Kossuth. Soon we will move. We are glad. While we love the people and have made many friends, yet we are delighted with the idea of going to a new field of labor. We like our peerless itinerancy."

Rev. Chas. D. Atkinson, Slaughter, La., Sept. 12: "As I am to leave my work next week to go to Vanderbilt University, I will send you a short report of the work done on the Slaughter circuit up to date. I was in college five months of this year; therefore I did not have all my time to give to the circuit work. The financial report is as follows: About 75 per cent. of the assessment for preacher in charge and presiding elder paid. The Ethel Church has paid nearly all of its assessment. I think all the Conference collections will be up in full. Have about all of them in subscription and cash now. During the year we have purchased new song books at all of the churches except one. We have purchased an organ. Have in subscription and cash about half of the amount towards the purchase of a church-building and property at Ethel, La. I am glad to report that the spiritual condition of this circuit good. A revival of religion began early in the Spring on my circuit, and continued until the whole circuit was revived. I have received 45 persons into the church this year. I think we have had between 50 and 75 conversions. Have baptized 13 children. Have organized three Epworth Leagues (two Seniors and one Junior) and one Sunday-school. The Leagues have done good work in all of the departments, and were a great help to the pastor. The people on my work have treated me very kindly. All the officers of the church have been faithful. My first experience in the ministry has not been one of hardship, but one of happiness, peace and joy."

Rev. E. E. Riggs, Floyd, La., Sept. 17: "How good God is! He has suffered this country to pass through the severest drouth these people have ever experienced. We will make about one fourth of a crop of cotton and corn. Potatoes, hay, peanuts, sugar cane, peas, etc., are a total failure. The cotton crop is about harvested, and the negroes are flocking to the Mississippi river in search of labor to make something on which to live next year. A year of want is now looking us in the face. All of this seems to turn the trend of the mind toward the God who controls these things, making it a propitious time to proclaim the truths of salvation and lead the people to the cross of Christ (the point which God, in his providence, is trying to lead us). We conducted revivals at two points on our work, embracing twenty-two days, assisted by a local elder, who lives on our work (Bro. Reneau), and who has held up the banner of Christ through the heat of the battle for about twoscore years. We witnessed over fifty conversions in these two meetings, and seventy-eight accessions to the church. We followed these meetings with one at Floyd. This place has had the reputation of being the Sodom of North Louisiana. So we considered it necessary to secure a big gun to bombard the place. This gun came in the person of Rev. M. M. Morphis, an evangelist of the W. P. Church. Bro. Morphis gets there in his own original way, but gets there all the same. It does not matter so much how a physician administers the medicine, so he gets the results. The whole town was taken for God. The convicting power of God broke down the most stubborn cases. We had one saloon keeper in the town; he was converted and joined the church. On last Sunday, the closing day of the meeting, we witnessed one of the grandest scenes Floyd has ever experienced. There stood in line before the altar to be received into the church the sheriff, deputy sheriff, clerk of court, all the merchants, saloon keeper and many others—making in all forty-three accessions to the church and nearly as many conversions. Floyd is now running on a gospel train with three prayer meetings per week."

HERE AND THERE.

This has been a great Summer with us. Many of our meetings have been attended with great power.

The services at Gunnison, Rosedale and Cleveland, in Bolivar county, resulted in great good to the church. Over two hundred and fifty joined the different churches—mostly the Methodist. We raised money to pay off an old parsonage debt at Gunnison; got nearly a thousand to build one at Rosedale, and a good large amount to add to the parsonage at Cleveland. The county voted on the whisky question just after the meetings and went dry nearly five to one. We found Crowe, Mims and Gladney hard at work. They have certainly done a great work in this part of the Delta. We saw a great deal of our "beloved presiding elder," Bro. Randolph. He was well and hard at work. He is very popular on the district, and we believe he will make one of the best reports at Conference ever made from Greenville district.

Our next place was at Kossuth, where we assisted that consecrated pastor, Bro. Burt. We had a most wonderful meeting. A number of old Confederate soldiers were converted and joined the church. It always makes me happy to see an old soldier converted. Bro. Burt is now winding up his fourth year at Kossuth. If some presiding elder has a good work and needs a fine man for it, just secure Bro. Burt.

The next point was Charleston, ten miles from the railroad. (We sometimes get away from the road, you see.) The meeting was one of tremendous power. About one hundred joined the church. Bro. Burroughs is our pastor there, and he is doing a fine work. He is one of our promising young men and is very popular on the circuit.

Bethel Camp Meeting next. We had a great time there. The Lord was with us in great power. We had such a nice time with Bro. Rayner, the pastor and bishop. He is a fine fellow to be with. Bros. B. F. Lewis and his father, Denson, Foster and Anders were in attendance and added much to the meeting. Preachers are the best men in the world, and it is a great treat to be with them.

Our next Point was Boyce Camp Ground. The Lord was with us there also, and many were saved. The old tenters said it was one of the best meetings ever held there. Bro. Skipper, the presiding elder, had charge of the meeting, the pastor, Bro. Huffpauir, being kept at home, most of the time, nursing a sick child. Bro. Skipper has a hard district, but he is doing fine work as presiding elder. I heard nothing but kindest things of him and his work.

We are now at Summit. We have just opened the fight, and the prospects for a grand meeting are flattering.

Is what gives Hood's Sarsaparilla its great popularity, increasing sales and wonderful cures. The man who keeps up with the procession nowadays must be strong enough to stand long, forced marches. This is a busy world we live in, busier than it ever was before, in any other age, and this is the busiest country in the world. The country is full of ambitious, energetic, strong, brainy men, each of whom is trying to lead his own particular procession. If his body fails, or his brain fails the man must fall out of the ranks—must lose his position—must, perhaps, make the rest of the journey in an ambulance.
The road to success is full of stragglers, full of those who—because they neglected their health—could not keep step—had to drop from the front rank to the second, and from the second to the third, until finally they were left behind altogether. A man can't succeed in war or in business, or in any other undertaking, unless he has health to carry him forward and to sustain his efforts. When he begins to lose health and strength and vitality, he begins to lose his value in the world. He loses the power of accomplishment, and so the power of earning.
A man's health is the most precious thing he can possibly own. Every man who is losing health, who is "run-down," who is nervous and weak, who is losing flesh and sleep and appetite, should heed the danger signals while yet there is time, and should begin immediately to take that most wonderful of all invigorating blood tonics, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the medicine of all others that will build up wasting strength; that will give flesh; that will cure nervousness and sleeplessness; and that will bring back the failing strength of brain and body and nerves. A tricky dealer may offer a substitute, but nothing else is "just as good." It is sold by all good druggists, and full information concerning it may be obtained by addressing the World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

No nation ever died of old age; but many have died of iniquity.

It is a well-established fact that a very large percentage of those who died from sunstroke in our great cities during the recent hot spell were drinking men. But that is not going to reform the man who loves his dram.

No matter what else he may have gained, he is to be pitied who has lost the joy of Christian hope. Gold, pleasure, place and power are utterly valueless as substitutes therefor. Still more insignificant are the nonsensical isms of the day.

One of the greatest needs of the day is Christian citizenship. We need men who will wield the highest prerogative of citizenship—the ballot—in the interest of righteousness. True Christian citizenship frowns upon iniquity in one's own party no less than in any other party. It takes no part in ballot-box stuffing and similar rascalities.

Some people find it difficult to remember anything that is valuable, but things that are worthless and harmful they have a marvelous capacity of retaining and reproducing at will. They can entertain you by the hour telling of the bad things that have been done by professing Christians; but the noble, heroic achievements that adorn the annals of our race they know nothing about. A man of this description has his counterpart among the lower animals—the vulture.

One of the best places we know of to glorify God and serve humanity is in the jury box. Integrity and impartiality on the bench and eloquence and ability at the bar are of no avail so long as corruption dominates the jury. Unrighteous verdicts are responsible for much of the mob law that disgraces our land and for various other evils as well. This state of things will continue as long as good citizens make use of all sorts of subterfuges to evade jury duty and thus fill the jury box with venal professionals. Not even the sanctuary when the revival tide is at its flood is a better place to serve God than the temple of justice.

It is quite the fashion nowadays to ridicule the family government of "the Puritans," as we call our fathers. The wisdom of this is quite questionable. "By their fruits ye shall know them" is a good rule by which to judge of any system of government. Does our modern do-as-you-please sort of government in the family produce as fine specimens of true manhood as did "the old-fogy" system of our fathers? Let the vice and crime that are rampant in the land answer. In comparison with that of our fathers our system of family government is "weighed in the balances and found wanting." We "spare the rod and spoil the child." There is more in this than many will admit.

A Call to Prayer.

A mass meeting of Christian people of all denominations was held in Chicago a few days since, the meeting having been called by Dwight L. Moody. The meeting was very largely attended. After a number of addresses by prominent ministers and laymen, the following resolutions were adopted:

"We, in common with a large number of our fellow-citizens of every religious and political creed, believe that our nation is in the hands of a great conflict, portending the most serious consequences, unless there be the merciful interposition of the divine hand.

"We believe this to be true, independently of any settlement of the present presidential contest, one way or another. On the one hand that mysterious factor known as 'public confidence' is declining, as illustrated by the depression in both financial and industrial circles; while, on the other, political, class and even sectional feeling is running unusually high and likely to become intenser as the day of election draws near.

"Not only is it true that questions requiring the most careful and dispassionate consideration are very likely to be determined in many instances in the heat of passion, but, after their determination, the results may prove baneful over a wide surface and for a lengthened period.

"We would not view the situation, perplexing and foreboding as it is, outside of its relation to the mind of God. We believe in his presence and agency among us. He is the governor among the nations, and will be entreated of his people. But we believe this to be a time for Christian patriots to follow the example of our forefathers in earlier crises which have confronted us, and pray unitedly to him 'that keepeth covenant and mercy for them that love him and keep his commandments,' that he would visit us with special grace.

"We, therefore, affectionately invite and earnestly urge our Christian fellow-citizens throughout the length and breadth of our land, irrespective of denominational or political affiliation, to join with us in observing Thursday, Oct. 29, as a day of fasting, confession and prayer to Almighty God, that he will allay passion and restrain evil among us; that he will strengthen faith and inspire hope; that he will impart wisdom and bestow patience, and that he will forgive our iniquities as a nation and grant us salvation."

Many of our readers will doubtless feel that these Chicago disciples are unnecessarily alarmed—that there is nothing in the present status of our country that constitutes a menace to law and order. Those who take this view are mistaken. Their opinions are formed mainly from local observations. If they lived in Chicago, or if they knew of the wide-spread feeling of intense hostility to the most beneficent and time-honored institutions of our country, they would be ready to join Moody and his Chicago brethren in a united supplication to heaven to avert impending calamities. Whether public religious services are held throughout this section in compliance with this call or not, Christian people should not fail to send up their petitions to a throne of grace in behalf of our country.

The spirit of anarchy which manifested itself at Chicago two years since in the most destructive riot our country has ever seen is not dead, or even sleeping; it is only watching for a favorable opportunity to begin anew its diabolical work. At this very moment the entire military force of the State of Colorado is under arms for the suppression of a riot at Leadville. Nor is this spirit of lawlessness confined to a few localities or to any one section of our country. Under favoring conditions, it is likely to break out in violence and bloodshed almost anywhere.

There are parents who wonder why their children take no interest in the church and absent themselves as much as possible from its services. In many cases they themselves are responsible. Their habitual criticisms of the preacher are such as to create an aversion to him, or at least to destroy all respect for him. Yet these same parents make it a ground of complaint against the preacher that he does not attract the young people and has no influence over them. Reader, pause and ask, "Is it I?"

The Ellisville Dedication.

On last Sabbath we had the privilege of dedicating the new church at Ellisville. The attendance was such as to necessitate the putting of chairs into the aisles. The people gave close attention while we attempted to dispense the Word. The sermon ended, by request of the pastor we took a collection, which aggregated something over $400, after which the formal dedication took place. This church is "a thing of beauty"—an architectural gem built according to one of Uncle David Morton's plans. It has a Sunday-school room and a pastor's study separated from the auditorium by folding doors, so that the three apartments can be thrown into one when occasion requires, as was the case on dedication day. The cost is about $4,000. We hope to be able in next week's issue to give a cut of the building. Pastor Keen and his flock are to be congratulated upon their success in this worthy enterprise. We occupied the pulpit again at night. We are indebted to Bro. Keen for a speech in behalf of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, which resulted in several new subscriptions on the spot. We were especially fortunate in being domiciled during our stay in Ellisville with our old friend and former parishioner, Bro. H. S. Gunn, and his accomplished St. Louis bride, whom we now met for the first time. To say that we enjoyed our visit hugely would be but a feeble expression of our appreciation of their generous, whole-souled hospitality.

The Successful Preacher.

Success the boon which all men crave. The cobbler and statesman, the soldier and sailor, all desire it. The preacher not an exception.

To be a successful preacher he must have come through the door, must have been divinely called. No mysterious voices; but he must be inwardly persuaded that the Lord wants him for the holy ministry. Must feel that "woe is me, if I preach not the gospel." That is not a divine call that failure marked every other enterprise in which he embarked. If he fails as merchant, mechanic, lawyer, teacher, etc., he will likely fail as preacher. Called of God, inwardly and outwardly the divine seal.

He has gifts. God calls not stupid dullards. Has a clear conception, can compare, weigh, analyze thought. Of good powers of association, good memory. Is an impressive speaker. Can appreciate the contents of three books—the Bible, nature and the human heart. Additionally he must have what is styled common sense. Some can see around a half dozen corners at the same time, but fail to discover what is plainly before their eyes.

These gifts the party called to the divine ministry must have at least in embryo. Development will in due time take place. Perhaps it is an open question whether the theological seminary or the itinerancy is the best school. Such men as Bishops McTyeire and Pierce differed on this subject. Some speak of maturity. Meaning the zenith of development, it can apply only to the body. In matters of intellect there may be growth until hoary age. If such growth does not transpire, it is because of neglect of the appropriate means. We hold that intellect will grow to all eternity.

Grace the Discipline declares those should possess who say that they are called to the holy ministry. Expressive word "grace." Must have been converted. Have the witness of adoption. The heart a temple of God. Striving to be made perfect in love. Animated by faith which overcometh the world. Walking with God in prayer. Says: "For me to live is Christ." Washed in his blood, treading in his footsteps, led by his spirit. Sings: "I am the Lord's, and he is mine." Looks upon this earth as a wilderness through which, as a stranger, he is wandering. Heaven is his home.

Possessing grace, the different Christian graces will soon assert themselves. He is humble. Admires Abraham Lincoln's poem: "Why should a mortal man be proud?" He is patient, meek, cordial, affectionate, kind, charitable. Loathes censoriousness, bitterness, sinful ambition.

Thus fitted for the ministry, success can not fail to perch on his banner. But the term "success" requires definition. Sometimes apparent success may be comparative or absolute failure. In business the acquisition of opulence is deemed greatest success, but wrongfully so. On the same principle it is a mistake that the pastorate of an imposing church, receipt of large salary, attainment to responsible office are the sum and substance of ministerial success.

We hold, that in ordinary life, he lives longest, lives most, lives best, achieves greatest success who serves his race faithfully. The same is true in regard to preachers. God requires not wonderful achievements at their hands, but only faithfulness. Learned and unlearned, young and old, all can prove themselves faithful.

He aims at awakening and convicting sinners. Knows that if this be superficial, conversion partakes of that same nature. Many of the ills in our Zion are attributable to this superficiality. He instructs, confirms, edifies his hearers. Causes enthusiasm, love to the brethren, to the church. On his tombstone should be written: "He served his people to the best of his ability."

JEAN PAUL.

In the Living Present.

More than ever before our daily papers employ pictorial illustrations. Cartoons abound. Good, bad, and indifferent. As a weapon, their execution has not yet been fully tried. With the illiterate a pertinent cartoon will accomplish more than doubly-leaded editorials. The result of the present presidential campaign will, perhaps, determine their relative worth.

The poison of church life, ritualism, is rapidly increasing in the Episcopal Church. Only nine churches of that denomination burned incense in the year 1882. Now 308 are thus religiously perfumed. In 1882 burning tapers were found on only 581 altars. Now the number has swelled to 3,598. When the heart is not enlisted, the senses are forced to go through devotional motion.

Fashion is cosmopolitan and supreme. High and low of both sexes bow to its dictates. Its caprices may cause a smile, but are deemed law, nevertheless. In Paris now all ladies after sunset wear "petit laternes." They are very diminutive, and emit light as brilliant as diamonds in daytime. We presume our leading dry-goods establishments will hereafter not require paid illumination.

While the special ambassador, Li Hung Chang, visited the Christian nations in Europe and America, he was profuse in his praises of Christianity. Repeatedly asserted that he was an enthusiastic supporter of the Christian missionary cause. Now, missionaries in China assure that they are not aware of this friendship; had, in fact, reason to surmise the reverse. Yes, circumstances do not only alter cases, but also opinions.

The Central Conference of Jewish Rabbis met recently in Milwaukee, Wis. It represents the reformatory element. But the resolution to change their Sabbath to Sunday failed. Other measures were adopted indicating return to orthodoxism. Orthodox Jews look upon the reformatory movement as we look upon rationalism.

In matters of the unholy war between adherers of the great founder of the Salvation Army and his son, Ballington Booth, Dr. Buckley, of the New York Christian Advocate, sides decidedly with the former. The friendship of the opulent and influential had filled the young man with conceit. He had promised implicit obedience to his official superiors. This promise he had broken. Old General Booth had lived too long to suit his son's aspirations.

Dr. Carroll, the prince of ecclesiastical statisticians, holds that there are far more Roman Catholics in our country than members of any Protestant denomination. He gives the Roman Catholic Church 8,014,911 members. To Methodism, 5,452,302; to the Baptists, 4,068,539; to the Presbyterians, 1,458,999. Is the learned Doctor aware that Roman Catholics count all who have been baptized as members? This includes infants. In Protestant Churches only those are deemed members who voluntarily joined.

ICH DIEN.

It is as much a parent's duty to provide good books for his children to read as it is to furnish them with wholesome food and comfortable apparel. Yet how many homes there are that are utterly destitute of wholesome, stimulating literature. Oh, that some one could bring about a reform just at this point!

NOTES.

The Czar of Russia and his wife are on a visit to Queen Victoria at Balmoral Castle.

On Wednesday last Queen Victoria's reign became the longest in English history.

The North Mississippi Conference will convene in Greenville, Miss. Nov. 26; Bishop Galloway presiding.

The A. and M. College, at Starkville, Miss., is opened with three hundred pupils in boarding dormitory.

Commander Ballington Booth has received ordination at the hands of Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church.

Rev. T. B. Regan, of the St. Louis Conference, has been transferred to the Missouri Conference, and appointed to Brashear circuit.

Rev. D. C. Laugford, of the Mississippi Conference, is having a very successful year on Rose Hill circuit. He has had some very gracious revivals.

Rev. Edgar C. McVoy has been transferred from the Holston Conference to the Denver Conference, and stationed at Morrison Chapel, Denver.

Last week Mrs. Julia Bradly, of Peoria, Ill., gave $2,200,000 for the founding of an institution of learning at that place. This school, it is said, will be correlated to the University of Chicago.

The St. Louis Advocate states that Rev. J. W. Lowrance, of the Southwest Missouri Conference, has been transferred to the Mississippi Conference. We judge that the North Mississippi Conference is Bro. Lowrance's destination.

Perhaps there would be less complaint of the minister "preaching over the heads of the people," if the people would study the Bible and sound religious books more, and devote less time to novels and secular newspapers.—Exchange.

The first edition of "The Life and Times of L. Q. C. Lamar" has been exhausted, and a second edition is now on the market. The price has been reduced from $5 to $3, which will doubtless increase the sale. It is a most excellent book to put into the hands of aspiring young men.

The Randolph-Macon Woman's College at Lynchburg, Va., opened Sept. 10, with a largely increased attendance. This has been the case in each of the four years since it opened, and there can now be no doubt of the success of the undertaking to establish in Virginia a college for women equal to the best in that State for men.

Queen Victoria has set a noble example for her sex. She has never allowed the cares of state and the duties and pleasures of royalty to interfere with her duties as wife and mother. Her career demonstrates the fact that it is possible for woman to be an active participant in public affairs without losing those qualities that constitute the loveliness of womanhood.

Enoch Pratt, of Baltimore, died a few days since. Mr. Pratt was a true philanthropist. His largest benefaction was the Pratt Free Library, which he founded and endowed at a cost of $1,150,000. He also endowed an academy in his native town, North Middleborough, Mass., at an expense of $30,000. He gave liberally to a number of other philanthropic causes.

Miss Agnes Slack is the first woman who ever preached from John Wesley's pulpit, City Road Chapel, London. Miss Slack is honorary secretary of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and is now in the United States. This young English woman, scarcely more than a girl in years, is strikingly girlish and winning in appearance. She is not only an eloquent orator, but also one of the most heroic of the noble band of leaders of the woman's temperance movement. Her knowledge of the evils of intemperance has been obtained by personal contact with those who suffer from them and by visitation of prisons, workhouses and asylums.—Exchange.

Rev. George Clark, one of the veterans of the South Georgia Conference, died at Perry on Sept. 12. He had been in the active ministry for fifty-one years, and had served circuits, stations and districts acceptably and with great benefit to the church. He was a decidedly strong preacher and eminently a man of God.

The Epworth League Conference of the Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, will be held at Coffeeville, Miss., Oct. 8 and 9. An excellent programme has been arranged. There will be three sessions each day. All who expect to attend are requested to send their names to Rev. W. C. Lester, Coffeeville, Miss.

It is right that the church should know the real status of things in its work for the world and should face the situation. Estimates are published showing that while during the present century four millions of people have been baptized from among the heathen, yet during the same time the heathen peoples have increased two hundred millions.—Mid. Continent.

Ian Maclaren's new short story, the last he will write until after his American visit, has been secured by The Ladies' Home Journal, for publication in the October and November issues. It is called "The Minister of St. Bede's," and is said to be in the brightest and cleverest Maclarenesque vein. Besides its charm as a delightful romance, the story is said to be notable for the admirable character that the author has created for the chief personage—the minister of St. Bede's, as the loyal lover of an humble Scotch lassie.

The East Mississippi Female College, Meridian, Miss., opened with the largest number of students in its history. The bed-rooms are all taken, and beds are being put up in sitting-rooms and other rooms not intended for bed-rooms. This speaks well for the institution, the first year under the management of President Beeson. That college, doubtless, has a bright future before it. They are now arranging to erect another building which will soon be ready for use. This is necessary in order to accommodate the large number of boarders.

New Orleans is to be honored by a visit from two of the elect ladies of Southern Methodism—Mrs. S. C. Trueheart, secretary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, and Mrs. F. A. Butler, editor of the Woman's Missionary Advocate. They will arrive on the second, and will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Dick, 1918 Napoleon avenue. A reception will be given them in Rayne Memorial Chapel on Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of which Mrs. Ellen K. Parker is president. A mass meeting will be held in Rayne Memorial Church on Sunday night. We bespeak for these distinguished women a royal reception. Mrs. Butler is known throughout Southern Methodism as the able and efficient editor of the Woman's Missionary Advocate. She is a thoroughly consecrated Christian and an enthusiast in the cause of missions. Mrs. Trueheart has a widely extended reputation as an educator. She is a woman of fine native abilities and ripe scholarship. New Orleans Methodists ought to turn out en masse to see and hear these noble women. We hope their visit to our city will result in an increased interest in the missionary cause.

"Hero-worship," much as it has been ridiculed, has its foundations in one of the noblest feelings of the human heart. It is simply our admiration of great men. History and biography should form a considerable part of the reading of the young on account of the hero-worship there by created. No influence that can touch the heart of youth is more elevating and ennobling than this feeling of admiration for those who are truly great. We pity the man who finds no heroes among the magnates of history. An eminent divine recently said: "Christianity is hero-worship. The greatest of all heroes is the man Jesus."

It is steady, every-day work that counts. Meteor-like dash and impetuosity makes more noise and attracts more attention, but the large permanent good results from the noiseless work that goes on unceasingly from day to day.

Mississippi Conference.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South—

DEAR BRETHREN: Our Conference year draws rapidly to a close; and whatever is to be done must be quickly done. Let me ask you a few questions;

1. How many sermons on missions—foreign and domestic and church extension—have you preached this year?

2. How many of you have bought a book on mission questions this year?

3. How many of you have in your libraries a book on missions of later date than "The Acts of the Apostles?"

4. How many of you have complied with paragraph 357 of the Book of Discipline, even partially?

5. How many of you have undertaken to comply with the often resolved Conference resolution to take up an early collection for foreign missions? or for domestic missions?

6. How many of you have organized your Sunday-schools into missionary societies, and taken up a collection as required by paragraph 247 of the Book of Discipline?

These questions need not be answered through the columns of the ADVOCATE, nor even on the Conference floor; but only to yourselves and before God—the great God, who by his own Spirit called you into the gospel ministry to "go, teach all nations," and to "preach the gospel to every creature." No idle motive has prompted me to ask these questions of you, my brethren, but only a sincere desire to glorify God and advance his kingdom in the world. Some of you, I know, have been faithful in these matters; but I was startled a few days since, when one of our brightest young preachers—one who has been in the Conference more than five years—told me that he has never preached a sermon on the subject of missions! but had sometimes referred to missions in his sermons! I fear there are not a few like him, and some who have been much longer in the Conference than he.

From every mission field comes the cry for more men and more women—more preachers and more teachers. The hands of the Board of Missions are tied. The treasury is empty. Some of our best workers, at home on leave of absence for rest and recuperation, have been notified to remain at home and take work since the Board is unable to pay their traveling expenses back to the mission fields where they are best and specially qualified to work.

More than 20,000 Methodists in the bounds of our Conference contributed nothing towards bringing the world to Christ. One man has guaranteed the support of a missionary to Japan; another contributes $200 yearly, and one or two $50; a very few hundred pay $5 or $10 annually; but many, so many, neither pay nor pray for this cause nor care whether the world be ever brought to Christ or not.

Brethren, the time is short. Do what you can in these few intervening weeks; to arouse slumbering consciences that they render unto the Lord that which is his.

Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLEN, Miss'y Sec'y.

Wesson, Miss., Sept. 21, 1896.

Notice.

If any reader of this paper has a catalogue of the East Mississippi Female College, let him send it at once to Pres. J. W. Beeson, Meridian, Miss., as the supply is entirely exhausted. He is receiving demands for them every day.

Millsaps College.

The fifth session of Millsaps College begins under the most favorable conditions. We have a very large attendance of students. The indications are that we will enroll this session more students than during any previous year.

Our opening exercises were greatly enjoyed by those present. After religions services conducted by Pastor Watkins, interesting and encouraging words were spoken by Col. J. L. Power, Hon. A. A. Kincanou, Judge Mayes, Rev. R. M. Standifer, Rev. J. A. Randolph and Dr. Hunnicutt, and on Thursday Rev. T. B. Holloman delighted the boys with an encouraging talk.

This morning, after devotional exercises conducted by Presiding Elder Norsworthy, Bishop Galloway made an address which was greatly enjoyed and will be long remembered.

Friday Morning, Sept 25.

An Appeal for the New Orleans Seamen's Bethel.

The financial outlook not only of the Bethel, but of all other charitable institutions in the city, for the coming Winter, is so bad that many of them will have to curtail their work, and, perhaps, in some cases abandon it altogether. In order that this historic old institution, made famous all over the world by its venerable chaplain, Dr. Witherspoon, and which for nearly 37 years has done so much for the cause of the sailor in our port, may not suffer in its usefulness, we are compelled to appeal earnestly to all charitable people both in the city and throughout our land for financial assistance in this crisis. Many of our subscribers who have never heretofore turned a deaf ear to our appeals, will be compelled to do so this year—their funds being locked up in the insolvent banks. We need immediate help to prosecute our work during the coming Winter. The indications are that there will be more shipping than for many years, and we must be prepared to welcome the thousands of seafaring men who will throng our streets, and need our care. We only need the necessary running expenses to carry us through. Our facilities are the same as usual, and there is no reason why this should not be a most prosperous season if our friends will rally to our support. If, on the other hand, we are compelled to depend only upon our usual list of subscribers, diminished as it will be, we may have to close our doors and abandon our work, which will be a sad ending to the bright record of this celebrated institution.

Checks should be made payable to Gilbert H. Green, treasurer, or to the undersigned,

(Rev.) R. E. STEELE, Chaplain,
2218 St. Thomas St., New Orleans.

Notice.

To the Presiding Elders of the Mississippi Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN: As soon as your third round is completed, please send me your third quarterly report, so that my report may be promptly made to Dr. Lambuth. It would give great pleasure to Dr. Lambuth if your fourth quarterly reports should be full on all the items called for. If your blanks for the fourth report have been mislaid, let me know at once and I will gladly furnish others. Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLEN.

Do You Want $5?

Any bright boy or girl in any town or village in Louisiana or Mississippi can sell 10 copies, at $1 per copy, of Dr. Smith's "Boy in Gray," and he will give such an one $5 in cash.

Send fifty cents to him in Macon, Ga., and get a copy. Address Rev. Dr. Geo. G. Smith, Macon, Ga.

Grenada Collegiate Institute

Has begun well. Fifty-six boarders were present the first day, and now (Oct. 1) there are 75. The college has been in session just a month to-day, and every department is under good headway. Dr. Malone has 11 teachers, who are the equal of any in the South. As a brother from a distance wrote as he sent his daughter to Grenada: "You have the best and most religious faculty I know." The city of Grenada has more interest in the college than usual. Seventy pupils from town have already been enrolled, making 145 in all. And we are assured that constant additions will be made both to the boarding department and daily attendance from the city. In fact, Dr. Malone informs me that every room has been engaged by pupils who expect to enter in a few days, so that as the college grows the teachers must be crowded together as mere pupils COMO.

We do need an additional building very much. Who will give us a few thousand dollars to put up a building for more dormitories, for music rooms and for a Science Hall?

I need not mention any special feature of college work at Grenada, except to say it is equal to the best. In music, art, elocution, literature, the languages, the sciences and mathematics the girls enjoy special privileges. The new matron, Mrs. Pond, who has both capacity and experience, is teaching the girls first-class housekeeping, as well as looking after all their temporal wants. Six States are represented in the boarding patronage, showing the constant and steady growth of the college in public favor.

Let me again request the pastors and Sunday-school superintendents of the North Mississippi Conference to kindly forward all money in their hands to me before Conference. Surely you can and will help me in this matter. Send money by post-office order or express money order, as we have no bank at this place. I want, if possible, to have my report made out before I leave home, and this can be done if you will forward amount in your hands.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-reel, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-coraider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slant dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—The "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without disturbing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change of adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

Had Catarrh ever since I can remember, often avoided company on account of the offensive discharge, hawking and spitting; throat was dry and sore, the least change in the weather gave me cold; dull pain over my eyes caused a stupid and drowsy feeling; ears began to ring, and in a short time my hearing failed and grew worse until I became so deaf I could not hear one talk unless they were close to me and spoke very loud. Have used Aerial Medication eight weeks, hearing is fully restored, roaring and pain gone, and Catarrh is entirely cured. I do not see why anyone should suffer from Catarrh or deafness when there is such a good cure as this. Miss Carrie Bowers, Rouseville, Pa.

Deaf 25 Years.

For many years I suffered from Catarrh, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing gave me the slightest relief. I obtained Aerial Medication, and in three weeks my hearing began to improve, and now I can hear common conversation across a room; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away. I think I am entirely cured, and my hearing permanently restored.

Rev. Frederic R. I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. WHEN TROUBLE COMES.

BY EBEN E. REXFORD.

When trouble comes, don't let despair
Add to the burden you must bear,
But keep up heart and smilingly say,
"The darkest cloud must pass away."

Don't sit and brood o'er things gone wrong,
But sing a helpful little song,
Or whistle something light and gay,
And whistle half your care away.

The man who sings when trouble's here,
From trouble has not much to fear,
Since it will never tarry long
When stout heart meets it with a song.

Then don't forget, when things go wrong,
To try the magic in a song;
For cheerful heart and smiling face
Bring sunshine to the shadiest place.

"Shine for Jesus."

(HIS MOTTO)

There is nothing more beautiful to me than a boy's devotion to his mother, and I want to tell you of a boy that was nothing but pleasure to his.

There was a lovely little life that unfolded and then withered away, as if touched by Summer's scorching heat or Winter's stinging cold, in Water Valley. Oh, if there were more boys like C. C. Boyd, whose mother could say, "He was a child of love," because his whole nature seemed so filled with it! He learned to read when five years old, and begged that his birthday present would be a Testament, upon whose pages now are the dear little finger-prints left on his favorite chapters. 'Twas there he must have learned the sweet lessons of hope and trust which enabled him to bear the most acute suffering with a heroism worthy of an aged Christian. In those early days, too, he learned to love the children's page in the ADVOCATE and the Sunday-school VISITOR. He was so bright and pure that those who knew him could but expect that he should be a polished worker for the Master. Little did they think a disease was slumbering in his veins which should indeed show that "His grace is sufficient" for even a child. In moments of ease his sweet musical voice would break forth in songs of praise; but when the agony returned, no murmur would ever escape his lips. Was he not working for the Master in that home? After awhile he had to be rolled in an invalid's chair, and his poor little voice became too weak to sing. Then he would beg the sweet, patient mother he loved so well to sing. Sometimes he would say, "Mama, please let me put my arms around your neck and tell you how much I love you" How easy it was for the mother to spend those sleepless nights and weary days trying to alleviate his sufferings, because mother's and child's love was so mingled!

The daisies have twice bloomed since this dear little boy was taken to heaven, but the sweet influence of his young Christian life will ever be new and fresh in his home. How much sweeter would life here be if boys could, in youth, realize the rest and comfort they can be at home! Often it seems that anything but love is the motive power in their actions. Boys, please be kind to mother. You will never have a better friend, and should you pass away in youth, the memory of your sweet words and kind deeds will be so precious to her.

Scant Feeding of Man or Horse Is Small Profit and Sure Loss.

What is saved out of food of cattle is a dead loss, for a horse can't work if he is not fed. If an animal won't pay for keeping, he won't pay for starving. Even the land yields little if not nourished, and it is just the same with the poor beast. You might as well try to run a steam engine without coals, or drive a water mill without water, as a horse without putting corn into him. Thomas Tusser, who wrote a book upon "Husbandry" in the olden time, said,

"Who starveth his cattle, and wearieth them ont
By carting and ploughing, his gain I much doubt;
But he that in labor doth use them aright
Has gain to his comfort and cattle in plight."

Poor dumb animals can not speak for themselves and therefore everyone who has his speech should plead for them. To keep them short of victuals is a crying shame. I hate cruelty, and above all things the cruelty which starves the laboring beast.

A right good man is good to all,
And stints not stable, rack or stall;
Not only cares for horse and hog,
But kindly thinks of cat and dog.

Is not a man better than a beast? Then, depend upon it, what is good for the ploughing horse is good for the ploughing boy. A starving workman is a dear servant. If you don't pay your men, they pay themselves, or else they shirk their work. He who labors well should be fed well, especially a ploughman.

It Is Good News.

Life is hard work, wrote Charles Kingsley—and life at least which is worth being called life, which is not the life of a swine who thinks of nothing but feeding himself, or of a butterfly which thinks of nothing but enjoying itself. Those are easy lives enough; but the end thereof is death. The swine goes to the slaughter; the butterfly dies of the frost—and there is an end of them. But the manly life, the life of good deeds and noble thoughts and usefulness and purity, the life which is discontented with itself, and which, the better it is, longs the more to be better still; the life which will endure through this world into the world to come, and on an upward forever and forever—that life is not an easy life to live; it is very often not a pleasant life; very often a sad life.

You may say this is bad news. I do not believe it is. I believe it is good news, and the very best of news; but if it is bad news, I can not help it. I did not make it so. God made it so. And God must know best, God is love. And we are his children, and he loves us. And therefore his ways with us must be good and loving ways, and any news about them must be good news, and a gospel, though we can not see it so at first.—Selected.

If we can bring a real Christ to this world, we shall hush its long wail, we shall banish all its darkness, we shall solve all its problems. He is the life of the world, its light, and hope and joy. He is the key to all its mysteries, the certain healer of all its diseases.

A Rule That Worked Both Ways.

The Christian Advocate tells of a Chinaman who applied for the position of cook in a family in one of our Western cities. The lady of the house and most of the family were members of a fashionable church, and they were determined to look after the character of the servants. So when John Chinaman appeared at the door he was asked:

"Do you drink whisky?"

"No," said he, "I Clistian man."

"Do you play cards?"

"No, I Clistian man."

He was employed and gave great satisfaction. He did his work well, was honest, upright, correct and respectful. After some weeks the lady gave a progressive euchre party and had wines at the table. John Chinaman was called upon to serve the party, and did so with grace and acceptability. But next morning he waited on the lady and said he wished to quit work.

"Why, what is the matter?"

John answered.

"Clistian man; I told you so before, no heathen. No workee for Melican heathen."—Exchange.

"Trifles Make Perfection."

A friend of Michael Angelo called on the great artist while he was finishing a statue. Some days afterward he called again, the sculptor was still at the same task. The friend, looking at the statue, exclaimed:

"Have you been idle since I saw you last?"

"By no means," replied Angelo. "I have retouched this part, and polished that; I have softened this feature, and brought out this muscle; I have given more expression to this lip, and more energy to this limb."

"Well, well!" said his friend, "all these are trifles."

"It may be so," replied Angelo, "but recollect that trifles make perfection, and that perfection is no trifle."

So it is with the shaping of character; each day brings us under the play of innumerable little influences. Every one of these influences does its work good or ill. By-and-by appears the full and final result, and this is particularly noticeable in our Christian growth. It is attention to the "trifles" that make us Christ-like.—Exchange.

The man who has never found an occupation to suit him is about as disagreeable to have around as a creaking window blind out of order that will neither stay open nor shut.

No two things differ more than hurry and despatch. Hurry is the mark of a weak mind, despatch of a strong one.—Colton Lacon.

It is the fruit of good works, and not the mere blossom of good thoughts and good feelings, which God requires.—Peter Young.

Extreme.

Two extremes are to be avoided in our daily round of duties and in our circle of opportunities. One relates to the spending our strength wholly upon the minor demands of our station, and the other to centering our activities chiefly on what we regard as our larger obligations. Each duty has its exact place and measure. The homely performance is relatively entitled to as much recognition as the more conspicuous. There is nothing petty in any duty which God lays upon us. He divides our work into what we call the little things and the great things of life, but it is only when we put faith, conscience, love, devotion and fidelity into every undertaking that we get the best out of existence for ourselves, secure the richest benefits to others and most advance the divine glory.—Selected.

The devil is always offering tempting discounts off the proper valuations of such high-class goods as virtue, purity and sacrifice, and spreads his bargain counters in every quarter every day. But his counterfeit wares are dear at any price—as all negotiators will ultimately discover to their sorrow who dare to deal with the devil. The latter has always had the reputation of being a tricky tradesman, who when a pretended buyer acts upon the principle, "Something for nothing," but when himself in turn a salesman endeavors to enrich himself by the swindling method of yielding "nothing" for "everything" that he covets.—New York Observer.

Franklin worked while other boys spent their time in idle sports. The money they spent in beer he spent in books. He pledged himself against strong drink and lived frugally. While working at the press, he found ample time for severe study. The Spectator gave him style; De Foe, on "Projects," made him an inventor; Mather, on "Doing Good," made him a philanthropist; and the Bible made him a Christian.—Ram's Horn.

HYGIENE.

Buchal Dyspepsia Its Hygienic Treatment.

The term "buchal dyspepsia" is now used to indicate mouth indigestion. It is not many years since it was first used and it is not often seen in medical journals. Its significance was not known twenty years ago and is hardly known to-day by the average practitioner. He attributes the results of buchal indigestion to other causes and in most cases prescribes the wrong remedy. This is perhaps one reason why doctors find so much difficulty in curing indigestion.

Buchal dyspepsia has its chief cause in imperfect mastication, that is, the food is not well chewed. The effects are that it is not well broken up. The starch granules safely housed in a little cell of woody matter are not set at liberty, but remain therein. The saliva does not reach them, can not act on them to change them to a soluble form. They pass into the stomach, and even if this organ is in good health, this change is not perfected, for there is too little saliva in it. It must remain here till the contents of the stomach are passed into the duodenum where, if the person is healthy, the starch is digested, but if not healthy, it will remain undigested and pass away and be so much loss.

The great ontcry of our time against starch, from persons with feeble digestion, has its origin in buchal indigestion, from rapid eating.

The remedy for those with buchal indigestion is to eat dryer food as a part of each meal. One of the best forms of dry food is the oatmeal bread used so much by the Scotch in olden time. It is made by mixing finely ground oatmeal in water to the proper consistency, rolling it out as thin as a case knife and baking it in a hot oven so it will be very tender and crisp. This requires mastication, it can not be swallowed without it, and so a very large amount of saliva is secreted—so much of it that starch digestion can go on in the stomach for some time after the food has been swallowed. This is the true way to eat oatmeal; it is far preferable to eating it as a mush for this will not, usually, be properly masticated.—Journal of Hygiene.

OBITUARIES.

MILLER—THOMAS LOUIE MILLER, son of Rev. John A. Miller, of the Louisiana Conference, departed this life at the parsonage, Ruston, La., Sept. 14, 1896, aged twenty-eight years three months and sixteen days.

The writer baptized him in infancy. He united with the Methodist Church when quite young; called for his church letter later, since which time he has not been attached to the church. The writer had prayers with him, and he told him he was a "Christian." His father, who was constantly by his bedside, talked to him freely about his condition. His statement was: "I am not afraid to die, and yet to go so young was strange."

Louie had many virtues and excellent qualities. He was sick for seven months, and was as great a sufferer as I remember ever to have seen, all of which he bore patiently, and made a most heroic struggle for life. Notwithstanding the skill of physicians and the constant presence and kindly offices of the family, the monster, Death, aimed his unerring shaft and claimed his victim. His death, unlike that of his Christian mother, who was in a moment called away, leaving him a little boy, he, through slowly rolling months of pain and suffering, reduced and emaciated to almost a skeleton, passed quietly and serenely into the spirit-world.

How inscrutable are the ways of Divine Providence! And yet "the Judge of all the earth will do right." We can lean strongly and safely on his arm.

In all the relations of life this young man was amiable, kind, obliging, and strong in his attachments. His well-laid plans for the future have all been blasted, and we mourn his absence.

He was buried beside his Grandmother Miller in the Arcadia Cemetery to await the resurrection, just as the sun was exchanging his radiant light for the milder light of the moon, in the presence of a large concourse.

MCCULLAR—JAMES M. MCCULLAR was born Jan. 8, 1819; was married to Eliza Jane Alexander, May 13, 1852; made a profession of religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1858, and died May 17, 1896.

Bro. McCullar leaves a kind and affectionate wife and four children (two sons and two daughters) to mourn his death. Solemn sentences like this are at some time spoken or written of us all. Pathetic interest in such announcements attaches usually to but few, but to these few it is unspeakable. In this sad case death meant the ceasing of a life. It meant the leaving empty and desolate of a home; the departure of a strong, loving husband from a devoted wife; the unutterable sadness of separation between father and children.

He was tended by a very fine physician, and nursed by a very loving and tender family and friends, who did all they could for him; but, despite all their efforts, and prayers of loved ones that God would spare him to them yet a while longer, he, in his infinite wisdom, saw fit to do otherwise; and while his decrees seem hard, he is just, and doeth all things well, and says he does not afflict us willingly.

R. S. LAWSON.

Burgess, Miss.

BARRON—MALINDA FELDER, wife of H. M. Barron, was born in South Carolina, June 14, 1816, and died near Pollock, La., Sept. 7, 1896, at the home of her son, T. C. Barron, with whom she had lived many years. On April 14, 1854, she was left a widow, being the mother of ten children, nine of whom survive her. For sixty years the deceased had been a member of the Methodist Church, and had been walking in the fear of God. She leaves many friends and loved ones to weep for her, but we rejoice even with weeping, because her house was builded upon the rock, Christ Jesus. Shining angels came to minister to her in her last moments, and bear her soul to the Father's bosom. While I pen these lines Grandma sits at the right hand of God and shouts "Victory!" over the last enemy.

Her life is an example worthy of our patronage, and the manner in which she approached the trying instance of death is the crowning persuasion of this example.

May God comfort those who mourn for her, and prepare us all to meet her in that land where there is no more parting!

A FRIEND.

ALFORD—ROLAND C., youngest son of W. J. and Mary E. Alford, was born Jan. 10, 1888, and died June 1, 1896.

It was my pleasure to know little Roland for about three and a half years before his death, and a more sweet-spirited and affectionate child I never knew. He was the center of attraction in the home, both to the family and the visitor. He seemed especially devoted to preachers. I seldom, if ever, visited his home without receiving fruit or some little token of love from Roland. His greatest delight was to please papa and mama, who felt as did his brothers and sisters, that anything they did for him was more of a pleasure than a duty.

His religious qualities were also well developed for a child of his age. Having been baptized in infancy, he naturally grew up with the impression that he was a Methodist; but instead of being left here to take upon himself the obligations of the church militant, God called him hence to join the church triumphant.

Grieve not, loved ones, little Roland has only gone on before to beckon you to that bright home above. W. H. BENTON.

CAWTHON—P. B. CAWTHON, the subject of this sketch, was born in Franklin county, Ga., Oct. 10, 1825; moved to Madison county, Miss., in 1850, and in the Fall of 1854 he moved to Rankin county, Miss., where he lived until his death, May 20, 1896. In August, 1852, he was married to Miss A. N. Thompson.

Bro. Cawthon joined the Christian Church in early manhood, and in the year 1891 he was received into the M. E. Church, South, by the writer. From then until death he was a faithful and consistent member.

For four years before his death he was a constant sufferer. He bore his suffering patiently, never murmuring nor complaining, but was perfectly resigned to God's will. He was confined to his bed for several days before his death. He requested his friends to be faithful to God, and meet him in heaven.

His remains were interred in the graveyard at Holleyhush Church with Masonic honors, May 30, 1896. C. C. GRIFFIN, Pastor.

COONEY—Sister MOLLIE COONEY (nee Fuller) was born in Tate county, Miss., Dec. 25, 1869. On Oct. 10, 1895, she was married to Mr. J. W. Cooney. She left earth for heaven Aug. 23, 1896.

She stated to her pastor a short while before her death that she expected to join the church as soon as she attended divine service again. Yes, we have the assurance that she was ready.

We laid her away to rest. Our hearts are sad to-day. We shall miss her gentle face; still we feel her sweet, pure life, so full of gentle, loving kindness to all, is not ended. Faith whispers softly, "The grave is not the goal of human hopes."

To the husband and father in their deep sorrow we say: Trust God; look up; you shall meet your dear one on the beautiful banks of the crystal sea; shall clasp her hand again, and walk the jasper pavements of eternity.

We sorrow now, but "joy cometh in the morning" if we are only faithful.

HER PASTOR.

CAMBEL—DWIGHT CAMBEL, infant son of J. C. and Johnnie Cambel, of Rankin county, Miss., died Aug. 15, 1896, aged one year one month and three days.

He was the pet of the home. He was the baby child, which endeared him so much the more. How deep the sorrow, and what an aching void in that home bereft of baby! Sorrowing ones, weep not; it is only a little flower transplanted in the glory-world, never to wither, but to shine brighter unto the perfect day. Your loss is his eternal gain. It is only a bright jewel that should bind you closer to God. C. C. GRIFFIN, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS of the third Quarterly Conference of Chunkey circuit, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, relative to the death of Mr. EDWARD J. REW:

Whereas, It has pleased the all-wise God to take from the midst of us, and from the official ranks of this charge, our friend and brother, Edward J. Rew; and, whereas, He was a highly esteemed citizen, an active member of the church and an efficient member of the Board of Trustees of church property; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deeply deplore our loss, and pray the Lord of the harvest that, as he hurles his workmen, he will send forth other laborers into the field. Bro. Rew is greatly missed in the community in which he lived. His broad-spirited patriotism made him the center of a host of admiring friends. The people have lost a benefactor, the church has lost a friend, the family an affectionate father.

Resolved, That we tender to the family of the deceased our heartfelt sympathy, and commend them to the loving care of a kind heavenly Father.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of this Conference, a copy sent to the family, and a copy to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication. J. A. MOORE, for Com.

A man may believe it with all my heart so absolutely wrapped up in the glory of obedience, and the higher life, and the service of Christ, that he never once asks himself, "What will come to me if I do not obey?" any more than your child asks you what you will do to him if he is not obedient. Every impulse and desire of his life sets toward obedience.—Phillips Brooks.

Man dries up the channels of divine strength and defeables his whole moral being when he does not follow his conscience, for the divinest thing in a man is his conscience; and if he has dishonored God in his soul, God can not honor him in his life with power.—Rev. S. B. Meeser.

Most men are either far-sighted or near-sighted. Before marriage they see good qualities that their sweethearts don't possess, and after marriage they don't see the good qualities that their wives do possess.

If piling up dollars is all that a man lives for, his soul shrinks with every dollar he makes.

It is the man who is least willing to practice who finds the most fault with the preaching.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to seek knowledge if that will persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had begun a stammerer from childhood; sometimes so unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. W. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended to church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

The Modern Paul, and the Story of His Life.

On the morning of June 19, 1896, a little steamship, called "Wilcannia," lay at South Wharf, Brooklyn, New York. The fires had been kindled for a long voyage. The vessel was about to depart for Cape Town, South Africa. She had on board one passenger. He was a tall old man, wearing a serious, but cheerful countenance. He had a long gray beard falling on his breast. Perhaps of all the men in the United States he had the most venerable and patriarchical appearance. His face and form were the face and form of an apostle; and such he was. He was going forth to preach the gospel to the Kaffirs. He said: "I must have ten thousand Kaffir souls for my hire before I die." It was William Taylor, for twelve years Bishop of Africa, departing alone for Cape Town to renew his missionary labors in Kaffraria.

The scene was affecting. It was a rainy Summer morning. The shipping of many nations lay spread around the bay. The "Wilcannia" was not a great steamer, but was what they call a "tramp." She was not like the "Campania" or "Lucania" in which thousands of the rich and happy sail away on voyages of pleasure to the old world. The "Wilcannia" was only a small merchant ship, but the modern Paul had found her as if in waiting for him.

In 1895 Bishop Taylor came home from the country of the Congo, where he had been planting missions, and began the publication of the "Story of My Life." The work is issued in a large illustrated octavo volume by the Methodist Book Concern, New York. In this work the Bishop was engaged until the meeting of the General Conference at Cleveland. That body, judging from the Bishop's advanced age, declared him "ineffective" as it related to episcopal work. He was retired from duty, but he is one of those unconquerable spirits who know not the meaning of relief from duty or even a brief vacation. He must travel on and work on to the end of his days. Having finished the "Story of My Life" and left it as his legacy to after times, he turned quickly and with the eagerness of youth to his future field of labor. It sounds strangely to speak of a "future field of labor" for a man already seventy-five years of age. But William Taylor knows neither age nor decrepitude. He made his plans as speedily as possible, and, having found his little room on the steamer, he bid farewell to his friends. His aged wife parted from him and went ashore; so also his son and a few other faithful friends who had gone with him to the ship. Then the vessel drew off into the bay, having as her solitary passenger one of the most remarkable men of modern times.

After several weeks the veteran was heard from. At the Cape Verd Islands the "Wilcannia" stopped, and the Bishop sent back a letter saying: "We arrived at St. Vincent, in the Cape Verd group, on July 8, after a pleasant voyage of sixteen days from New York. We have had good weather all the way, and Captain Pentin and wife have been very kind. I am in splendid health, having recovered from the attack of bronchitis which affected my voice. Last Sunday afternoon I set on deck and sang ninety tunes, and their hymns in part, and was glad to hear my own voice again."

Late in August the "Wilcannia" arrived safely at Cape Town. Bishop Taylor made haste to reach his [illegible] sions in Kaffraria. No young evangelist ever sought his field with more eagerness and delight. This had been the favorite work of William Taylor.

P. S.—On Bishop Taylor's arrival in South Africa he was interviewed by "The Methodist Churchman," and in reply to questions stated: "I have two methods of evangelization—the pulpit and the press. I am the author of fourteen or fifteen works, the last being entitled 'The Story of My Life,' published by the Methodist Book Concern, New York. Within the few months since it came from the press they have published four editions of 5,000 each, 20,000 copies, and they are still hurrying up their printers to supply the growing demand. That book will go on preaching when I am dead and have gone to heaven. In my evangelizing labors in this country, I ask no collections and solicit no subscriptions, but in each place where I labor I shall place my book in the hands of some responsible person and take the profit of such sales to defray all my expenses so as not to be burdensome to the people, and not to interfere with local objects. So I am free to go anywhere."

The most astonishing results in healing wounds have been shown by Salvation Oil.

Opening of Millsaps College.

The fifth session of Millsaps College opened on the twenty-third ultimo with 170 students—more than were matriculated, all told, during the last session. A large percentage of the old pupils with a fine representation of new ones.

We were pleased to have several representatives from the North Mississippi Conference on the rostrum. All of the resident ministers of Jackson, including Bishop Galloway, were with us. Col. J. L. Power and State Superintendent A. A. Kincannon also honored us with their presence, and made most excellent and suggestive addresses to the young men, as did also several others.

As Dr. Standifer said, the boys were literally "loaded down with advice." All of the faculty were present, and each one looking as a strong man to begin the race for the next ten months. A more intellectual looking, determined set of young men we have never seen. When her alumni shall have increased, and Millsaps College shall have become better known, I predict that more room will have to be added to accommodate the applicants. The law department begins well. More than a dozen present, and when all shall have come in the number will be twenty or more.

On Friday morning Bishop Galloway delivered an address, which will long be remembered by those who were so fortunate as to have heard it, and will prove an inspiration to the students to noble, manly lives.

VOL. 43.—NO. 41. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1896. WHOLE NO. 2094

Rev. W. G. BLACK, D. D., EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. } PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH. { ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

WHICH ARE YOU?

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

There are two kinds of people on earth to-day,
Just two kinds of people, no more, I say.

Not the sinner and saint, for 'tis well understood
The good are half bad, and the bad are half good.

Not the rich and the poor, for to count a man's wealth
You must first know the state of his conscience and health.

Not the humble and proud, for in life's little span
Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.

Not the happy and sad, for the swift-flying years
Bring each man his laughter and each man his tears.

No; the two kinds of people on earth I mean
Are the people who lift, and the people who lean.

Wherever you go, you will find the world's masses
Are always divided in just these two classes.

And, oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.

In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?

Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?

—Harper's Weekly.

The Educational Collection.

As some of our people seem to misunderstand the purpose of our educational collection, a few words of explanation may not be amiss. Why should there be an educational collection? For this reason: In our college tuition is free to ministers and ministers' sons. Now, these two classes of students get the same service from the teachers as the other students. As much time and care are given to them as to others. It costs as much to educate them as it does to educate others. It is published to the world that the classes named have free tuition, but, as much time and labor are bestowed upon them as upon any others, it is evident that it costs somebody time and labor. Time and labor in this case represent money. So, while it is given out that tuition is free to these classes, some one in reality pays for it.

The question now is, Who pays it? If the college is sufficiently endowed to be able to pay its running expenses without drawing on tuition fees, then the free tuition is a direct donation from the college to the beneficiaries. If, however, the tuition fees are necessary to pay expenses, the tuition is so much deducted from the amount necessary for expenses. The largest expense ordinarily is in the matter of teachers' salaries; so that in an unendowed college free tuition is so much taken out of teachers' wages. As this would be a manifest injustice, and as the church can not afford to practice injustice upon any, the Conference ordered the teachers to take an educational collection, the proceeds of which were to be turned over to the college to pay its teachers for teaching ministers and ministers' sons. There can be no reason found why a teacher, dependent upon his wages for a living, should educate a preacher or a preacher's son, who is just as able to pay it as the teacher is. The Conference saw plainly the injustice of this, and hence ordered the collection to alleviate that injustice. The object of the collection is to distribute the amount required for the tuition of the two classes named over the whole church.

But some one is ready to ask, Why should the whole church be asked to contribute to the education of ministers and ministers' sons? According to my view, in regard to the first class, it is a matter of justice. The church is to reap the benefit of the labors of young men preparing for the ministry, and it is simply just that the church should contribute, at least, enough to pay their tuition fees. In regard to ministers' sons, it resolves itself into a matter of restitution. There is not a preacher in the Conference, who has a son old enough to attend college, to whom the church is not indebted on back salaries in amounts sufficient to educate from one to a dozen sons. I don't believe these debts are collectable, but this educational collection affords the finest opportunity the church has ever had to restore in some measure that which has been withheld from our preachers. There are many preachers who would have never thought of accepting free tuition for their sons if they had always received what the church promised to pay in salary. But, as the church has paid them so poorly that they could not educate their sons, it is as little as the church can do to pay their tuition.

These are some of the reasons for an educational collection. How has the matter resulted? I will take last year as a sample. Last session the amount of free tuition was $690. The amount received from the collections was $335. The amount collected did not pay the tuition by $355. The work was done, however, by the teachers; hence, as they were largely behind on salaries, they paid that $355. That means that the six teachers in our college contributed $20 more to the education of ministers and ministers' sons than the 28,000 Methodists in our church. In other words, the teachers in our college contributed for the education of preachers and preachers' sons last year $59.16 apiece, while the members of our church contributed one cent and one-fifth of a cent apiece! Now, I ask, Why should each of these teachers be made to pay five thousand times as much for this object as other members of the church? The pastors and people surely do not see this matter as it really is.

What is the outlook for the present session? Already the tuition for preachers and preachers' sons amounts to $800. If the collection does not increase this year, then each teacher will pay $75 toward the education of our preachers and preachers' sons. The injustice of this ought to be apparent to everybody.

Brethren, if you desire this work of educating your sons and young preachers to go on, then take this unjust burden off our backs by bringing up to Conference enough money to pay the full amount of these tuition fees. It is a shame for the church to allow six men to do more in this matter than all the other members put together.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

I have often thought it would be a good plan to read and expound the Discipline of our church in the public congregation. Hundreds and thousands of our people know little or nothing about it. I have often been surprised to find how little some officers in our church knew of their duties as laid down in the Discipline. This is specially true in regard to stewards. The paragraph in the Discipline setting forth their duties is short and very concise, and it could easily be committed to memory. Very few recording stewards ever think of making a report of the acts of his Board of Stewards to the Joint Board of Finance of the Annual Conference. This is generally left for the preacher to do, and it is no part of the duty of the preacher in charge. This report should be made out and signed by the recording steward.

As a general rule, the stewards and members of the Quarterly Conference generally manifest but little interest in the general collections for missions, church extension, Conference collections, education, the Bible cause, and for the Bishops' fund. In some places it is difficult, or impossible, to get the Quarterly Conference to give any attention whatever to these several important interests. Indeed, in many places the mention of these interests in a Quarterly Conference is regarded as an intrusion of irrelevant matters. It has so long been the custom to relegate all these matters to the pastor that stewards and other members of the Quarterly Conference have lost well nigh all sense of obligation in regard to them. The preachers are partly to blame for this, and presiding elders, in many places, are still more to blame for it. Preachers and presiding elders ought to press these interests on the official and leading members of the church, and strive to beget in them an interest in these great connectional enterprises. The Discipline makes it the duty of the presiding elder to bring the subjects of missions and church extension prominently before the Quarterly Conferences, and it is his duty to see to it that efficient plans are devised for raising moneys for these objects.

Now, how many preachers in charge ever saw this done?—and how many Quarterly Conferences ever devised a plan of any kind for raising missionary and church extension money? In many places the mention of this or these subjects in a Quarterly Conference would be a novelty, and the idea of devising a plan an innovation. I have found it difficult to have these matters considered at all by the Quarterly Conferences of my charge. As pastor, I bring these matters up if the presiding elder does not; but so far the only plans devised for raising money for these objects was, first, a resolution "to leave all this matter in the hands of our pastor;" and one year the recording steward was instructed to prorate the general collections among the churches. This, and nothing more.

This disposition to shirk financial obligations, and to shift to other shoulders the duty of raising public money, is manifest in our Church Conferences. This body has the reserved right to adopt its method and plan for raising all money the church is expected to pay—except the single item of the Bishops' fund. This includes the support of the preachers, Conference claimants, missions, church extension—everything. The Church Conferences that consider these items, and devise methods for raising moneys for any of these objects, are few and far between. We greatly need to beget and to develop in our membership a personal interest in all these matters. This would tend towards enlargement of the sense of personal obligation.

As for the Bishops' fund, the Annual Conference has the right to say what plan or method shall be adopted for raising it. I suppose each Annual Conference adopts some method. This (the North Mississippi) Conference adopted the plan of requiring the presiding elders to raise this fund—an easy thing for each of them to do. If the Bishop, or some impudent member of the Conference, were to ask each of the "beloveds," "Did you raise the Bishops' fund?" I am afraid there would be some confusion of face. It would be legitimate to ask them this question. They have no right to skirk this duty and roll the burden of this collection over on the shoulders of the pastor. It is law and discipline for them to raise it, or as much of it as they possibly can.

Now, this letter is not a plea to excuse preachers and pastors from leadership in all the work of church. Oh, no; they must be enterprising, zealous, wide-awake leaders. They must promote in every way possible all these interests and all the enterprises of the church. Nothing can excuse them from this. The wisest man and the best pastor is the man who can enlist the most people and have the most work done by the largest number of people. If the preacher does it all, then he is the factotum—specially the "tote 'em"—of the whole thing. On a strict construction of the law—going by the letter of it—there are very few collections the preacher is specially charged to take up. This is a fact, but comparatively few of our people, our official members, know it.

As I read and understand the financial plans and methods of our church, they are designed to cultivate in our membership an intelligent interest in and an ardent zeal for all the enterprises we have on hand. When and where this is not done, it tends toward making the pastor the burden-bearer, the carry-all, of the church. He becomes the slave rather than the leader of the church. Some men—both preachers and laymen—have wonderful gifts in matters of finance and in raising money for any purpose. Others just as pious, as zealous, and as anxious to succeed, fail in these matters. They are lacking in personal magnetism, in address, in that special something that gets money out of men. Money sense and the money-collecting gift are great blessings to their possessor and to the church. The preacher who is lacking in these things needs most the help of the church in money matters. It is in the nature of men to overestimate the money gift and to underestimate the man who has little or none of it. The man without is not to blame for not having it, but the lack of it greatly discounts him in the councils of men. This remark applies to laymen as well as to preachers. It is as true of the one as of the other.

Preachers with money sense and with the money-raising gift are in great demand in most of our churches. There is a temptation and danger in stressing this matter too far—danger to the preacher and to the church. "The love of money"—for itself, or for what it will do—"is the root of all evil." I wish I had more money sense and more of the money-raising gift. I wish some of my brethren had less. GILDEROY.

The above is a cut of the new church at Ellisville, Miss., which we had the honor of dedicating a few days since. It has a Sunday-school room and a pastor's study separated from the auditorium by folding-doors, so that the three apartments can be thrown into one. It is handsomely finished and furnished, and also well lighted with a Frink Reflector. It will be heated with a hot-air furnace. The Building Committee was composed of the following persons: S. J. Johnson, president; B. Dubose, secretary; B. Jordan, H. C. Weems, J. O. Winburne, J. Anderson, and B. F. Fridge. Work was begun in October, '95. This church has a live Sunday school under the superintendency of Bro. H. S. Gunn.

What Is the Cause?

Dr. Buckley, of the New York Christian Advocate, I think is one of the clearest-headed, best-equipped writers on this continent. He is not carried away by mere noise, nor unduly depressed by unfavorable appearances; not foolishly afraid to call attention to perils, for fear some absurd people will cry, "Pessimist." He says in a recent article:

It oppresses us to believe, as we must, that the sense of God in personal experience is diminishing; that the belief in his supernatural influence upon human hearts and in the radical, almost irresistible, power of grace in conversion and purification is felt less and less. The line between irresistible grace and the real power essential to conversion is but a hair's breadth in diameter. Were there a little more power exerted by the Spirit it would be irresistible, and men would be irresponsible. But to reduce it in the least degree below the infinitesimal point in which the power of choice in the human mind reposes, is to weaken it and prepare the way for mechanical, scientific, or philosophical views of the nature of conversion, which, once adopted, eliminate the supernatural element, take away his power from the gospel minister, and transform him into an ethical teacher—as powerless to regenerate human nature as the incantations of hygiene are to save a really dying man.

Even from the evangelical churches the sense of sin in large measure departs. Modern penitential grief is often hardly worthy of a higher description than pensiveness, and the joys of the new creation are as feeble as the grief over sinfulness is diluted. The penalty of sin inflicted by the righteous indignation of a personal God gives place to vague or limited notions of the natural consequences of sin. Without once being stirred or hearing anything to make them wretched on account of their sins, to-day it is possible for the worldly minded, and even the vicious, regularly to attend service in many churches that were founded on the doctrine of the Holy Ghost.

The condition of the Church of England immediately prior to the rise of Wesley and the state of many of the German Churches show how any form of error in doctrine or life may coexist with liturgical uniformity and artistic, musical, elocutionary, and scholastic excellence.

Every age has its peculiar battle. That of the next century is to be more subtle than any which has preceded it. As the nations are fighting more and more by diplomacy, and less and less on blood-stained fields, so the conflict between the kingdom of grace and that of darkness will be less violent, but more perplexing and dangerous.

Strides in this direction have been made within fifteen years so rapid that there are already hundreds, and will soon be thousands, of churches in America as absolutely devoid of the Spirit of God in the New Testament sense as they would have been if they had been originally intended as literary and social clubs. This will be compatible with an increase in numbers, and statistics will be rolled up and published, as they are now, which no more indicate moral forces than would the roster of an army that should include invalids and babes.

The churches are pursuing a course which shows how little confidence we have in the power of God. Our methods of securing accessions proceed increasingly upon the kindergarten principle, which, however useful for infants, promotes rather childishness than a child-like spirit in adults. We are willing to turn over the reformation of drunkards to quacks with secret remedies. We make few direct efforts to save hardened sinners, and send forth few laymen or ministers competent to grapple unbelievers and overcome them, not by argument in the plane of polemics, but by the irresistible force of personal testimony to the power of the Holy Ghost.

The conclusive proof, which can leave no one familiar with the history of early Christianity, of early Presbyterianism, early Quakerism, or early Methodism in doubt as to the force and danger of these tendencies, is the disuse of church discipline and the prevalence of theories that it is superfluous and beyond the just powers of the church, except in cases of public scandal. To this may be added the feverish anxiety of many clergymen to maintain the appearance of influence and popularity by hastening to discuss whatever may attract a passing crowd.

This is possibly a state of things found more apparently in the section of the East in which the Advocate circulates than in the South and West; but it is here, and if we do not wake up to our dangers, we will find it has reached the same ere long among us. An enquiry as to how it happens that with our elegant churches and talented ministry and wonderful Sunday-schools we are turning out so many practical atheists, is one which ought to be made with great care. Men are seeking for cholera microbes and typhoid bacilli and causes of consumption, and devising remedies new and, till now, unheard of, for old diseases; but more serious evils confront us. It is simple madness to deny that these evils exist, and to close one's eyes to them merely because the sight of them gives us pain. It is folly to point to the good found everywhere, and shut our eyes to the evil side by side with it. That the world, as a world, is better than it ever was, can not be denied; that there is more crime and infidelity and atheism in our own country than there ever was, is just as true. The sad fact that our dissipated young men, and our frivolous and even wicked young women, come from our best Christian families, and that not only are infidels found among those educated at our State colleges, but those coming from the schools of the Evangelical churches, is what disturbs us. To say that out of our Sunday-schools and from our Christian colleges and from our Christian families come our best and most devoted Christians, is to say what no one denies; and to say what calls for the greatest thankfulness—but we can not take comfort—is the thought that one-half are saved if one-half are lost. The great question is, Why the loss of so many? If Matthew and Edwin Arnold, and their gifted niece, Mrs. Ward; if Thomas Carlyle, if Froude, if Marion Evans, if even Robert Ingersoll—all coming from Christian homes—had been Christians, how much of unfaith might have been prevented! They have been the apostles of unbelief among cultivated men and women, and have exerted a deadly influence which spreads over all lands where their language is spoken. Why is it that so many of the children of good people are not only irreligious, but shamelessly immoral? Why is it that the state of things exists that this article recognizes? Is there a cause we can ascertain, or a remedy we can apply? I leave the question to be answered. GEO. G. SMITH.

OF THAT FAR COUNTRY.

BY GERTRUDE M. DODDS.

I love the solemn starry night;
The soft, pale dawn is sweet delight;
The glories of a sunset sky
Can move my soul to ecstasy.
But these, though passing fair they are,
Can be but shadows dim, I ween,
Of glories in that country far,
Which eye hath never seen.

How sweet the sound of distant bells!
The organ's chanting music swells,
I hear the mighty chorus rise,
It bears my soul toward paradise;
But in that moment's upward flight,
Learn this, O heart, divinely stirred:
These are but echoes, faint and far,
Of that which ear hath never heard.

Oh, Love, thou strange, sweet mystery!
Naught else is there beneath the sky
So fair. Thy light forbids the gloom,
Thy warmth makes barren fields to bloom,
Dear living Love! From day to day
Doth in my heart this knowledge grow.
Thou art the faint foreshadowing
Of love my soul shall some time know.

Presiding Elders.

We hope the question of redistricting the North Mississippi Conference will not be considered for one moment. We have up here a progressive and aggressive Methodism. We are expanding, and not drawing in, our borders. "Gilderoy's" idea of "wasting money and men, specially for overseers," would apply to our Bishops as well as to the presiding eldership. He says, "This is the age of small farms and intensive farming—not intensive overseeing." I wonder how there can be intensive farming without intensive overseeing. This is one of our greatest needs to-day. "Gilderoy" ought to know it takes some "intensive overseeing" to get much out of some of us, and "intensive" overseeing puts intensity into a worthy laborer, and great is the harvest.

There are many reasons why we should not reduce the number of presiding elders in our Conference.

1. It would crush the rising ambition of so much presiding-elder timber, and some that could not be used in any other way. We are heartily in favor of all who desire the place to have it for once. There is little danger of ruining it since the writer and "Gilderoy" have rattled about in it.

2. It would increase the responsibility of the place, and already it is too great for a faithful, conscientious man.

3. It would increase the mistakes and dissatisfaction in making appointments for want of time to look into the wants and necessities of preachers and charges.

4. It would bring the presiding eldership into utter disrepute. His visits would be so few and short he could not be felt or seen even as an "overseer."

There is no more important place in Southern Methodism than the presiding eldership. It demands the strongest, brightest, and best men in the church to fill it. Give us presiding elders, and not residing, nor dividing, nor sliding elders; and "Gilderoy" and his "good brother" will not stop to count the expense.

An intelligent and leading layman in another Conference said to us some time ago: "We have the best territory in our Conference, and for ten years our greatest hindrance has been in the presiding eldership. A live, aggressive, 'intensive' worker at the head would have put us in the very front of all the churches. The pastors—many of them—dare not announce his coming to get a congregation. He is not progressive enough to rewrite his notes. Even this is soiled, dingy, and worn. It is not fewer presiding elders we want, but more and better ones."

Let it be distinctly understood we have no aspiration for the place. We have had all the glory we want in that. As to the presiding elders, we have nothing "ngin em"—not one of them. They have our sympathy and prayers.

"Nearer, My God, to Thee."

This beautiful and grand hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee," that has been so great a favorite, had such a world wide fame, and been sung so long by peoples of all denominations, and is still so often heard, has several times had its theology questioned. Some said that Christ was not in it, and that a Mohammedan, or anyone that believed in any kind of a God, could sing it as well as a Christian. Others said that no one that had not Christ in their own hearts could sing it truthfully. Several attempts have been made to supply the want of this, but nothing has ever been incorporated in the hymn that has seemed to satisfy those that desired the change. The change of style, metre and versification seemed faulty. Mrs. Sarah Flower Adams, the authoress, who has been spoken of as a Unitarian, may have purposely left out any allusion to Christ, and she may have thought that the mention of the "cross" in the first verse would imply the presence of the second person of the Godhead enough to make the hymn a favorite with all; yet, still the crosses in life that all experience may have been her uppermost thought.

Several years ago this writer, feeling that the type and character of Jacob (which Mrs. Adams seemed to have in view when she wrote the hymn) was incomplete, supplied a verse, and was often requested to have it published. Mrs. Adams began with the "wanderer" whose "rest" was "of stone," and whose dreams took him "nearer to God," where he saw the "angels beckon" him to show him the "steps unto heaven" (ladder). "Then, with his waking thoughts," he raised the altar and called it "Bethel," and felt that "even in his woes" he was "nearer to God." There she left Jacob, still encompassed by his woes, which seemed to have a very close affinity for him for a great many years, for when at last he turned his steps homeward and met the "angels of God" at Mahanaim, he was still "greatly afraid and distressed" (Gen. xxxii, 7); but later on he came to Penuel, "and there wrestled with him a man until the breaking of the day," and when he demanded the name of the man, he was "blessed," and burst forth with an exclamation of praise, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." Here a verse might have still more immortalized the hymn, making the type complete:

And when at Penuel,
Wrestling, I see
The God-man, face to face,
Who died for me;
E'en, then, tho' halting be,
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Then, "cleaving the sky" with "joyful wing" was all there was to do.

Correspondence.

A Kindly Word to the Members of the Methodist Church in Seashore District, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Please give space for a little pastoral talk to the brethren of the Seashore district.

The time for holding the fourth Quarterly Conference on your respective charges has been announced in our ADVOCATE. The finances of the district, notwithstanding the stringency of the times, are somewhat in advance of what they were at the close of the third round last year; but it is several weeks later in the year now than it was then. In some places our people have allowed postponement to usurp the place of promptness, and the result has been that discouraging balances have accumulated and confront us on the fourth round. Much diligence will be required and heroic effort made to do now what otherwise would have been comparatively an easy task. There is one fact about an assessment that many of our people who love the church do not adequately appreciate. It is this: The assessment is the smallest amount required to meet the demands. This is true with reference to all the collections. For instance: the assessment for superannuates, widows and orphans is $6,000, when $7,000 ought to be raised and distributed every year in the Mississippi Conference. The pastors in the district, with but few exceptions, are meagerly provided for by assessment. Thus it makes a settlement in full with your pastor doubly necessary. Deficits on small assessments always means embarrassment, and frequently great privation in a Methodist preacher's home. Fifty or a hundred dollars is a small amount for three or four hundred people to owe; but is a large amount for a preacher to lose. It is often the case that the receipts of a preacher have been so small during the year that he has been compelled to invest every cent to meet the current expenses of the family; and when the time comes for him to start to the Annual Conference, he must either take the last dollar from his family, or borrow money with which to pay his traveling expenses to the seat of the Conference.

What an admirable example it would be for each charge in the Seashore district to raise a Conference purse, in which the latter part of the eighth question in Quarterly Conference would cut no figure! There are numbers of men in the church in all the pastoral charges with which I am acquainted, who might leave a ten-dollar bill in the palm of their pastor after the assessment has been paid in full, and find it an actual means of grace. Try it, brother, and report after a trial of five consecutive years!

The assessment for all purposes on our district is about $12,000. We have a membership of more than 4,000 people. Two dollars and fifty cents a year, or twenty-five cents a month, per capita, would settle the entire amount of indebtedness for all purposes, and would prove a means of spiritual development which, without it, can never be found in shout, prayer, or song.

May the Holy Spirit accompany these suggestions, and fasten them upon the consciences of all our people!

Let the stewards use all diligence! Let the people give as the Lord hath prospered them, and there will be no deficits.

The trustees will please make a disciplinary report to the fourth Quarterly Conference. The local preachers will please examine ¶ 169, and make their report accordingly. Last, but not least, swell the subscription list to the NEW ORLEANS and Nashville Christian Advocates. Common loyalty to our church demands that we sustain our own church and Conference organs.

Will the pastors furnish me with the number and names of the religious papers which go into the homes of our people with regularity? It is highly important that the facts along this line be made known.

God be with you, brethren, and crown your efforts with abundant success! Fraternally yours,

C. A. POWELL, P. E.

From Rev. J. A. Whitehurst.

Nearly two years have passed since my transfer from North Mississippi Conference to Northwest Texas, and, as the annual meeting comes nearer, I can only think of the dear faces of our brethren in North Mississippi. It makes a boy want to go back home a little bit. The good Lord has graciously blessed us since we came to the LONE STAR State. This year we are in that part that is known as "Out West," and yet there is a stretch of nearly 400 miles towards sunset before we come to the western line. This is a great year for this portion of our great State. While much of it has suffered immensely from drouth, this part has been better favored. You would enjoy going out in these pastures of from 10,000 to 250,000 acres, and seeing the "steers rolling fat." Some good Methodist preacher will read this that could press a stomach tooth deep into a fat brisket roast, or a tenderloin steak.

I have a most elegant church, with about 200 members, and the grandest company of women I have ever known; men not far behind. The church is a nice little brick one, with a seating capacity of 350. Parsonage right by it, with almost every convenience, well furnished and tastily carpeted.

When Bishop Hargrove was consulted about transferring me, he advised me to stay in Mississippi. I wrote him that I would undergo a hardship if he would let me transfer. So he did, and I underwent what many preachers would, perhaps, consider a hardship; but at the end of one year was transferred again about three hundred miles, but in the same Conference. We have been this year in better health than we have been in for eight years. I am trying to behave myself, so they will let me stay at least another year.

Recently we had a glorious revival. Rev. H. P. Crowe, of North Mississippi Conference, did the preaching, and did it well. His exposure of sin was powerful. His lifting up of Jesus was eloquent and persuasive. He proved himself to be far above an ordinary preacher in declaring the counsels of God.

In this Conference we are a little crowded with preachers, and invariably put transfers on trial for a year or two; but will say to presiding elders of North Mississippi, if they have not a good place for H. P. Crowe, please let us have him. We never expect to be so crowded that we can't find room for a man like him. I hope Bro. Crowe will not be offended at me for saying what I have. He need not come over here without he wants to.

Our meeting resulted in about forty accessions to various churches and Christians so graciously strengthened.

As a weak token of appreciation for Bro. Crowe's service, two of my brethren stepped out in town and brought him $200, and before he could get off a few people gathered around him and finally persuaded him to accept $25 more. You see I did not have to get up and start subscription, and beg for an hour to get a little money to pay his "actual expenses."

Brethren, you need not all want to transfer; very few places like this.

AN ARMY WITH BANNERS.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

Dedicated to the Sunday-school Convention of St. Tammany parish, La.

Oh, to-day I see a vision so fair,
That my soul is wrapt in delight.
'Tis an army of children I see on the road
That leads to the "City of Light."

And hand in hand they're marching on,
With their eyes on the beautiful gate.
They turn not aside to the right or the left,
For the way is "narrow and straight."

And terrible they, with their banners unfurled,
To those in the broadway of sin;
For the many that walk in that highway there
Will never the victory win.

Oh, "fair as the moon and clear as the sun,"
As the morning they're coming forth,
This "army with banners" from the East and the West,
From the sunny Southland and the North.

Oh, yes; they come from the isles of the sea,
From China and from Japan.
From fair Brazil and Mexico
They are marching in the van.

Yes, they're marching on, and Jesus is
The Captain in command.
Their songs have "no uncertain sound;"
They're bound for "the better land."

Their ensign waves, "The World for Christ,"
Their toosin is the same;
And all their foes will conquered be,
For they're fighting "in His name."

Oh ye, who see this vision, know
Your labor's not in vain.
When Jesus "makes his jewels up"
You'll see the glorious gain.

Then work and sing, and work and pray,
And fight on till ye die;
Like stars you'll shine "for aye and aye,"
In those "mansions" up on high.

EDITORS.

Mrs. H. W. Foote, of North Miss. Conference
Mrs. R. R. Parker, of Mississippi Conference
Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Louisiana Conference

In unfurling my editorial banner, I emblazon on its folds the motto, "All for Jesus." No grander privilege was ever before assigned me, and I thank my sisters for the work entrusted to my hands. With such co-laborers as our former pastor, Dr. W. C. Black; Mrs. Foote, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Mrs. Kennedy, of the Louisiana Conference, and monthly visits from Our Homes (the organ of our work), I gladly take my seat on the editorial staff of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

The achievements of this branch of our church work and the present needs of it have recently been very ably presented by my confreres, so I will occupy my allotted space in an earnest talk with the co-workers of our Conference.

My sisters, this is your column, and I need the help of every one of you to make it the success it should be, and remember that "I am among you as one who serves!" Never before in the history of our organization has our work been so magnified. For the benefit of those who may not have seen it, I quote the following from the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference, held in Yazoo City, '95:

In connection with this work the Board passed the following resolution:

Whereas, Bishop W. W. Duncan, now presiding at the Mississippi Conference, has given hearty support and helpful encouragement to the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society; therefore,

Resolved, That we urge upon the Conference to heed his timely suggestion and strenuously endeavor to convert all the Local Aid Societies in our bounds into Parsonage and Home Mission Auxiliaries.

By request of the president of the General Parsonage and Home Mission Society we incorporate the following resolutions in our report.

N. B. HARMON, Sec.

Resolved, That the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society in each charge be urged to improve the condition of its parsonage, striving to make it more convenient, comfortable and tasteful, and improve the grounds by planting fruit and shade trees; also that our pastors be urged to place the parsonage in as perfect a condition as possible upon leaving.

Resolved, That a list of the Conference officers of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, with their addresses, be published annually in the Minutes of this Conference, and that a copy of the Minutes of this Conference be furnished annually to the central office of that society at Nashville, Tenn.

Resolved, That we urge each preacher in this Conference to change his Aid Society into a Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, and that all the money expended in its bounds by each local Parsonage Society and by the Conference Society and Central Committee be reported to this Annual Conference and incorporated in its Minutes.

We feel deeply grateful for this encouragement and help from our brethren, and we hope to show them our appreciation by working to make this year the most fruitful of our history. Don't wait for your pastors to introduce and keep alive this important work. They have enough to do. "Arise, the Master calleth for thee," and the work is yours!

Four applications have just been placed before the Executive Board for aid to needy parsonages, but only one can be considered. There are but thirteen paying Auxiliary Societies; and if the roll were called, it would be found that Meridian, Vicksburg and Jackson, and other strong charges, all fail to respond. The work has been carried on altogether by churches less able to undertake it.

Education, wealth nor fame can supply our need. We want divine equipment. "With the promises of God as our capital, the throne of grace as our business place," we will be given strength and ability to "lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes." We need that same kind of interview with our Savior that endowed his disciples with power to work—"He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost;" and when that baptism comes to us as a Conference, every woman who "has named the name of Christ" will "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." The impression has gone abroad that to engage in this work retards "woman's work for woman" in foreign fields; but an investigating glance into the lives of Christian women around you will prove that those who respond most readily to the needs at home are the ones who have the tenderest care for our sisters "over the sea." In every division of church work you will find the three classes that Miss Maria Barnes so graphically describes, "Workers, jerkers, and shirkers." Oh, sisters, to which class do we belong?

If the women of our church realized what a tower of strength the Parsonage and Home Mission Society would be in every charge, every woman would hasten to enroll under its banner. "There is strength in unity," and by the concentrated effort of all the Parsonage Societies on the most needy point, every charge would soon be provided with comfortable homes for our ministers.

Every Parsonage and Aid Society within our limit should become connectional, and thus share the blessed privilege of sending the light of the gospel to the border-lands and into the interior, where "a famine of hearing the Word of God" is raging.

MRS. R. R. PARKER.

Selections.

Christian Courtesy.

The bluff, abrupt and outspoken may be honest, but they are not agreeable. They may be in the right at times, but they have an uncomfortable way of showing it. They may pride themselves on speaking the plain truth, but they forget, as an apostle recommends, to speak it "in love." They may take satisfaction in hitting the nail on the head, but they do it in the hardest and bluntest way. They may think that they are doing God a service in rebuking error and wrong, but they fail to render it with the kindliness and consideration which their Lord enjoins. They may be patterns of fidelity, but they are far from being examples of prudence and gentleness.

In the church, as well as in society, are found many who have their good traits, but who spoil their goodness by quickness of temper, unfeeling remarks, biting sarcasm, stinging reprimands, hasty retorts, and inconsiderate words. They do not take time to think about the effect of what they say, and rather relish giving people "a piece of their mind." They have little or no regard to place, person or circumstance. They do not weigh their words. Some of them may not mean to be unkind and ungenerous, or to hurt others' feelings; but they are so accustomed to say just what comes first to the surface, and to freely air their opinions, that they, without intending to be rude or impolite, lay themselves open to the charge of discourtesy, and make it hard for even their friends to apologize for them. Oftentimes they alienate and offend, and when the fact is brought to their notice they seem surprised at the result. In some cases they express regret for the offense given, and make due amends; but oftener they console themselves with the reflection that they are not Janus-faced, and only declare what they think.

But of all persons none should be so prompt in extending and exhibiting proper courtesy as brethren in Christ Jesus. It may be necessary sometimes to rebuke what we see to be right, but we must be sure that we are not mistaken in our judgment, and must exercise due charity. Our words must be "seasoned with grace" and dictated by wisdom and kindness. We must show consideration for others' feelings, and not give occasion for misunderstandings. We must be polite in the Christian sense of the term. One may not know all the rules that obtain in refined society; he may not be able to speak and act as a Lord Chesterfield; but he can and should understand and observe those interchanges of social and brotherly courtesies which the Bible enjoins. It calls for a charitable, gentle, forbearing, and loving temper and speech. It prescribes maxims and principles which, if carried out, would sweeten intercourse, endear brethren to one another, and brighten and gladden all life's relations. We are told to walk "with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." We are directed not to "be desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another." We are urged not to "bite and devour one another," but to "be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another."

These are but samples of the rules laid down by infallible authority for the government of our spirit, conversation and conduct. Christianity is pre-eminently a kind, gentle, sweetening, loving, and mollifying factor. When it has full sway it renews the nature, brings Christ into the heart and life, inspires the most generous sentiments, holds in check the fiery steed of passion, and palsies the imprudent, vengeful, and angry utterance.

The discourtesies so often witnessed among church members are greatly to be regretted. They not only serve to keep those apart who should be the warmest and most confiding of friends, but they are an occasion of reproach among those who are without. They cause enemies to say that if this is the way in which Christians speak and act toward one another, and if the church can not develop a better, a happier, a more peaceful, and a more charitable intercourse, they want none of Christ is thus not only wounded in the house of his friends, but misrepresented before his foes. This is a practical matter, and it becomes Christians to lay it much to heart. It will not only be to their credit, but to their comfort, to be courteous to one another and to all with whom they come in contact in all life's relations and conditions.—Presbyterian.

What is prayer for? Not to inform God, nor to move him, unwillingly, to have mercy, as if, like some proud prince, he required a certain amount of recognition of his greatness as the price of his favor, but to fit our own hearts by conscious need, and true desire and dependence, to receive the gift which he is ever willing to give, but we are not always fit to receive.—Alexander Maclaren.

The man who religiously closes his eyes and asks God's blessing upon the morning meal, and then grows cross and grumbles at his wife all the time he eats because the viands are not quite to his epicurean taste, should either take something to regulate his liver, or indulge in a short season of private prayer to regulate his heart.—Methodist Recorder.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. L Norton, Benton, Miss., Sept 25: "Just closed a wonderful meeting at Midway, assisted by Rev. J. J. Smylie, evangelist. The meeting continued eight days. Almost every service was attended by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. The meeting resulted in twenty-two accessions to the church and many conversions. Family altars were erected, and men who have never prayed in public have promised to do so. Smylie is a fair preacher, a fine worker and a Holy Ghost man."

Rev. J. M. Huggin, Big Creek, Miss., Sept. 26: "We closed an interesting meeting at Pittsboro on third Sunday in this month. Received four into the church. Bro. Rayner, from the Elzey circuit, gave us two good sermons. Our promising young local preacher, Arthur Martin, preached once. Bro. Clifford, of Water Valley, gave us seven excellent sermons and one lecture on the Epworth League work. Our people were delighted, instructed and edified by the sermons and lecture. We hope to make a good report at Conference."

Rev. J. H. Smith, Lyon, Miss., Sept 26: "While I am enjoying a little rest and the happy association of my family, by your permission I will communicate with the brethren. For about three months I have been engaged in revival work; have had some gracious times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The people still hear gladly the old, old story. Don't know just when I will get through; the brethren are kind and keep me busy. A general ramble through North Mississippi reveals the sad fact that our country and churches are being depopulated. Plenty of room now in most of our churches, though the people come for miles around. Many have crossed the Father of Waters to try their fortune in the far West. Many, too, have gone with the boatman pale across the last river. We seem to be sitting together in heavenly places, in the holy shrines, made sacred by the songs and prayers of loved ones gone before. Praise the Lord for the prospect of a home above, where congregations never break up and Sabbaths have no end."

REVIVAL AT HARRISTON.

On the night of Aug. 29 the pastor, Rev. J W. Crisler, began a protracted meeting in our church at Harriston, which closed on the night of Sept. 23, with the Lord's Supper. During the first week the Rev. C. W. Crisler was present and preached with power and acceptability. Those brethren, L. S. Jones, — Hull, B. F. Lewis, W. T. Griffin, H. M Ellis and J. G. Galloway, were present part of the time, and rendered most efficient service. But the pastor stood in the front of the battle, and not only directed the Lord's host, but did much of the preaching during the meeting. Bro. Baker, of Natchez; Sister Maddox, of Harriston, and Bro. W. J. McLean, of Gloster, had charge of the choir. And such a revival of pure religion, and undefiled, has not been experienced in all that country for years. There were more than twenty bright conversions and thirty-five accessions to the church. They now have a large prayer meeting, and a family altar in nearly every Methodist home, while the hardest cases in the community are saved. This is Bro. Crisler's fourth year on this charge, and yet as pastor, and with the aid of pastors, he has been able to reach and to save the lost. When our pastors preach the gospel as the power of God unto salvation, the Holy Spirit will honor and bless their labors.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.

I am on a vacation, greatly against my will. I am at the Seashore Camp Ground. For twenty-five years it has been occupied by the Methodists for religious services. The great leading spirit in founding it was that noted Christian lawyer, W. H. Foster, of New Orleans. It is beautifully located, one side of the campus opening on the sea, and the others half hiding itself in a grove of live oaks, water oaks, hickory and gum. The tents are wooden structures, some of which are tasteful and comfortable, and present quite a contrast to those of my boyhood days.

Here great good has been done in reclaiming backsliders, in converting sinners, and in building up the people of the living God. Here some of the greatest men of our church have expounded the gospel of the Son of God with profundity, clearness, eloquence, and point. These may be numbered by the scores. Here battles have been fought greater than goary fields have ever witnessed, under the guiding eye of earthly leaders, and victories won in comparison with which those of Alexander, Julius Cæsar, or Napoleon Bonaparte achieved pale into insignificance. One soul born into the kingdom of Christ outweighs, in the sight of God, all earthly victories recorded on the pages of history.

Camp meetings suggest the grand work and success of the church. What could the ministry do without the co-operation of the membership? Simply nothing. Intelligent men and women, truly converted and consecrated to God, sing and pray. They talk to penitents, and rejoice with those who have found peace.

This is a place where many spend the Summer. It is a place of rest for the weary, and to the invalid a spot which may be utilized for the recovery of health. Anyone may be as retired as he may desire, unless he wishes to be a hermit, shut out from the walks of men. Outside of himself, there is much to attract. The trees, with their branches stretching out into the air as if searching for the pabulum of life, form dense shades, under which he may quietly repose, and become reinvigorated with the balm of a blessed life. Before him the restless ocean is spread out to teach him the sublimity of the divine mind and the breadth of His mighty work. Around him are a few men, numbers of fair women, both young and old, to render the social pleasures of life quite attractive, while the merry children never let the camp sink into silence, except when all are wrapt in midnight slumbers. Bathing, fishing, sailing, give the dwellers sufficient sport for healthful exercise and recreation. There is a Sunday-school organized on the ground, a prayer meeting is held on Thursday evening, and when a minister happens to be on the ground, he preaches for the people on Sunday evening. A minister seeking rest and health is allowed to occupy Wesley Hall, a commodious structure erected for the use of the ministry at camp meeting. I am occupying a room in it by permission, where I am comfortable and happy.

Woman's Work

Is never alone, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to sustain the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. The only remedy for tired, weak, nervous women is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer like Hood's Sarsaparilla. "I am monarch of all I survey;
My right there is none to dispute."

Many of the original tenters have been removed by death. Brs. Foster, Winans, Williams, Otts and Notley, and, it may be, others, have ceased to occupy their tents, and are now enjoying a grander camp meeting beyond these mundane shores. Others are nearing the brink of the river, and the feet of some are just in the margin of it.

VOSSBURG, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By special invitation, the undersigned came to hold special services with the pastor (Rev. R. B. Downer) of the above-named charge, Aug. 19. We began at Central Church, near Barnett. The meeting continued with two daily services to Aug. 30. Some twenty-five, or more, were converted or sanctified. A more delightful, clever people I have never met.

My daughter, Mabel Clare, and myself were delightfully entertained at the house of Dr. T. J. Krause, Jr. He is a sanctified man, and with his aged father, Dr. T. J. Krause, Sr., and other members of the family are standing nobly by the church.

Aug. 31 found us at Vossburg, where we remained to the following Monday (Sept. 7) Here we were delightfully entertained at the home of Bro. Matt. Turner, a prosperous merchant. Bro. Turner is an earnest Christian, and a firm believer in the Methodistic doctrine of entire sanctification. He was greatly blessed. While at Central and Vossburg we had the benefit of the celebrated Stafford Spring water. I believe I derived real benefit from it. Had I not been compelled to return to New Orleans, I should have availed myself of the kind invitation of Capt Stafford to spend a few days at his delightful home at the spring. He is superintendent of our Sunday-school, and, with his family, took a deep interest in the meeting. A number of souls were saved, and the spiritual benefit to the church seemed to be great, and, I trust, will prove abiding.

September 12 I took my leave of loved ones in the city, and came by 2 P. M. to Vossburg. Here I found conveyance ready to take me out ten miles into the Eucutta community, where, on the thirteenth, I began a meeting, which continued ten days, with most gracious results. These results do not appear in large numbers added to the list of members, for the simple reason that nearly everybody of mature years has joined some church. A very small per cent. of these, however, profess conversion. The tenth night we had a full house, and the Lord saved quite a number. No special effort was made to number, but we are safe in estimating the number saved at not less than from 25 to 30

I am now en route to Frost Bridge Camp Meeting, where I was one year ago. Rev. W. W. Moore is in charge as pastor, and we come by invitation of himself and people. October 4 am to join Rev. J. N. Ware at State Line in a week's meeting.

I write from the parsonage at Waynesboro, where I find the Rev. H E. Partridge, pastor, and family in health, and doing a successful work.

Of all the pastors I have been with, none seem more fully alive to every interest of the church than does Bro. Downer. Though afflicted in body, he is strong in spirit, and is beloved by his people.

The doctrine of entire sanctification, offered to believers by faith, was constantly kept before the people along with the doctrines of repentance, faith, and regeneration.

Though the number sanctified in our meetings on Vossburg circuit is small compared to what I have seen in other charges, I have nowhere seen a cleaner type, or a more general and deep conviction of the truth of the doctrine, with many still seeking.

Rev. H. C. Brown, of the Heidelberg charge, was with us, and had charge of special preliminary services. He won all hearts, and added much to the interest of the Eucutta meeting. He believes in fasting and prayer for definite results. I wish I could always have him with me. Through his definite special work I am sure quite a number were saved. Here is an important lesson: more fasting and prayer, and special efforts for definite results.

C. H. Ellis.

Sickness is a burglar who is continually trying to break into human life. His most usual tool is constipation. This one, seemingly unimportant thing is the primary cause of nine-tenths of all human ailments. When the bowels fail to act, impure, poisonous matter is retained in the system, is absorbed by the blood, and carried to every part of the body. All the digestive organs are affected, and particularly the largest and most important of them—the liver. Constipation causes biliousness and bilious headaches; retards digestion in the stomach causing fermentation—sour stomach, flatulency, and feverishness, a feeling of fullness, heart-burn, and other disagreeable symptoms. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. They afford immediate relief, but it is not merely a temporary relief. You do not become a slave to the use of the "Pellets." They gradually restore the healthy, natural action of the digestive organs and you may stop using them until some indiscretion in eating again makes them necessary. Doctors are supposed to know more about health and sickness than anybody else, and when the doctor comes, the first thing he does is to find out if the bowels are in good order.

"A Word to the Wise is Sufficient."

The more one knows about health and disease, the easier it is for him to be healthy. Knowledge of some of the simpler laws of health is of the utmost importance to everyone, and everyone may have this knowledge by possessing Dr. Pierce's "Common Sense Medical Adviser." This work is a complete medical library in itself. Absolutely free to any one who will send 21 one-cent stamps, to pay cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. The free edition is in paper covers. If French cloth covers are desired, send 10 cents extra, (31 cents in all).

S. S. Keener, Sec.

Secret sin will after a while lead to public sin. "Be sure your sin will find you out."

An exchange says: "An ounce of pulpit preparation is worth a ton of pulpit apologies!"

Every Christian should strive to be like unto God, in that he hates sin while he loves the sinner.

It is not always easy to be steadfast in principle and yet admirable in temper and conservative in speech.

When is man most like unto God? When he freely and fully forgives those who have trespassed against him.

Men forgive, but do not forget. When God forgives, he blots out our sins from the book of his remembrance.

The duty which you need to perform just now is the one that lies nearest at hand. Those farther off may be reached after a time.

Not simply to be able to pass through the pearly gates ought to be the Christian's aim, but to do the will of God on earth as angels do it heaven.

"The dead line" in the ministry, or any other calling, is reached when a man ceases to grow. In many instances age is a small factor in the problem, while sloth is a mighty one.

He who is religious only in the church and the closet is not religious at all. The religion which can not stand the test of the workshop will not stand the test of the judgment. Selah.

One of the silliest things imaginable is waiting for an opportunity. Instead of lounging around with Micawber, waiting for "something to turn up," roll up your sleeves and turn something up.

A precious jewel in Heaven's sight is the peacemaker. Are you one? Or do you belong to the numerous class who are never so well pleased as when they are fanning the flames of malice in some human breast?

There are times when the overworked man needs rest in the full sense of the word—absolute inaction. Ordinarily, however, all the benefits of rest can be attained through a change of work. Try it and be convinced.

It is lamentable that so few men are truly pious, but would it not be more so if only a small percentage of our true Christians were women? If there must be a disproportion, let us have the women on our side. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world."

What a Publisher Thinks.

A certain publisher with whom we have a slight acquaintance has opinions concerning publishing matters. One of these opinions is that when a preacher gets his church paper at a price considerably below the cost of publication he ought to be willing to pay for it promptly in advance, instead of making the publisher wait one, two, three or more years for his money. One dollar is not much, but a thousand times one dollar is a respectable sum. He thinks also that when a preacher who is largely in arrears with his own subscription collects money from other subscribers he ought at least to let his commissions go towards the liquidation of his own indebtedness. To put in his own pocket twenty-five cents out of every renewal handed him when his own paper has not been paid for in years, the aforesaid publisher thinks is decidedly shabby. He thinks also that a preacher who does not pay for his church paper for years at a time, and yet lives luxuriously, sometimes spending as much money for cigars in a week as his church paper costs in a year, ought to read the golden rule occasionally. He also has opinions about preachers who collect money for their church paper from subscribers and appropriate it to their own use, allowing years to pass without paying it over.

That Mammoth Petition.

Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, has graciously signified her willingness to receive the unique petition which has been signed in forty-four languages by her women subjects in all parts of the world, praying for increased protection against the evils of the liquor traffic and the opium trade. The petition contains over 7,000,000 signatures and endorsements, and has been gathered during the last few years by the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. As it is impossible to present the immense roll which contains the names of British subjects to the Queen, the pages have been photographed and magnificently bound in two immense volumes by Messrs. Zazendorf, Shaftesbury avenue, where it is now on view. The title pages are beautifully illustrated, and as a document of historic interest and a work of artistic merit, this polyglot petition is well worth a visit. The Queen will never at one time have received any document signed by so many of her subjects the world over. The names of Miss Frances Willard, president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Lady Henry Somerset, vice-president, head the list.

Small Beginnings.

"Tall oaks from little acorns grow," and the loftiest characters that adorn the annals of fallen humanity have sprung from the small beginning of fidelity to duty in some apparently insignificant event. To human eyes it doubtless seemed a matter of no consequence whether Daniel drank wine at Nebuchadnezzar's table or not. But the fact that Daniel was true to conscience on that occasion was the turning-point in his career. Had he yielded to the voice of the tempter then, this would have prepared the way for future yieldings, and so he would never have become the grand hero that he was. The nineteenth century would never have heard of Daniel had he stopped his ear when conscience whispered to him in Nebuchadnezzar's banquet hall.

"Which Are You?"

On our first page will be found a poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox with the heading, "Which are you?" The thought presented that all mankind are divided into two classes—those who lift and those who lean—and that the leaners outnumber the lifters in the ratio of twenty to one, is worthy of serious thought. It is our deliberate judgment that the poet has not overestimated the magnitude of the army of the leaners. Every pastor, as a rule, finds a mighty disproportion between the number of members who are willing to serve and the number who are willing to be served. Brother, are you one of the leaners? If so, then be ashamed of yourself, and after a prayer to God for forgiveness, march over into the ranks of the lifters.

Man can not be a sun, an original source of light; but he can be and ought to be a moon, reflecting the warm, vivifying rays of the Sun of Righteousness.

Religion at Home.

Most of us have clothes for home and for the street. And different manners, too. Affable in public, morose at home. Many render home miserable by bringing the disappointments and worry of the business into it. They should have been locked in when the store has been closed. With this it shall, however, not be said that wife should not be initiated in the affairs of business. She should be familiarized with our assets and debits. It might lead her to frugality, and save husband from bankruptcy and disgrace. Or, if husband should suddenly die, she can carry on the business herself.

Religion, we hold, should not be confined to any one place—for instance, the church. It must animate and actuate in all conditions of life. In business and in politics, at home and abroad. If only religious on Sunday and at church, we may possibly die mid-week, and at home. Said once a faithful wife: "When husband is at church, I'm almost persuaded that he is a true Christian; but his home life sadly declares that he is still in the gall of bitterness."

Usually home is dear under all circumstances.

"Mid pleasures and palaces, though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there is no place like home."

Strange that some people prefer to board at hotels and private houses in preference to having a home of their own. Maybe they look upon housekeeping as debasing drudgery. But stranger still is the dolorous fact that some men can be satisfied with club life. If they would take unto themselves a helpmeet, and start a home of their own, they would thereby ensure health and reduce temptations to a minimum. Without a home man is a tramp.

Dear in itself, religion adds new charms to our home. It ennobles castle and hut. Makes it a miniature paradise. Perhaps no room for flower garden. But the Christian graces are there whose fragrance and beauty are exquisite. Perhaps not located on a popular boulevard; but Christ is domiciled there, and our guardian angels come and go. Perhaps no costly furniture and ornaments; but permanent companions are peace, happiness, contentment, love, good-will. Religion removes all thorns and briars, introduces celestial atmosphere, makes life a poem; it makes home the dearest spot on earth.

Of course, such a home has a family altar. Parents, children, visitors and servants assemble daily for purposes of holy song, reading of Scripture, and prayer. We sometimes sing:

"We are trav'ling home to God
In the way our fathers trod."

Our fathers insisted on family prayer. We will do no less.

The light of the world having illuminated our hearts, wife and children are the first to find it out. We have been with Christ. Hence we are affectionate. Yes, intimacy breeds contempt. But let not wife suffer on that account. Make her life pleasant. Household affairs monotonous. Cause diversion. Have a smile, encouragement, cheer, praise, a flower, a present for her. Inclined to melancholy, we must try to fill her soul with sunshine. Of course, we also exercise patience. Meals may not be punctually served; may not be what you expected. If a dish is not savory, eat nothing thereof, and praise the other. The buttons may not have been sewed on, as requested. Do not scold. Give a humorous reminder. She, too, has made many requests of you which met no response.

A Christian husband and father loves home, and, when business is over, stays home. He romps with the children. Assists them in their lessons. He courts their respect. They make him their confidant. Reads to his wife; enjoys her society.

The services at church are only a means to an end. One of those ends is beautification of home life.

Jean Paul.

Religion is not a thing for the sanctuary and the closet alone. It should be with us also in the haunts of pleasure and amid the cares and the toils of business life. Indeed, the activities of every-day life furnish the very best test of our religious principles. It is easy enough to be pious in the church or the soul's trysting-place; but to remain steadfast when temptations come thick and fast in an atmosphere that is laden with soul-poison is quite another matter.

The thing which you neglect on the supposition that it is too trivial for a man of your abilities is very likely too great for you. Its proper performance demands traits of character which you do not possess. Education is the full and harmonious development of the high and holy powers with which God has endowed us. That God wishes us to cultivate our talents is clearly taught in the Word. Education, therefore, should not cease when school days are over. It should be continued until arrested by death or the decadence of old age.

In the Living Present.

Louise Michel, the notorious female anarchist of Paris, has come to our United States for purposes of propagandism. She is old and ugly, but still wields vast influence. Calls herself the "red nun." At the cruel uprising of the French Commune in 1871 she was among the foremost in fighting the officers of law and order. Spent much of her time in exile and in prison.

Lady Henry Somerset, in the London Daily News, appeals to philantropists for assistance in transporting exiled Armenians to our United States. Miss Frances Willard endorses the appeal. But it seems to us that we have already too many lazy non-producers. Why not send them to England? Bye the bye, Miss Mary B. Willard, the niece of Miss Frances, will be kindergarten teacher at the White House. Miss Mary is a graduate of the Pestalozzi Kindergarten Institute of Berlin.

Not all European princes are profligates and spendthrifts. It is well known that Archduke Charles of Bavaria is a celebrated and industrious oculist. His services are gratis. Prince Oscar of Sweden and Norway conducts in Stockholm a prosperous Sunday-school. Both avocations worthy of a prince.

Mrs. Caroline Merrick, wife of Judge E. E. Merrick, New Orleans, is president of the Portia Club. The avowed purpose of this club is female "emancipation." The president—whom we greatly honor, though we disagree with her on this subject in toto—remarked at a recent meeting of said club that female suffrage was rapidly gaining in our city.

Percy P. J. Tynan, the Irish Invincible, is supposed to be the notorious No. 1 who participated in the cruel murder in Phenix Park, London. Recently arrested in France for plotting to destroy the lives of Queen Victoria and her guest, the Czar of Russia, the French government has refused extradition because of lack of prima facie evidence. He has departed for our country. He was educated for the Romish priesthood.

Certainly, we should be prepared to meet the arguments of infidels. As able theologians parry all onsets. But, alas!

"He who's convinced against his will,
Is of the same opinion still."

All of us, however, can make use of an argument which never failed to stagger the most astute skeptic. It convinces and convicts. We should name it, you say? It is a Christian life.

In 1895 there have been in our United States 7,500 murders. Making 115 for every million of inhabitants. Of that vast number of murderers only seventy-four were legally executed. Our criminal lawyers amassed fortunes in defending parties whose hands were reeking with human blood. Yes, and women of sickly sentimentalism sent them flowers to the prison. It is high time that public opinion be properly instructed on this subject.

NOTES.

Rev. F. N. Parker is assisting Rev. R. S. Isbell in a meeting at Evergreen, La.

On the fourth Sunday in October Bishop Keener will dedicate a church at Georgetown, Texas.

Rev. H. H. Ahrens has gone to New York City to meet his mother on her return from Germany.

Bishop Keener and family have returned to the city after a three months' sojourn by the seaside.

The North Mississippi Conference will meet on Thursday, Nov. 26. Let the preachers all take notice of the exact date.

Rev. S. J. Davies is at home again after a two weeks' vacation, fresh and vigorous, and ready for the Fall campaign.

Rev. J. L Pierce is on his feet again, but not sufficiently vigorous to fill his pulpit. He is now rusticating at Talisheek.

Rev. F. S. Parker is convalescent, but deems it prudent to take a brief rest. He has gone to Talisheek, St. Tammany parish.

The article in last week's issue, headed "A Masterly Utterance That Should Become Authoritative," should have been credited to Zion's Herald.

We invite special attention to the communication of Rev. N. B. Harmon on our fifth page. The matter of which he writes is of vast importance to Mississippi Methodism.

A facetious brother writes that he fears one result of the discussion now going on in the Advocate will be to give him a presiding elder who can beat him preaching, which he would very much deprecate.

Rev. R. P. Gear, Chester, Miss. (North Mississippi Conference), has had seventy-one accessions to the church this year, and seventy professions of conversion. Collections will be paid in full. Fifteen infants baptized.

Rev. S. H. Werlein, of the St. Louis Conference, has requested to be transferred to the far South for hygienic reasons. F. R. Hill, Jr., has made a similar request. At this writing we do not know to what Conference these brethren will go.

One of the prospective Bishops of Southern Methodism resides in the Crescent City. His name is John Wesley Ahrens, and he lives with his parents in the elegant new parsonage of Parker Chapel. He will not be eligible, however, for some years.

Sunday and Monday, October 18 and 19, have been set apart as the "days of universal prayer for Sunday-schools." Let all who are interested in the success of Sunday-schools (and who is not?) remember the time and send up their petitions for special blessings upon this great arm of the church.

Rev. S. S. Keener honored our sanctum with his presence a few days since. He is in fine health and spirits. He casts a larger shadow than any preacher in the Louisiana Conference. He has built two churches this year—one at Roseland and one at Kentwood. Who can beat that?

The success of the East Mississippi Female College, of Meridian, this year is something remarkable. The number of pupils has increased about 50 per cent., and the boarding department is about three times as large as it was last year. The buildings are full, and President Beeson has let the contract for erection of another building, containing space for eighteen more music rooms, an art studio, room for Young Women's Christian Association, and some more bed-rooms. This is gratifying news concerning one of our church schools. President Beeson has added a Kindergarden department, Industrial department, Dress Making, Cutting and fitting, etc. These departments are what our church schools ought to have.

Since the above was written we learned that the enrollment has reached nearly 200 up to date. This is a remarkable increase.

Emory College, under the vigorous administration of President Candler, is enjoying greater prosperity than ever before. In addition to a very large increase of the endowment fund, Dr. Candler is planning for the erection of a new building to be used chiefly for library purposes. About half the amount needed has been secured, and an architect's plan has been adopted. Work upon the building will begin in the near future.

From Bro. Malone's communication, on another page, it will be seen that Grenada Collegiate Institute is full to overflowing. This news is truly gratifying. At the same time it brings responsibilities. The friends of the college and the Methodists of North Mississippi generally should see to it that this institution is not hindered in its noble work for want of room. We hope to see a handsome building erected on that beautiful campus in the near future.

Millwood Female Institute, Jackson, La., offers fine facilities to young ladies who desire a thorough education. The location is excellent, the grounds spacious and beautiful, the curriculum good, the faculty well equipped. The place of Miss McCalmont, the former principal, so widely and favorably known, is now ably filled by Miss A. C. Pearce, a daughter of Rev. Levi Pearce, long a leading member of the Mississippi Annual Conference. She is a woman of ability and culture.

The missionary meeting at Rayne Memorial on Sunday night was quite a success. The house was well filled. Mrs. Linus Parker, president of the local auxiliary, presided. The pastor, Rev. F. N. Parker, acted as master of ceremonies. An elegant service of song was rendered by the choir. The addresses by Mrs. Trueheart and Mrs. Butler were entertaining and instructive. These two talented representatives of the Woman's Board of Missions left on Monday morning for Mexico, whither they go to visit all the schools and mission stations under the auspices of the Board. They will stop a day or two at Houston and San Antonio. Their visit to this city will no doubt result in great good to the society.

Miss Belle Kearney has been for some months engaged in W. C. T. U. work in the East. She has lectured at a number of cities in Maine, New York, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Connecticut. She has been greeted everywhere by large audiences, and the papers speak in glowing terms of her speeches. She has been invited to speak during the Fall at the W. C. T. U. State Conventions of five Eastern States—New York, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Connecticut—all of which she has accepted. She has also been invited to address the New York State Convention of the Christian Endeavor Society. No Southern woman orator has ever attracted so much attention at the North. Dr. Palmore's characterization of her as "the Frances Willard of the South" is pre-eminently fitting.

Millions of the children of men are to-day feeding upon husks, while in their Father's house "there is bread enough, and to spare." Jesus of Nazareth was an inimitable artist. True to the life are all his delineations of human nature.

You have got to educate your children or they will become hewers of wood and drawers of water for others. If you don't educate them they will serve the children of other people who did educate theirs, and maybe colored people at that. Think of that! The poorest man in the country is the man, above every other man, who ought to try to educate his children. The best investment you can make for your children is to put what money you can give them into their heads. The best education is when you bring out great life to bear upon another life. That's what your colleges mean. If you had better burn them up. It is to so develop the spirit and mind that they grow up into the living image of their Master and Head, Christ Jesus. If I had my way, I would put a Methodist school-house beside every church, and put a Methodist man or woman in it. I would transport my child before he should go to a school where the Bible was prohibited. Knock out reverence for God and you knock out the corner stone of your fabric.—Bishop Duncan.

The Grenada Collegiate Institute.

The gradual growth of the Grenada Collegiate Institute for the past three years has been highly gratifying. Last year the school grew to almost its full capacity. In order to provide for increasing numbers for the present session, new rooms were added and partitions made in music rooms to give place for new pianos. It was thought that these additions would be sufficient for our needs, but at the close of the first month our house is full. By putting our teachers in closer quarters we may be able to stow away a few more. The local patronage is almost double that of any previous year, and the student body is by far the best we have ever had. We think we are to be congratulated on our excellent faculty. They are all competent, experienced, and religious. They were all at their post promptly on opening day, and are doing most efficient work. A highly commendable ambition for literary excellence, and a deep and wide-reaching religious spirit, pervades the entire school. The Bible is taught as a text-book in each of the five college classes. No pupil is excused from Bible study. Even the little primary, as she learns her letters, is given each week a lesson in the "Book of books." Mrs. Mary L. Hargrove has charge of the weekly prayer meeting, Epworth League, and monthly missionary society. These are all well attended, and are full of interest. The influences are all deeply religious, and we confidently expect from every pupil growth in grace as well as in knowledge. We need an annex for the conservatory of music and the scientific department, with an increase of boarding capacity of not less than 75 boarders. Will the church meet this urgent need? If the North Mississippi Conference will add to this most excellent building and properly equip its own property, it will be no trouble to fill house with Methodist girls from its own bounds. God has greatly blessed us, for which we are thankful, and by his help propose to be true to him and the church.

J. W. MALONE.

To Rome. Join the Pilgrimage.

"All roads," say the English, "lead to London." The statement, equally with the great thoroughfare, applies to the smallest trail. Trails open at length into the main road.

This writer, from various sources, has read of late of the trend, becoming quietly deeper, towards Romanism.

An editorial in the New York Weekly Witness declares, writing between extracts on the subject from other important journals, the matter to be serious. Its conclusion was startling. In effect it said: "Well, why not? Around each Protestant body there is a thick overlaying of indifferent adherents. Like a fringe it waves and wavers, forward and back, perfectly unstable. The result of the move towards Rome would be to strip away this veil, leaving a very sober nucleus of the faithful in each denomination, more faithful than ever, and more effective."

More recently the Literary Digest, a weekly summary of current thought, displays this matter as of general and increasing moment.

Our last ADVOCATE quotes from some prominent source the advertisement of a mass for the repose of the soul of a departed Episcopalian, whose churches have begun to adopt even in the South the candles and the mass.

Significant is Mr. Gladstone's recent plea before the Vatican for recognition by the Pope of English clerical orders. And no great commotion now follows the papal reply, calmly denying the plea as impossible, but paternally encouraging such sentiment as wholesome for the pleaders.

The encyclical directing Americans to obey Rome and disobey America where civil statutes varied with church command, passes with small comment into and out of the Protestant American mind.

I do not know how many Protestant bodies there are now. It will require another census to get the latest. The number is astonishing. No doubt of the number of organic Roman Catholic Churches exists, however. There is but one—there arises no suggestion of more than one. Independence of thought seems to be the reservoir which furnishes these numerous Protestant streamlets. "Hands off of religious training," is the order in the public schools, from which shall soon issue the body of the church people of the country. The diversity of religious views is such as to make the Bible in the schools of America a bone of contention. Such confusion of spirit flows out of this condition of our young people, it does not surprise us when a Roman archbishop commands, as was done recently, that tuition fees be dropped in Roman schools. This opens them as free schools, exhibiting them smooth and thorough in work, and inviting patronage from the dissatisfied. The invitation will be accepted by many from independent Protestant ranks.

This independence shows, bas-relief fashion, from the use of the "deadly parallel."

ROME'S POINT OF VIEW.	PROTESTANT POINT OF VIEW.
The projecting great toe of a metal sitting statue of Peter, in St. Peter's Cathedral, has been touched by the soft lips of the reverent, until it is half worn away. It appears nickle-plated; the rest of the figure rough bronze. Popes have been for years mewed within limits of the building adjoining the Cathedral of St. Peter's. Millions make annual visit to the Vatican, bringing gifts and deporting content under the general benediction of His moro than Majjesty. Pope, cardinal, ablegate and delegate, nuncio, archbishop, bishop, priest, ad infinitum of grade, draw tribute and support from every cheerful member.	Our Bishops are subject to censure and charged with ignoraace and incompetence by some of our preachers and people. "Church" papers are found here and there who seem to intensify and try to make the charges good. Salaries of our Bishops, perhaps a third or fifth of what would have been earned in other service, are collected especially by presiding elders to escape the sad prorating which attends the adjustment in the majority of cases, with the shortage of the Conference collection. The priest says, "Do this," or, "Stop that," to his disaffected flock and peace broods in the Roman family! It seems to require the special work of evangelists to heal dissensions in the membership, to close old wounds and to establish peace in the community.

A writer in a late ADVOCATE agitates for fewer districts in the Mississippi Conference. Why? Because growth has been so negative for the past 10 to 15 years as to demand the reduction instead of increase of our expense in the field.

Rome exacts the promise ere children are born that they shall be nurtured in her lap. And, nurtured thus, Roman confidence is such in her work as to warrant her pointing to the 10-year-old child and bid Protestantism "get him if you can."

Methodists, with wonderful independence, are heard declaring, "We place no restraint upon our girls and boys. Let them join the church of their choice. There is good in all of them."

Rome, without friction or needless loss of an hour, confirms and gathers her children, fixed and steadfast, if in nothing else, in loyalty to the church and the priest.

Protestant ministers are engaged in the same communities, and even in foreign fields, preaching doctrine of such radical difference as to irritate the opposing "ambassadors of Christ," to chill the spiritual warmth of the different adherents, and to move the world outside, if outside these, to smile of unmixed derision.

Lord Macaulay, considering the American Republic 40 years ago, was convinced that the sovereignty of its citizenship constituted its chief peril. While resources are plenty, said he, prosperity will seem to insure the permanency of the republic. Let want begin to appear, however, and your many sovereigns will pull down your Republic. He suggested waiting for the end of the century for a safer view. Political circumstances of today make his words remarkable reading.

Is the difference between Romanism and Protestantism the difference between monarchy and republic? And is it proper, in view of the situation, to close these remarks by directing attention to an ancient fable?

A father, about to die, caused his sons to bring to him a bundle of sticks. Said he to each son, "Break the sticks fastened together." Each trial failed. "Now divide the sticks and try." Each separated stick was broken promptly. The last injunction to these sons was to stand together for mutual defense.

Is Rome the fastened bundle and Protestantism the separated fagots?

INQUIRER.

Attention.

DEAR BROTHER: The General and Conference Boards of Church Extension have given a wonderful impetus to church building. (See Minutes of eighty-first session of Mississippi Conference.) The demand for aid at this time is greater than was ever known in the history of the church. This is due, in a measure, to the tide of emigration which seems to have set Southward, making populous centers which were once barren. The church ready to house the incoming emigrants will be the one to gather them in.

It certainly behooves us to be ready to meet the want now facing us in various sections of our Conference. Our church ought to be located in certain large towns on the Gulf coast, viz.: Pass Christian, Mississippi City, Waveland and Gulf Port. Pass Christian has a population of 2,800, augmented in the Winter by a large number of Northern visitors. Waveland has a native population of 800, increased in the Summer by hordes from New Orleans. Population of Mississippi City is estimated at 2,000 natives, which is largely increased by both Winter and Summer visitors. Gulf Port is the terminus of the Gulf and Ship Island R. R. The Conference owns two beautiful lots at Gulf Port and also two at Pass Christian. Our church must enter these towns. To meet the urgent demand which will be made upon us from every district in the Conference we must have every cent of the assessment levied upon the various pastoral charges. Will you not inform your people about the work and urge them to raise every cent of this year's assessment.

Butter Making—Money Making Your Chance.

A NEW INVENTION that will be a great money maker for those who are selling goods, has just been put out by The Queen Butter Maker Co., of Cincinnati, who have patented a churn that will make butter in two minutes. We have watched the process; it is marvelous. The cream is placed in the churn, and a few turns of a large wheel will separate the butter, and it appears on the surface all gathered. It is the most wonderful machine that has ever been invented, and that it will be a tremendous seller anyone can see, and our readers should secure the agency at once. Everybody who keeps a cow must have one of these machines. No more standing an hour and a half or two hours over a churning. Anyone who is out of employment should not miss the opportunity, as it is a pleasure to sell what everyone wants to buy. All you need to do is to make butter on churning day, and everyone will be sure to buy. In one neighborhood from twenty to thirty churns can easily be sold, and the profit on these to agents will easily give them $150 a month. Write The Queen Butter Maker Co. of 33 East 31 st., Cincinnati, for circulars, and get the agency at once, as somebody may step in and your chance may be lost. Chances do not come every day of this sort.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

IT SNOWS.

"It snows!" cries the School-boy, "Hurrah!" and his shout
Is ringing through parlor and hall,
While swift as the wing of a swallow, he's out,
And his playmates have answered his call;
It makes the heart leap but in witness their joy;
Proud wealth has no pleasure, I trow,
Like the rapture that throbs in the pulse of the boy,
As he gathers his treasures of snow;
Then lay not the trappings of gold on thine heirs,
While health, and the riches of nature, are theirs.

"It snows!" sighs the Imbecile, "Ah!" and his breath
Comes heavy, as clogged with a weight;
While, from the pale aspect of nature in death
He turns to the blaze of his grate;
And nearer and nearer his soft-cushioned chair
Is wheeled toward the life-giving flame;
He dreads a chill puff of the snow-burdened air,
Lest it wither his delicate frame;
Oh! small is the pleasure existence can give,
When the fear we shall die only proves that we live!

"It snows!" cries the Traveler, "Ho!" and the word
Has quickened his steed's lagging pace;
The wind rustles icy, but its howl is unheard,
Unfelt the sharp drift in his face;
For bright through the tempest his own home appeared,
Ay, through leagues intervened he can see;
There's the clear, glowing heart, and the table prepared,
And his wife with her babes at her knee;
Blest thought! how it lightens the grief-laden hour,
That those we love dearest are safe from its power!

"It snows!" cries the Belle, "Dear, how lucky!" and turns
From her mirror to watch the flakes fall;
Like the first rose of summer, her dimpled cheek burns,
While musing on sleigh-ride and ball;
There are visions of conquests, of splendor and mirth,
Floating over each drear Winter's day;
But the tintings of Hope, on this storm-beaten earth,
Will melt like the snow-flakes away:
Turn, turn thee to heaven, fair maiden, for bliss;
That world has a pure fount ne'er opened in this.

"It snows!" cries the Widow, "Oh God!" and her sighs
Have stilled the voice of her prayer;
Its burden you'll read, in her tear-swollen eyes,
On her cheek sunk with fasting and care.
'Tis night and her fatherless ask her for bread,
But "He gives the young ravens their food,"
And she trusts, till her dark hearth adds horror to dread,
And she lays on her last chip of wood.
Poor sufferer! that sorrow thy God only knows;
'Tis a most bitter lot to be poor, when it snows!

The Cart Before the Horse.

The other day a fellow said to me, "Don't you think Jones is a lucky chap?" "No," said I, "I think he is a hard-working man, and gets on because he deserves it." "Ah," was the man's answer, "don't tell me; he has got a good trade, and a capital shop, and a fair capital, and I don't wonder that he makes money." Bless the man's heart; Jones began with nothing, in a little, poking shop, and all he has was scraped together by hard labor and careful saving. The shop would never have kept him if he had not kept the shop, and he would have had no trade if he had not been a good tradesman; but there, it's no use talking, some people will never allow that thrift and temperance lead to thriving and comfort, for this would condemn themselves. So to quiet their consciences they put the cart before the horse.

A very bad case of putting the cart before the horse is when a drinking old man talks as if he had been kept out of the grave by his beer, though that is the thing which carries people to their last home. He happens to have a strong constitution, and so he can stand the effects of drink better than most, and then folks say it was the drink which gave him the constitution. When an old soldier comes alive out of battle, do we think that the shot and shell saved his life? When we meet with a man who is so strong that he can be a great drinker and still seem little the worse, we must not say that he owes his strength to his beer, or we shall be putting the plough before the oxen.

When a man thinks that he is to make himself good before he comes to Jesus to be saved, he is planting the fruit instead of the root, and putting the chimney-pots where the foundation should be. We do not save ourselves and then trust the Savior; but when the Savior has worked salvation in us, then we work it out with fear and trembling. Be sure, good reader, that you put faith first, and work afterward; for, if not, you will put the cart before the horse.—Spurgeon.

Hunchback Sees Not His Own Hump, But He Sees His Neighbor's.

He points at the man in front of him, but he is a good deal more of a guy himself. He should not laugh at the crooked until he is straight himself, and not then. I hate to hear a raven croak at a crow for being black. A blind man should not blame his brother for squinting, and he who has lost his legs should not sneer at the lame. Yet so it is, the rottenest bough cracks first, and he who should be the last to speak is the first to rail. Bespattered hogs bespatter others, and he who is full of fault finds fault. They are most apt to speak ill of others who do most ill themselves.

"We're very keen our neighbor's hump to see,
We're blind to that upon our back alone;
E'en though the lump far greater he,
It still remains to us unknown."

It does us much hurt to judge our neighbors, because it flatters our conceit, and our pride grows quite fast enough without feeding. We accuse others to excuse ourselves. We are such fools as to dream that we are better because others are worse, and we talk as if we could get up by pulling others down. What is the good of spying holes in people's coats when we can't mend them? Talk of my debts if you mean to pay them; if not, keep your red rag behind your ivory ridge. A friend's faults should not be advertised, and even a stranger's should not be published. He who brays at an ass is an ass himself, and he who makes a fool of another is a fool himself. Don't get into the habit of laughing at people, for the old saying is, "Hanging's stretching and mocking's catching."

Some must have their joke whoever they poke;
For the sake of fun mischief is done,
And to air their wit full many they hit.

—Spurgeon.

"Bridget, has Johnnie come home from school yet?"

"Have you seen him?"

"No, sorr."

"Then how do you know he's home?"

"'Cause the cat's hidin' under the stove, sorr.'—Exchange.

Getting Something Ahead.

Next to a good conscience, there is probably nothing which so enables a man to stand up in his boots and act out his individuality as financial independence. One who does not know where his next coat is coming from when the one he has on is worn out, or who is under obligations that he can not possibly meet, will find that his personal force in the world, as well as his happiness, is pretty seriously discounted. Habits of thrift may sometimes be condemned as "mean," but those who express this opinion are usually the last persons to whom one can turn with confidence in a time of trouble. Most young men in the United States start out without any advantage of accumulated capital. They have their own brains and hands to depend upon. The old fashioned advice to save a little, so as to get ahead, is still the soundest and best that can be given. Whenever we see a young man of five-and-twenty, who, unless he has been spending his resources in getting an education or in supporting members of his family, has nothing laid up for a rainy day, we see a man whom it takes a great deal of stupidity or heroism for a girl to marry. If he could not support himself when alone, the family of which he is head will have to put up with many privations, and his wife will be apt to have a hard and grinding life. It is still true that love "beareth all things and endureth all things," but it is a fair question whether it is wise in love to bear and endure a good many things that might be avoided. A girl who is asked in marriage has a perfect right to require the man who would win her to demonstrate that he has the ability to care for her. If the young women were more exacting in this regard, there would be many more bank accounts, and in every case a better prospect for future happiness.—The Watchman.

Politeness.

Politeness costs little, but it pays well. Courtesy in the home is like morning sunshine pouring in at every window. An employer can well afford to be polite to an employee, for it makes the workingman do better work and binds together the two classes in a beautiful fellowship. In the effort to settle the differences between capital and labor, if we could bring into the controversy more courtesy and less bitterness of speech, it would help amazingly in solving the question.

It is always the danger of our confidence in God's providence, that we shall come to think it will be satisfied with our improvidence. Only as we make the best of what we have, and so become the best we can be, shall we win the great "well done"—Robert Collyer.

HYGIENE.

The Dietetic Value of Honey.

Probably most people consider honey as the equal in value for food of any sweet sauce—no better, no worse. All should know that it possesses one great superiority—ease of digestion. The nectar of flowers is almost wholly cane sugar. The secretions added by the bees change this to grape sugar and so prepare it that it is almost ready for assimilation without any effort on the part of the stomach; in fact, Prof. A. J. Cook once styled honey, "digested nectar." It will be readily seen that honey is a very desirable food for those with weakened digestive powers. If a person is very tired, "too exhausted to eat," it is astonishing how a few tastes of honey will act almost like magic. Almost no effort is required to make it ready for assimilation. Persons suffering from some forms of kidney trouble will find that honey is a much more beneficial food for them than is cane sugar.

In eating comb honey, many strive to reject every particle of wax, fearing that, as wax is indigestible, nightmare and other troublesome consequences will follow an indulgence in warm biscuit and honey. It is true that bread is more easily digested than warm biscuit, as the latter is inclined to "pack" in chewing, but it may surprise some to know that comb honey is really an aid to the digestion of hot bread or biscuit. The philosophy of the matter is that the flakes of wax prevent the "packing" while the honey readily dissolves out, leaving passages for the gastric juice to enter the mass of food. The flakes of wax are indigestible, that is true, but when warmed are perfectly smooth and soft and will not injure the most delicate membrane; in fact, they act as a gentle stimulant, and are beneficial in some forms of alimentary difficulties.

The unpleasant symptoms from which some suffer after eating honey may often be removed by drinking a little milk.—Country Gentleman.

Hygiene for Women.

A writer in the New York Herald says:

"Every woman who needs it should give up from fifteen minutes to a half hour daily for thorough and continuous relaxation of the body. As near mid day as convenient is the best time. At 2 o'clock, say every afternoon, unloose the clothing and fastening, that no part of the body may be girded any more than at night, and then lie down for not less than fifteen minutes and not more than an hour, perfectly flat upon a bed or long divan. Keep every part of the body as passive as possible. Sleep a few minutes, if possible. But at any rate, remain in this position for a little while. It is better, but not necessary, to undress, but every muscle, every nerve, every artery, should be completely relieved from pressure."

One woman I know undresses, goes to bed for an hour and sleeps. She darkens the room so it will seem like night. In this way she restores her resources and maintains her health. Many will say they can not get the time, but if they arrange their work right they gain time rather than lose it.—The Journal of Hygiene.

Lost Time.

In view of the brevity of time and its rapid flight, the utmost care should be taken in the use of time, lest any of it should be wasted. The wind that blows by us, may return again on its backward sweep; the stream that flows by us may descend again upon the earth and resume its channel; the sun that shines in heaven to-day may shine again to-morrow; but wasted time is lost forever. Wasted health may be restored; lost reputation may be regained; squandered wealth may be recovered; but lost time is forever lost and not a single hour can be recovered.

Dr. Daniel Steel says: "I wish I had the power to reach every Methodist on the round earth. I would say, 'Cease living on the heroism of your fathers; quit glorying in numbers, sacrificing to statistics, and burning incense to the general minute; down upon your knees and seek and find yourself the secret of the fathers—a clean heart and the endnement of power from on high; and then arise and unfurl the banner of salvation free and full, and a common-sense theology.'"

OBITUARIES.

REW—EDWANN J. REW, son of Fenny Yonng and Southey Rew, was born in Craven county, N. C., March 31, 1815; was converted and joined the M. E. Church in his seventeenth year. After burying first mother, then father, the old homestead had lost its charms, and he thought to find relief to his saddened heart by moving to Marengo county, Ala., in 1837, but soon found that a frontier life didn't fill the vacuum. His heart yearned for a home and loved ones, and he resolved to ask God each morning, noon and night to direct him to some healthy, intelligent, sweet-spirited Christian, that would make his heart and home happy. This he found in Eliza J. Hooks. They were married on Feb. 21, 1839. To them were born five daughters and four sons. As soon as practicable after the birth of each child, he would kneel by the bedside, and, after thanking God for the gift, committed them to his care, and asked his assistance in raising them to be useful Christians. The third and fourth a son and daughter—died in infancy. The fifth Edward died of yellow fever in 1887, leaving a wife and three children, and was the first among a host of angels that came to conduct my mother's spirit to the mansion prepared by our Savior, on May 18, 1892. When we were kneeling by her bedside to catch her parting words and receive her last kiss, she said: "You needn't cry; I've no pain, and so happy. Edward, mother, father, all here." And as she talked of the angels, such a halo of glory surrounded that bed. Though our hearts were breaking with grief, now and then a "Hallelujah!" or "Praise the Lord!" would burst from one or another's lips. When the messages were ended she fell asleep as quiet as an infant. My father repeated the 840th hymn, and said, "Praise the Lord for a wife that has filled faithfully every vocation of life."

He, being of a high nervous temperament, sometimes amid the conflicts of life you could hardly know where to find him; but, like the compass, when the disturbing element had passed, he was always true to the pole. His fondness for reading, and retentive memory, gave him an insight into natural, political and religious history seldom enjoyed by man; that gave an independence which relieved the bondage to sect, class, or party, farther than he knew to be right, ever looking for some means by which he could advance the religious, business or political interest of mankind. He moved to Lauderdale county, Miss., in 1852, and came near losing his life by pushing the temperance cause, but enjoyed the fruits of his labor for forty-three years. Often he would chide the ministry and laymen for not living up to their privilege as Christians, sometimes being accused of heterodoxy.

By long and untiring efforts he stirred the people to the establishing of the A. and M. College; and more than thirty years ago would talk of the necessity of a port of entry at Ship Island, and tried to awaken the State by voice and pen to that source of political economy.

On the morning of July 8, with buoyant spirits and perfect health, he left home to transact a little business in Meridian before starting on a visit to his children. While driving home two thoughtless negro boys got their bicycles entangled in the buggy wheels, which frightened the horse and threw him with such force against the corner post as to rupture the spinal cord between his shoulders. His face struck the bridge, which cut five terrible gashes. His whole body was badly bruised. But the shock was so great that he suffered but little, though his intellect was remarkably clear, and he knew the many friends who came to see him by sight and voice, and talked to them freely on business, religion or politics. When I got to him he said: "My child, I'm all knocked to pieces, but I'm not afraid to die." After his wounds were dressed his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Edward Rew, had him taken to her house, where he received every possible attention. On the fourteenth his fever was intense. We tried in vain to soothe him, and felt that the end was drawing near. About noon I asked some one to sing, "Gathering Home," when he joined in the chorus of the first verse, and asked for "Jesus, lover of my soul." He helped to sing the first two verses very clear, and went to sleep. About night he called us around the bed to receive his last kiss and good-by. After the messages and kisses were sent to the absent ones he called my mother, and I asked if the angels had come. He said, "Not yet," and stretched up his arms in the most imploring manner, and said, "Oh, Lord Jesus, give me patience to wait for her," when a verse of "How firm a foundation!" put him to sleep. At two o'clock he awoke in perfect ecstasy, as if he had my mother in his right arm, while he beckoned with his left hand and called my sainted uncle. I again asked if the angels had come. He said: "Yes, yes; all here," calling many by name. After greeting the angels he went to sleep, and awoke about sunrise with uplifted hands clasped on his breast. He repeated the twenty-third Psalm very emphatically. When he repeated the fourth verse he looked at me very earnestly, and said: "Where is the valley and shadow of death? I think that must have been misinterpreted. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" After repeating other passages and stanzas, one of which I thought some one present might think that he was afraid to die, I said, "Pa, you are not afraid to meet Jesus?" when he gave me a very rebuking look, and said: "Afraid to meet Jesus! Afraid to meet my God! Why, child, what do you mean? Who can tell the height, the depth, the breadth of God's redeeming love?" During the day he was too weak to talk much, but knew everyone. At ten o'clock P. M. that heart that had labored and loved so long ended its work, and, without a struggle, his spirit was wafted to realms of eternal bliss.

GRAVES—JOHN FRANCIS GRAVES died at the home of his brother-in-law, Rev. James Healey, in Phœnix, Ariz., Sept. 3, 1896. Bro. Graves was born in Madison parish, La., Feb. 7, 1862, where he grew to manhood. He was soundly converted to God in San Diego, Cal., in December, 1893, and ever after was a devoted and happy Christian, and died in the full triumph of the Christian's hope.

He came to California a few years ago, hoping his health might be benefited by the climate, and the care of his two noble sisters, Mrs. James Healey, now of Phœnix, Ariz., and Mrs. George H. Andrews, of San Luis Obispo, Cal. For a time his health improved, and he bade fair to be a strong man, with many useful years before him. He felt impressed with a call to preach the gospel and to enter the itinerant ministry, but a return of poor health prevented him.

Among all the young men I have ever known, I have never known one that came nearer filling a perfect ideal character. He was pure in thought, word, and deed; as gentle as a maiden, and as firm in principle as any man I have ever known, or as any character I have seen in biography. He seemed to be absolutely unselfish, and ever thoughtful of how he might help others and make them happy. We had fondly hoped he would live to preach and adorn the gospel of his Master, whom he loved so well and imitated so closely in his life; but God, who knows what is best, and who doeth all things well, has ordered otherwise, and we must submit. His life was not a failure, as no life so true and noble can ever fail. Eternity only will tell us what his life has been worth to this world.

Q. A. OATS.

DIXON—EMILY, youngest daughter of Dr. R. D. and Mrs. S. M. Brown, and wife of W. M. Dixon, was born Jan. 20, 1856, at New Prospect, Winston county, Miss., and died at Hattiesburg, Miss., Aug. 11, 1896, in the fortieth year of her age. She was converted under the ministry of Rev. B. Cerraline, and united with the Central Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss., during the pastorate of Rev. E. H. Mounger. During a revival at East End Church, Meridian, conducted by Rev. H. E. Partridge, she sought and obtained the blessing of entire sanctification. Always a consistent, earnest, consecrated Christian, this blessing wrought a great change in her life, as was apparent to all, and to none more than to her pastor. Ready for any service, any sacrifice, considerate of the poor, the sorrowing, the distressed, she was as a messenger to help, comfort, relieve.

An intimate friend writes: "I can truthfully say hers was a noble Christian character. She lived each day a Christian. Would there were more like her. She led me nearer the dear Master, and I know many who could say the same."

She was a tender, loving mother; a devoted, sympathetic wife. She filled these offices as nearly as one well could. She was the mother of six children, three of whom have preceded her to the better land. Though called to pass through deep sorrow, she said and lived, "Thy will be done." "Let her own works praise her in the gates." B. F. LEWIS.

MYERS—Mrs. BEULAH V. MYERS was born Jan. 3, 1870; claimed conversion and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of fourteen years.

Perhaps one of the most modest and nearest free from fault. Suffered much from a chronic ailment. During last sickness was confined to bed for about two weeks. Visited her several times, finding her always patient and resigned—never peevish or unpleasant. Asked once if she was still trusting in the Lord, when she replied, "I can not quit now." I said, "That is doubtless one reason you are here suffering so much and so long a lesson for those who witness your suffering." "Yes," was her reply, "if they would only take it to heart, and He saved me." She called her friends and relatives repeatedly, and admonished them, telling them to meet her in heaven. Growing weaker continuously, she quietly and peacefully passed away, and doubtless entered the "rest that remaineth for the people of God," Aug. 30, 1896. J. H. BROWN, P. C.

SIMS—Mrs. MILDRED N. SIMS was born Oct. 16, 1830, in Forsythe county, Ga.; was married to Mr. L. P. Sims in 1845; embraced religion in 1855, at the same time joining the M. E. Church, South, and living a consistent member of the same until the day of her death, which occurred on the ninth day of June, 1896, at her old home near Gansville, La.

Death came suddenly, and, doubtless, unexpectedly, both to her family and herself; but we are satisfied that she was ready. She left one daughter, two sons, several grandchildren and many friends to mourn her loss, as she was a friend to the friendless and the needy, and was ever ready to the extent of her ability to administer to the sick and those who needed assistance.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Last month I cleared, after paying all expenses, $355 85; the month previous, $260, and have at the same time attended to other duties. I believe any energetic person can do equally as well, as I have had very little experience. The Dish Washer is just lovely, and every family wants one, which makes selling very easy. I do no canvassing. People hear about the Dish Washer, and come or send for one. It is strange that a good, cheap washer has never before been put on the market. The Iron City Dish Washer fills this bill. With it you can wash and dry the dishes for a family of ten in two minutes without wetting the hands. As soon as people see the washer work they want one. You can make more money, and make it quicker, than with any other household article on the market. I feel convinced that any lady or gentleman can make from $10 to $15 per day around home. My sister and brother have started in the business, and are doing splendid. You can get full particulars by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Sta. A, Pittsburgh, Pa. They help you get started, then you can make money awfully fast. MRS. W. H.

Prayer Meeting Topic for October.

THE FRIENDS OF CHRIST.

SUNDAY, OCT. 11—THE CIRCLE OF DUTY.

In preference to the references given in the topic leaflet for this week, which seem to have only a remote connection, if any, with the subject, we copy references, and an abridgment of "Thoughts on the Topic," from the Epworth League Department of Nashville Christian Advocate.

TYPES OF DUTY.

1. Duty the Master's meat (John iv, 34). 2. The bitter cup (Matt xxvi, 39).

There were two classes of duty that confronted our Lord: the duties of service, and the duty of suffering. Into the class of duties of service entered all the activities of our Lord's life.... To the Master suffering came clothed in the garments of duty.

3. The test of friendship (John xv, 14). 4. The brother and sistor and mother of Jesus (Mark iii, 34, 35).

Every true friendship is written in imperatives. The obligation of hearty good service holds in every merely human friendship; much more in the friendship that men have toward the Son of man.... Christ tests our friendship for him by our obedience; but largely this is the law of all friendship. "Who is my friend?" He whose will, whose desire, has become a law for my conduct.

5. Joseph of Arimathea (John xix, 38).

Joseph's act in requesting the dead body, and laying it in his own rock-hewn-tomb, must have deeply touched the hearts of the disciples, for Mathew, Mark, and Luke have only words of commendation. But John, writing long after the others, himself the apostle of deepest love, points out the flaw in this generous character. Doubtless, the death of the Master was a crisis in the life of Joseph, and the nobility of his action now made tardy amends for his previous lack of courage and obedience.

Fads in Medicine.

There are fads in medicine as in everything else, and a "new thing" frequently sells for a short time simply because it is new. But in medicine, as in nothing else, the people demand and will be satisfied only with positive, absolute merit. The fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has stood its ground against all competition, and its sales have never wavered, but have remained steadily at the top, demonstrates, beyond any doubt, the intrinsic virtues of this medicine. The new things have come and gone, but Hood's Sarsaparilla rests upon the solid foundation of absolute merit and its power to cure, and its sales continue to be the largest in the world.

Presiding Elders.

I think Bro. Streater has seen some things in ignis fatuus, and is liable to mislead some of our people. The brother seems to think that the presiding elders are a burden when we have more than it requires to hold the itinerant wheel together, and so he advocates the reduction of districts to seven, thus giving each district twenty charges. He assumes that this idea would meet the approbation of a majority of the preachers, if they were not afraid of hurting the presiding elder's feelings. I think the brother is very much mistaken just here for I think the majority of our preachers have the good of the church at heart and are too conscientious to yield their honest convictions to the favor or friendship of any man or body of men.

Again Bro. Streater makes a very broad mistake when he says our presiding elders get $64.29 per sermon. Now, let us see. We have now nine districts averaging more than fifteen charges each. To fill any of these districts the presiding elder must preach at least one hundred times. Now, according to Bro. Streater's calculation, each district must pay $6,429. This, you see, is not true. But instead of six thousand four hundred and twenty-nine dollars they get $1,028.65, which is $10.29 and not $64.29 per sermon. I make this correction not as a critic, but as a brother.

I can not agree with the brother who favors reducing the number of districts; but I am in favor of reducing the size and making one more in number. I believe in small farms and intensive farming. When a presiding elder has to spread himself over such large fields he gets thin, and can not do as much good as he could if he came in closer touch with the people. I think twelve or fourteen charges are enough to keep any presiding elder busy. Every pastor needs ministerial help, and why not the presiding elder help his preacher some instead of letting him send off for help? I think our presiding elders should be evangelists as well as overseers. Of course, they must have the oversight of the district, look after the junior preachers and the interest of the church. To do this as it should be done requires time and labor. I believe that the presiding elders would be more appreciated, the preachers better supported and all the interests of the church advanced by a closer contact of the presiding elders with the people. This can not be done by enlarging the districts. J. A. POE.

HOW WE RISE.

BY J. G. HOLLAND.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to the summit round by round.

I count this thing to be grand y true,
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common sod
To a purer air and a broader view.

We rise by the things that are under feet,
By what we have mastered of greed and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we bonrly meet.

We hope, we aspire, we resolve, we trust,
When the morning calls us to life and light;
But our hearts grow weary, and ere the night
Our lives are trailing in sordid dust.

We hope, we aspire, we resolve, we pray,
And we think that we mount the air on wings,
Beyond the recall of sensual things,
While our feet still cling to the heavy clay.

Wings for the angels, but feet for men,
We may borrow the wings to find the way,
We may hope and aspire and resolve and pray,
But our feet must rise, or we'll fall again.

Only in dreams is a ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphire walls;
But the dreams depart and the vision falls,
And the sleeper wakes on his pillow of stone.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to the summit round by round.

Enlarging the Districts.

In the issue of this ADVOCATE, for Oct. 1, our tried and trusted brother, J. B. Streater, has given us some views of his in favor of enlarging the districts in the Annual Conference. No layman in the North Mississippi Conference is more worthy to have his opinions considered with entire respect and brotherly regard. In this spirit I desire to notice a few points made in the article just referred to.

The first of these points is made in the following sentence: "I think Bro. Bachman is very much mistaken when he says that a large majority of the preachers in the Conference are in favor of the number of districts remaining as they are; but I believe, on the contrary, the larger portion of them would advocate reducing the number if they were not afraid of incurring the displeasure of the presiding elders."

This is a severe statement, and, if true, reveals a state of things to be deplored. Are our presiding elders men of that kind? Why should a presiding elder be displeased towards a brother preacher or layman who expresses his views in a proper spirit on either side of this or any other question that concerns the efficiency of our Methodism? Such a temper would be wholly unworthy and evil, and would convict the man as unfit for his office, and he should be removed. On the other hand, to be "afraid of incurring the displeasure of the presiding elders" may be a pure injustice to them, while it shows a lack of proper courage in the brother who keeps silent because he is "afraid." I prefer to think that the presiding elders give no occasion for such fear and silence, and that preachers and people are not affected with unjust suspicions towards them. We be brethren, bound together in the love of Christ, and to accomplish the holy mission we have of him; therefore, all our feelings and bearing towards each other should be co-operative and characteristic of this mission.

The next point here noticed is contained in this quotation, viz.: "The custom with presiding elders, as a general thing, is to leave home on Friday evening or Saturday morning, and go to the Quarterly Conference, preach once or twice on Saturday, and maybe twice on Sunday; and if they do not go home on Sunday night, they will on Monday, and for this kind of service they were paid last year an average of $1,028.65, being an average of, at least, $64.29 per sermon, which is very dear preaching these hard times, especially when we consider the character of some of the sermons."

Let us see. With 140 charges in our Conference, as Bro. Streater gives, the nine districts will average fifteen charges to each, giving sixty quarterly meetings for the year to each presiding elder. Now, if we allow that the presiding elder preaches, on an average, twice at each meeting, he will give his people one hundred and twenty sermons in the year. Divide $1,028.65 by the number of sermons, and we have what is paid "per sermon," $8.57, which is nearly eight times less than "$64.29," and does not seem to be "very dear preaching these hard times, especially when we consider the character of some of the sermons." This estimate does not take account of the sixty Quarterly Conferences held—sometimes more wearing than preaching; and how much the presiding elder does to help up the preacher's allowance, and to help forward other financial interests of the church, and to instruct members, old and young, in the doctrines and polity of Methodism; and how his ministry and counsel refresh and encourage the pastor. This is not all, but enough to show that when the eight or ten dollars "per sermon" is properly distributed, the people have received a large return for the pay.

There is more in Bro. Streater's article that deserves notice, but it must be postponed to another time.

Georgia Letter.

Messrs. Barbee & Smith write me that my new life of Francis Asbury will be ready Oct. 7.

It is a remarkable fact that while Mr. Wesley has had so many biographers; while McKendree, Emory, Capers, Andrew, Marvin, Pierce, Hedding, Simpson, and other Bishops have had memoirs carefully prepared, that of Francis Asbury there never has been a worthy life written. Rev. W. P. Strickland, who afterwards joined the Presbyterians, did write "The Pioneer Bishop: A Biography of Francis Asbury," over forty years ago. It is a very inferior and unsatisfactory book, in my judgment, and was evidently prepared without great care. Dr. McClintock was working on a biography of Asbury when he died. Dr. Stevens, in the "History of the M. E. Church," has given us the best account of his labors, but it is locked up in four 12 mo. volumes, and out of reach of many. The Journals of Asbury, in three volumes, are still in print, but they are in a large degree unintelligible and uncntertaining. I have tried to present in one 12 mo. of 400 pages a satisfactory view of the man and his work. I may not have succeeded in doing it, but it has not been from a want of care. The book is printed at our Publishing House, and is edited by Dr. Tigert, but is published at my own charge, and is my own property. No publisher has ever been willing to risk the sale of one of my books, and print it on his own charge, and so I must do as I have been in the habit of doing—sell my own productions, or they will not be sold. I think the book will give satisfaction. It tells the plain truth, and while some of our modern Methodists may not be pleased to see how plain and unpretending, and sometimes narrow, was our first and, in many respects, our greatest Bishop, it is a fact that his Journals show him so. He was not the less great because he had weaknesses, and the man of modern times who will read the story of his life without a blush of shame that he does so little, must be a worker of unusual diligence. I have aimed to make the book as short as it could be justly made, that it might find a larger circle of readers. I will send it to anyone by mail, postpaid, for $1. The catalogue price will be $1.25. If it does not give satisfaction, I will refund the money. It can be ordered from Nashville, or from our colportage agents, or from me at Macon, Ga.

I am sorry that the present generation of Methodists puts so low an estimate on Methodists of the olden time, and are too often disposed to look with some degree of contempt upon them. They knew the name of Asbury, and that is about all they do know, and yet this same gardener's son did more for America than any one man who ever lived in it. He was born in Staffordshire, England; never went to school after he was twelve years old; was a saddler's apprentice; became a traveling preacher, traveled five years in England, came to America at twenty-six years of age, and toiled here unceasingly till he was seventy-two. He had a respectable knowledge of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew; had read largely in theological and historical literature; traveled about 5,000 miles a year, preached every day, crossed the Alleghany Mountains over sixty times on horseback, directed the work of the church from Canada to Louisiana, never had a selfish feeling, and never knew any fear save the fear of God. He gave up everything for America and Christianity, and, a lonely old man, sank into his grave, worn out with incessant toil. This is a short summary of the history of this wonderful man. He ought not to be forgotten. He stands side by side with Luther, Calvin and Wesley, and in many respects is the equal of any of them.

Writing about books, I see one of your correspondents notices favorably, and not too favorably, Bro. Wadsworth's new book. It is worthy of all praise, and reflects high credit on the author; and it reflects the highest credit on the Publishing House, which does as cheap and as handsome work now as any house in the land. I suppose it is hardly needful to commend to your readers the companion book to this by Bishop Galloway. With these two books side by side with Bishop Marvin's, we can see the East and the progress of Western civilization.

I see my dear friend, Dr. Allen, has won fresh laurels for his honored brow by his last book, "History of the War between China and Japan." He has always been highly esteemed by the Chinese, and this able and candid book has won their highest plandits. I reckon, however, as it is in Chinese, it will have but a limited circulation in this country.

We are in the hottest political campaign, and men without a nickel in their pockets are talking learnedly about the evils of the one standard, and the other party just as impecuniens about the evils of free coinage.

Our election to the Legislature engrosses much attention. We hope to shut up the bar rooms by legal enactment, and the liquor men hope we won't, and we are doing our best and they are doing theirs. Two very clever men are running for governor, but both are willing to sign the bill if it passes.

The daily papers are all against us. The weeklies are, many of them, for us. What will be the result we will see in a week. If money or fraud can defeat us, we are defeated already, for the beer makers and whisky sellers will spare no money and hesitate at no fraud to carry their ends. GEO. G. SMITH.

Letter from Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE this morning your name, and so many others that are familiar to me, had such a good, friendly home look that I feel tempted to try your patience by inflicting a letter upon your readers.

I was especially glad to see the notices of the fine openings of so many Mississippi schools, in all of which I feel an especial interest. While I have for six years been connected with colleges in Tennessee, "my heart turns back to Dixie" often, and the many and dear friends I have there. I am at Martin College, Pulaski, Tenn., and as we have numbers of patrons among whom your good paper circulates, I feel sure that they will be glad to hear of its splendid opening and fine prospects for the future. Pulaski enjoys the distinction of never having had a boom, nor an epidemic, and is one of the most prosperous cities in Tennessee. Nature has lavished her gifts unsparingly upon this favored region, and everywhere the eye rests upon a landscape as fair as that of Sunny Italy. Around Martin are hills of majestic beauty, streams of sparkling water flowing through green valleys, and over all the blue, transparent sky—the fountain of an atmosphere so pure as to instill new life into all who breathe it.

The college itself is one of the best-planned and best-proportioned buildings I have seen anywhere. It has all the modern conveniences that render life so luxurious—hydrant water, electric lights, bath-rooms, wide corridors, and galleries above and below of the old-fashioned kind, suited to the warmth of our Southern climate. "No pent-up Utica" confines our girls to brick walls and narrow pavements for exercise. The beautiful campus of eight acres, covered with magnificent oaks and maples, gives them ample room for exercise in good weather, and the broad galleries prove an excellent retreat when the rain drives them in.

Although the unprecedented drouth seemed for awhile to paralyze the energies of the people upon whom schools depend for patronage, it has been evident from the opening, one month ago, that Martin College was to have its capacity for room tested to the utmost this year; and now, at the expiration of thirty days, nearly every room in the main building is occupied, and the three-roomed cottage on the campus also comfortably filled. If the trustees had not pledged themselves so thoroughly to "more room" when needed, there might be cause to fear that the number of boarding pupils had reached its limits; but with the magnificent endowment fund at their disposal, any improvements or additions to the college will be made when needed, and there will always be "room for one more." Dr. S. N. Barker, the new president, and his wife, a Mississippian "to the manor born," have already shown that the college under their active administration will take a new lease on life, and claim a front place in the ranks of Southern Methodist schools. There is an unmistakable religious, Methodist tone about the school that speaks well for the influence that it is destined to wield upon the future lives and characters of the girls. A girls' Sunday-school, missionary society and weekly prayer meeting were among the first organizations effected, while later on two flourishing literary societies have been organized in the interest of belles lettres and the fine arts. The music department, under the directorship of Prof. Zenberg, of Germany, is attracting considerable attention in this section, and Martin College bids fair to become a musical centre of no mean repute. The other departments are in the hands of specialists, each trained for her work; and among the entire faculty of twenty officers and teachers employed, I do not think there is one who is not above the average in capacity. Mrs. Gilmer, the matron, who is well and favorably known in Mississippi, presides over the dining-room and dormitories in a most satisfactory manner, and the girls find in her a kind and sympathizing friend.

Mr. Peebles, the pastor of the Methodist Church here, is untiring in looking after the spiritual interests of the college girls, a number of whom have already deposited their church letters with him. The pastors of the other churches have also shown great interest in the school, and we have frequent visits from them. We hope that among other clerical visitors we may some time during the year have a visit from the editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, whose paper comes to us weekly. I do not know, dear Doctor, any better "food for thought" for young or old than your sermon on the "Immortality of the Soul," and I would not only take pleasure in recommending it as such to my psychology class, but would take great pleasure in listening to it again myself.

With best wishes for yourself and paper, I am,

Sincerely, MARY V. DUVAL.

Martin College, Oct 2 1896.

Selections.

Booker T. Washington.

Mr. Booker T. Washington, the colored founder and president of Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, is beyond doubt the foremost living man of his race, and one of the most useful and notable men in America. He has more clearly worked out a system of education that is adapted to Southern conditions than any other man who has attacked the problem. His special work, of course, is the application of this system to the requirements of his own race; but it is no less applicable to the conditions of both races in the South.

How he came to work out the system that is in such successful operation at Tuskegee, Mr. Washington tells in an article in the September Atlantic Monthly, in which he explains more fully than he has before explained the philosophic and economic basis of the Tuskegee system. Since it was part and parcel of his own intellectual growth, a good proportion of the article is autobiographical.

After a narrative of his own awakening, he explains how the Tuskegee school unfolded itself—beginning with nothing but a teacher and a few pupils. The economic fallacy that lay at the foundation of slavery—a fallacy as applied both to the master and to the slave—was its discouragement of thrift. A lack of thrift was a necessary part of the philosophy which regarded manual labor as degrading.

The starting-point in the elevation of the negro is to teach him the economic and moral value of thrift. The first step, therefore, is to work out of the universal bondage of a credit system—which, with the population of the Black Belt, became a debt system—to quit "lihin' in de ashes," as one of the visitors to Tuskegee expressed it.

The revolution in education, in practical affairs, in morals—the regeneration, in fact—that has come from the application of the practical system that has brought this about in this section of Alabama, is as inspiring a chapter in the "care and culture of men" as can be found in the annals of our educational life.

It was this revolution—by discovering a method of wide application—that made it especially appropriate that Harvard should confer an honorary degree on Mr. Washington. Not yet past forty, and with the best part of his life before him, his work, as he explains it in his Atlantic article, will give him a secure and historic place among the builders of American civilization.—Exchange.

The up-to-date Christian is one who is fully alive to God's calls upon his time, means and service, and responds to them to the utmost of his ability, while keeping his soul in warm and lively contact with God in secret communion and in holy ordinance.—Presbyterian.

The Curfew Law.

Edward W. Bok, in the September Ladies' Home Journal, reviews the provisions and operations of the Curfew ordinance, which, in variously modified forms, has been adopted by municipal legislative bodies in the West. He gives hearty endorsement to the law, and asserts that, although it met with general opposition at first, there is not a city or town in which it has been enforced that would have it abolished. "Wherever the Curfew ordinance has gone into effect," Mr. Bok contends, "its advantages have been conceded. This is true now of over 300 towns and cities, some as large in population as Omaha and Topeka. In each case the excellence of the law has become apparent, opposing parents have conceded its wisdom, and even children are said to be pleased with it. It has placed in the hands of the police a most effective weapon for clearing the streets of hoodlums at night, and in many cases where disorder reigned at street corners, quietness, law, and order now prevail. So well has the ordinance worked that reports, gathered from not less than forty of the towns where it is a law, show that the fine or imprisonment-penalty has not been inflicted in a single case. The first caution has served the purpose. These reports show, too, that the ordinance is not enforced in any oppressive manner. In the case of evening Winter or Summer entertainments, which would keep the children out later than the Curfew hour, authority is easily obtained and readily granted by the mayor or town official for an extension of the time. Its rigid enforcement is applied most strictly to the hoodlum element, and with this class the police claim they have never been able to deal so successfully. It will be at once obvious to all right minded parents, I think, that they should give the weight of their influence to the Curfew ordinance wherever it may be presented. . . . Taken from any and every standpoint, it is an excellent thing, and it may wisely be encouraged by parents all over our land."

Clerical Unwisdom.

The fearfully-congested condition of the Conferences has caused the premature retirement of some able men and the unequal appointment of others. And yet men of no adequate preparation have been admitted on trial. This is ecclesiastical hari-kari. There is no need to rush into the ministry. The increment of unprepared men hinders rather than helps the efficiency of the Conference. Every young preacher should give himself the best chances of success. None of them but can complete the double course, if he will. Colleges almost bid a premium for students, and theological seminaries offer every inducement. There is no grade of appointment that would not be better served if its pastor were thoroughly educated. Some non-graduates far surpass some graduates in the same grade of appointments. But the same men, if educated, would surpass themselves. Besides, such men are exceptions. All the rest limp from start to finish. They are ent-classed. The charges open to them are increasingly few and weak. They are a burden to themselves, and twice a burden to presiding elders and the Bishops. They keep out better men. Let them become thoroughly prepared, and no better men are required. The competition becomes stronger yearly. Unless the poorly equipped band together to drive out the well equipped, the force of ministerial gravitation will hold them down to the most undesirable work. If this falls under the eye of any such, we entreat him, as a younger brother in Christ, to arrange even yet to attend one of our schools. "Well begun is half done."—Western Advocate.

TAKE IT TO THE LORD.

BY MRS. J. B. DALL.

Grand advice for sorrow's healing
In each gentle, tender line;
Is he not the Great Physician,
Soothing any wound of thine?
Come, accept the "healing waters,"
Ye, who many burdens bear;
If ye weary of the struggle,
"Take it to the Lord in prayer."

"There's a fountain" for your cleansing,
Would your soul be white as snow?
"Seek and ye shall find" was written
By the saints of long ago
Angel harps methinks are tuning
On the shores of "Over-there;"
In melodious message simple,
"Take it to the Lord in prayer."

Inspiration from the angels
Come with songs we love so well,
And the music beat and sweetest
In the old songs ever dwell;
For they suit the saint or sinner
In the language plain they bear;
Rich and poor may share the blessing
When they go to him in prayer.

Suiting life in any station,
Comfort in all times of woe;
If you need the Great Physician,
You have but to tell him so.
Ye, so richly blessed with plenty,
Swell that anthem on the air;
And ye lowly, poor and humble,
"Take it all to God in prayer."

As to Brother Streater's Views.

In this week's ADVOCATE appears an article from the pen of my true and tried friend and brother, J. B. Streater, on the question of reducing the number of presiding elders' districts in the North Mississippi Conference, which I have read with interest. To some things, however, in said article I feel it my duty to except.

I wish, in the first place, to say that the position I take on this question is not influenced in the least by "fear of offending the presiding elders." Some years ago I wrote an article on this same subject in which I advocated smaller districts and a Sabbath to each Quarterly Conference in every charge, and it did not occur to me that my views would please or displease the presiding elders. And I think I am one, in this respect, of a vast majority, if not all, of our manly Methodist itinerants. Perhaps my good friend did not mean all that those words seem to convey. Complaint is made in the article under review that our connectional and other assessments "are becoming burdensome." This has led me to investigate somewhat this financial question. I have taken the Minutes of 1885 and those of 1894 (my Minutes of 1895 having been loaned to a friend), and have instituted some comparisons.

1. In 1885 our membership, including the local preachers, paid for the support of the ministry, per capita, $1.69; in 1894, $1.61; showing a falling off of eight cents per capita. In 1885 for support of the ministry and Conference collections, per capita, $2.03; in 1894, $1.94.

2. Or take the assessments of these two years for all these claims and we have the following figures: In 1885, per capita, $2.48; in 1894; $2.27.

Looking at these figures, one is moved to ask, Where is the increase of financial burden?

The difference between salaries is very slight. In 1885 the salaries of eight presiding elders averaged $942.25; but there were then but 116 pastoral charges; in 1894 nine presiding elders' salaries averaged $979.35, from 133 pastoral charges. So also of pastors' salaries in 1885, average, $427.50—in 1894, $446.37. All of which would indicate that very little change, and that for the worse, has taken place in the finances of our Conference during all these years.

But the article under discussion says, reduce the number of districts from nine to seven, and we would save "2,057.30 annually—taking last year's statistics as a basis—and this amount would cover about three-fourths of the collection on Conference fund." By which I understand that Bro. Streater would have seven men do the work of nine, and thus in hard work and long and continuous absence from home and opportunities for study, pay what the church in our bounds is abundantly able to pay without feeling it. But suppose this $2,057 saved in that way, as said in a private letter to this writer, "it would not go on the collections, but be kept in the pockets of the people."

Take another view: Eighty Quarterly Conferences in one district annually means the presiding elder's absence from home not less than two hundred and sixty days in the year. Where then is his opportunity to study and prepare for the pulpit? This done, and my good brother will have to listen to more of the sermons he has rated so low.

In considering difference between salaries of presiding elders and those of pastors, it must be borne in mind that the disparity is because of two facts: (1) Quite a number of the pastors are single men, and (2) many both single and married are inadequately supported. Knowing Bro. Streater as I do, I am safe in saying that he would not have presiding elders brought down to the poor living of these unpaid pastors, but would make the support of the latter more generous.

Again, as to the hard-working classes in our membership, the private letter already referred to says: "'Nine-tenths of our membership' do not have to labor any harder than nine-tenths of our preachers; and the proportion of 'lazy preachers' does not exceed that of the membership," and that "the plan contended for would make presiding elders little else than tax gatherers."

It is to be regretted that there is a tendency in this day to place small value on the presiding eldership. At some points in our Conference—city charges—already rumor hath it that the presiding elder is not wanted on the Sabbath—let him come in the week and hold the Quarterly Conference.

Now, I have written from a wholly disinterested standpoint, for there is not the slightest probability that I shall ever be a presiding elder; but I will say in closing this paper: Let the number of pastoral charges in each district be reduced to twelve instead of raised to twenty; let our strongest and best men be put in the office; let them hold each and every Quarterly Conference so as to embrace a Sunday; then let them be at home and in their studies during the week, and prepare for the pulpit and plan wisely and well for the work.

This, in the end, will prove to be vastly better than going all the time and in haste from point to point with no opportunities for such preparation.

Piney Grove Church.

A HISTORY OF SIXTY-EIGHT YEARS.

About twelve miles northeast of Columbus, Miss., fronting the public road, stands a new Methodist Church, complete in all its appointments, with stained glass Gothic windows, carpeted aisles and chancel, neat pulpit and new organ. This is "Piney Grove" Church, Columbus circuit, Columbus district. This new, tasteful house of worship is due, in great part, to the enterprise and liberality of Capt. E. C. Leech, a loyal Methodist and influential steward of the circuit. Capt. Leech was ably seconded by Mr. Park Tunnell, the chief builder, and a Campbellite, who ought to be a Methodist. Many others lent a helping hand, and aid was had from the Board of Church Extension in the erection of this temple of worship. It was dedicated in May, 1892, by Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., a former presiding elder.

Piney Grove Church has a history extending now through sixty-eight years. Soon after the dedication some interesting items in its history were gathered up and placed in my hands, and should have been published before this time. It was organized in 1828, and, hence, must have been under the jurisdiction of four Annual Conferences — Mississippi, Alabama, Mobile, and North Mississippi, its present Conference. It has been in three or more circuits —Buttahatchie, Yellow Creek, and Columbus, and in two or more districts—Tuscaloosa and Columbus.

The few scattered members among the early settlers held their first meetings in private houses and log school-houses. The first society was organized in 1828, as before said, in a log school-house about a half mile from the site of the new church. Services were held in this house until 1835, when through the efforts of Rev. Felix Wood another log house was built, near the present residence of Capt. E. C. Leech, and used as a church and school-house until 1838, when the old frame church was erected not far from where the new church stands.

Among the first members and organizers of Piney Grove were Dr. Booth, Henry Brown, Reuben and Elijah Sanders, Roddy Smith, Stephen McReynolds, William Belk, Felix Wood, and Stephen Tunnell, all local preachers.

Sixty-five years have passed away. All the old members have gone to the church above, except Sister Lockey Davis, who lives in Northport, Ala., now in her ninety-first year, yet still active, industrious, respected and loved by all who know her.

This record was made in 1892. Including the local preachers, who were among its first members, nineteen preachers have gone out from Piney Grove. The people of Piney Grove feel a laudable pride in their elegant house of worship, and love to assemble themselves together in its sacred walls. Capt. Leech, who lives near by, gets all possible extra service out of his pastor and presiding elder. A current saying represents him as watching the public road and hailing the passing stranger, if of clerical appearance, on the lookout for an occasional sermon. This may be only a little pleasantry at the Captain's expense. But his house is a preacher's home, and it's certain that the preacher who goes about him, if of the right complexion, will have opportunity to get off his best sermon, and to do as much of that kind of work as he can. We commend his methods, by the way, to Bro. J. B. Streater. Adopting them, Bro. S. might not find occasion to complain of preachers lying around idle.

The Sunday-school at Piney Grove is evergreen; weekly prayer meetings are kept up; the young people have frequent gatherings for song service, and the choir, in excellent music, good time, spirit, and melody, surpasses many. Such a church, built near the public highway, can but impress the passing stranger and the home-seeker favorably with the people who built it. It is a recommendation to the community. Columbus circuit rejoices in other churches of like appearance and comfort. The time for log meeting-houses and rude, uncomfortable churches has passed away.

Make your houses of worship, not only comfortable, but attractive, and the people will delight to come together in the courts of the Lord. We rejoice to note progress along this line in many places throughout our Methodism, but there is still room for improvement. The records of Piney Grove Church show, in almost, or quite, unbroken succession, the names of its preachers, from the first pastor and presiding elder in 1829 to the present time. These we may give in another paper.

"Some Things I Don't Like."

Under the above caption I find an article, in the ADVOCATE of Oct. 1, which contains a few things that "I don't like." Perhaps it is owing to the fact that I am one of those unfortunate choir leaders, so severely criticised by Bro. Rex a few weeks ago, and again by Sister "C." of the above date. I know that the good sister meant nothing personal when she wrote the above-mentioned article, nor did the good Bro. "Rex" either; only he happened to step out of his wading bath, and before the blood had time to warm his feet he sat down just a little too close to a good brother just as he responded a hearty "Amen." That grated on the good brother's sensitive nature.

Now, there are some things I like about a choir and new song books. I like a choir to lead the congregation in singing; I like new song books because, as Sam Jones says, "The songs go and carry the people with them." Choir leaders have been forced to the necessity of taking books with them wherever they are called because of the scant supply of books usually on hand. I have begged and insisted on the congregation singing, and have had ministers to request them to join in singing, and yet they would not even join in singing such songs as, "Lord, Revive Us," "There is a fountain," etc. What reason they had I do not know, unless, perhaps, as Sister C. suggested by her remarks about dress, that they are too busily engaged in noting if Miss A had her "bangs" fixed right or Miss B's. "lace" was exactly correct and up to date, or whether Mr. C had on the same tie that he wore at morning service.

I like just criticism, but I think, that in order to this, one should have at some time occupied all the positions on the line. For instance, when good Bro. "Rex" gets the Holy Spirit in his soul in such a measure as to fill his whole being, then perhaps some one will be criticising Bro. "Rex" for his responses; and I would suggest in event Sister C. should conclude, as a matter of speculation, to write a "modern hymn book," "without sense or meter," that she would be forced to the necessity of opening a very third-rate book store in order to dispose of her production. It is indeed gratifying to know that Sister C. had the pleasure of catching at least one word of the song, if it was half murdered. I, too, as well as Sister C., claim that if singing is a part of the worship, the people who feel the Spirit are the ones to do the singing, or at least a part of it; and I have always found that those who felt the Spirit did sing, time or no time.

In conclusion, I wish to state that what I have written is done with the kindliest feelings, and a desire to put us "choir leaders" in proper attitude before the public; also if camp meeting associations, or pastors of churches, would provide themselves with song books of any kind that they might wish, there is not a choir leader in the land that would have the temerity to suggest a change. In regard to responses from the pew, I will say, God bless you Bro. "Rex," Sister C. You can never stop that as long as God fills the hearts of his children with his Holy Spirit.

Quarterly Reports.

Prompt attention has been given the forwarding of our quarterly report. You will see we have sent over one-half more than our delegate to Natchez promised. Have many other societies done better, or as well? Doubtless, some have done better, but we trust none have fallen behind us. Forgive us if we are a little proud of the success of our efforts. We are encouraged to press onward to yet greater results, having the inspiration of a sincere love for the Master's work to impel us.

We have two more subscribers to the Evangel already, and hope next week to increase the number to ten or fifteen more.

We had quite a delightful occasion of our missionary tea on Aug. 28, the most pleasing feature being the neat little sum realized thereby. It even exceeded our expectations.

Having executed our first and most binding pledge (providing for Miss McNemar), we now continue the march, keeping time to the battlery of $100,000.

With reference to the pledge of $200 by our representative at the Board meeting, she said:

"We take so small a sum as our minimum, hoping to reach beyond it and swell the amount to a considerable extent. You can rely on Capitol Street Church to raise a nice little sum towards it.....

"We are always in a hurry to see our delegate from our annual meeting. We are eager to learn of the new work, and how much she has promised towards promoting it.

"Then, in the heat of enthusiasm we begin at once to form plans for raising the required amount. We fear if we loiter along until Autumn's blasts and Christmas holidays overtake us and chill our zeal, we will come out in the race as did Æsop's tortoise. Our placard reads, 'No drones admitted.'

"Hoping again to have the pleasure and benefit of your inspiring presence at our little assemblage gathered together in Christ's name and for his cause, I will now close, with a 'God bless you! Pray for us.'

"A. E. LAWSON."

"P. S.—Since you were here I have received an interesting communication from Dr. J. B. Fearn, of Soochow, China. Adult members of society, 27; honorary, 2; new members added during quarter, 1; average attendance, 10; amounts collected for dues, $5; Conference contingent fund, 60 cents; auxiliary contingent fund, $3.50; special work, $15.25. Total collected during quarter, $24.35; remitted Conference treasurer, $20.85. Number of subscribers to Woman's Missionary Advocate, 10; Evangel, 17.

A. L."

Mrs. Chatfield: "First quarter's report shows: 53 auxiliaries, about 1,000 members; 6 organized since annual meeting, 150 new members; 10 juvenile societies, 135 juvenile members; life members, 37; 9 children clothed. Subscribers to Little Worker, 125; Woman's Missionary Advocate, 130; Evangel, 300. I failed to get full reports from three or four district secretaries, but give it based upon those received and report of others given at Conference. I think it nearly correct. Hope by the next quarter to have all in perfect understanding about blanks. Leila McNemar is well, and doing well at the Scarritt Bible and Training-school."

Mrs. C. H. Cope, Paulding: "We have all four of our auxiliaries in live working order. Our Little Builders meet the first Sunday in each month; Little Workers, the second; W. P. and H. M., the third Sunday, and W. F. M. S., the fourth Sunday. The last-named has a larger membership and is better attended."

Burtonton auxiliary (Burtonton and Carlisle), $10 raised for McNemar fund.

With Dr. Polk, medical missionary appointed to our hospital at Soochow, China, sailed a classmate, Dr. Gates, who goes at her own expense to Soochow.

We clip from September number of Woman's Missionary Advocate:

Mrs. McTyeire, treasurer — Dear Madam: Please find enclosed check for $131 for the Wilkins-Hayes memorial fund from the St. Louis Conference Society. There is a pleasing and affecting incident connected with the larger part of this amount. A young girl who cooks for her living, with much prayer and self denial handed the First Church Auxiliary one hundred dollars for the above cause. Were there more like her, how the work of the Lord would prosper! Respectfully yours,

The following incident occurred in a sleeping-car en route to St. Louis from San Francisco, Cal.:

The world outside was covered in snow and ice, and the winds swept furiously through every crack and crevice of the slowly-moving train. 'Twas the second night of the trip, and a baby's cry rang piteously on the night air. The monotonous, irritating sound was sharply broken by the voice of an exasperated, rough old man, as he plunged nervously on his upper berth. "For God's sake, woman, shut that young un's mouth, and let us sleep a little while!" Then came a sweet-voiced, tender answer: "I have been walking him all night trying to quiet him, but he misses his mother, and refuses to be comforted. Her remains are in the baggage-car, and I am taking her baby back to its grandmother in St. Louis." Soon the old man was at the woman's side, and in a husky voice said, "I am sorry I didn't know, for I could have helped you all the way." I don't know but soon the story spread among the passengers, and all were loving and eager in their efforts to relieve the tired little woman of her grieving charge. Thus all around us every day so many "perish for lack of knowledge," and this is specially true in the line of the work in which we are engaged. If we only knew the burdens and the restrictions that hamper our ministers in their blessed work of winning souls for Christ, how gladly we would enter into this work, and do all in our power to uphold their hands, that our Zion may prevail! To know that they are of our thought, care and sympathy, would speed the work of their hands. By providing parsonages would relieve them of a great care, and also make it possible to put more men in the field "that is already white to harvest." MRS. R. R. PARKER.

Cheap Religion.

Things that are exceedingly cheap are often a cheat. The best fabrics require skilled labor, and that which costs but little is apt to be worth but little. A character that will stand the wash and the wear of this world, and be the passport to a better world, is not to be had for nothing. The very word "free grace" may be misleading. Because our Divine Redeemer gave himself voluntarily to his great work of purchasing our ransom by his precious blood, and because he offers salvation to all "without money and without price," it does not follow that a holy character, and heaven, too, are to be had for nothing. Jesus likened the kingdom of heaven to a "treasure hid in a field," and to a "goodly pearl;" neither of them were to be got without paying a good round price for them. The merchant who wanted the precious pearl went and sold all that he had, in order to secure it; in like manner those who would secure the treasures of spiritual blessings in Christ must part with everything that would shut Christ out of the heart.

It is the wretched mistake of many people that they seek for a cheap religion. I have heard well-meaning ministers declare that it is "just the easiest thing in the world to become a Christian." They talked as if a gracious God had provided a free gospel-train, by which everybody who chose to come aboard could be transported on comfortable cushions as "deadheads" to the Celestial City! Such cologne-water preachers utterly ignore that solemn declaration of our Lord, "Whosoever will not take up his cross and follow me, can not be my disciple." They make no allowance either for the stubborn depravity of the human heart, or for the temptations of the devil, or the sin-poisoned atmosphere through which every Christian must fight his way to the prize of his high calling. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate," is the invitation of our Master. He knows what it costs. Pungently, but truly, did grand old Samuel Rutherford say: "Many people only play with Christianity, and take Christ for almost nothing. I pray you to make the seeking of salvation your daily work. If ye never had a sick night, and a pained soul for sin, ye have not yet lighted upon Christ. Look to the right marks; if ye love our Savior better than the world, and would quit all the world for him, then that proveth that the work is sound."

The very first step toward a genuine, solid Christian character is repentance of sin. The keynote of Christ's ministry was "repent!" There was a logical necessity for this; for no man can cleave to his sins and lay hold of Christ with the same hand. I doubt whether any person ever makes a strong grip on the Lord Jesus until he feels the need of one who can save him from his sins. No one takes medicine until he realizes that he is sick. When David's eyes had been opened to behold the loathsome depravity of his own conduct, he is not content with any cheap compromise; he cries out with intense earnestness, "Wash me thoroughly from my iniquity." He was ready to be thrown like a filthy garment into the cleansing vat, and to be rubbed and pounded until the frightful black spots were washed out of the fabric of his heart. Thorough repentance is proved by thorough reformation of both character and conduct; the one is what we are, and the other is what we do. Cheap conversions make cheap Christians. The shallow "conversions" that are the outcome of shallow, sensational preaching, commonly end in a very shallow and short-lived religion. Bad habits are not pulled up. Old haunts are not forsaken. The new emotion dies out; but it does not leave a new man. The Holy Spirit has no hand in such conversions; they are a delusion, and end in bitter disappointments. The plant that is set out in the church, "having no depth of root, it withers away." We ministers can not be too urgent in exhorting sinners to flee speedily from their sins to the Savior; but we also can not be too careful in admitting persons into the church. Thorough subsoil conversions make solid Christians; cheap and easy professions end in hollowness of heart and hypocrisy of life.

I fear that there is quite too much cheap religion in our churches. It will not stand the pinch of self-denial. It is very willing to go to church when the weather is fair, when the roads are good, when the music is fine, when the preaching is attractive—and does not tread on its corns. It prates about "liberality" in doctrine and creeds; but when a contribution box heaves in sight it shrinks up, and buttons its purse. Mr. Gough used to tell the story of the glib exhorter who boasted in the prayer meetings that "his religion cost him only twenty-five cents a year." "The Lord have mercy on your stingy soul!" exclaimed the minister. Cheap religion is scrimping the salaries of hard-working pastors, is starving Mission Boards and all Christian charities, and is turning all the claims of Christ with the candle-ends and the cheese-parings. It kills the fatted calf for its own table, and offers the poor "crow-bait" for the Lord's altar. The punishment of all such petty larcenies is that their perpetrators become mere crow-baits themselves, and never taste the joy by which liberal souls are made fat.

Let us be done with cheating that munificent Savior who poured out his life for our redemption! If our Christianity is worth anything, it is worth everything. The closer it cuts up our selfishness the better. The most precious things cost the most; and he is the rich Christian and the happy Christian and the useful Christian who is anxious to have the "pearl," even if he pays dearly for it.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D., in Christian Intelligencer.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. C. F. Staples, Vernon, La.: "We have held several revival meetings on our charge up to date, with more to follow. Bros. John A. Miller, J. M. Alford, and C. R Montgomery rendered us efficient service. We have had between fifty and sixty accessions and conversions, with the church graciously revived and made strong in the faith. To God be all the glory."

Laura L. Chevalier, Vidalia, Oct. 6: "The third Quarterly Conference of the M. E. Church, South, closed Tuesday, Sept. 22, 1896. Rev. B F. White, P. E., held the Quarterly Conference, Saturday, Sept. 19. Sacramental service, Sunday. Revs. W. B. Lewis, B. F. Lewis and M. M. Black assisted Rev. J. White Davis in the protracted services. The congregation was large, the nights beautiful. The different denominations united. All were deeply interested in the services."

Rev. A D. Miller, Hermanville, Miss., Oct. 8: "We have had another meeting at Hermanville Church, Hermanville circuit, Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, and it was a very profitable meeting indeed. The church was lifted to a higher plane, and much good done in the community. Bro. I. L. Peebles, of Meridian, was with us nearly all the time, and did all the preaching while here. He preached about one week, and he certainly did it well. I don't know when I have heard a series of sermons that were better and more to the point. He is a power in the pulpit. The people were perfectly delighted with him. He will certainly find a warm welcome here if he should ever chance to come this way again. May God graciously bless him and his family and preserve his life for many years' service, and may God bless the good people at Hermanville and help them to go forward in every good work!"

B. P. Patterson, Abbeville: "Our meetings are closed. Results: At Abbeville we had sweet spiritual services. Bros. J. W. Dorman and J. H. Smith did the preaching. Mt. Zion attended the Oxford Camp Meeting in full force. Several conversions, church strengthened, Epworth League organized with 20 members. Liberty: Church revived; no conversions. Cambridge: Wild cat routed, sweeping revival, 27 conversions, 19 accessions, and several to the Baptist Church. Anderson: Good services; eight conversions, eight accessions. Harris: No conversions. We have had about 40 conversions on the work, and added to the church 43. Abbeville Church needs a ten days' meeting. May the church here awake to the crying need of salvation for the many unsaved. The battle is the Lord's. Dr. Cameron is in fine spirits! Holly Springs district is moving up. When the roll is called at Greenville we'll be there!"

Rev. B. W. Lewis, P. C., Pleasant Grove circuit, Miss., Sept. 30: "We have been kept so busy this year we have not had the time to make any report of our work. With seven regular preaching-places, and something over five hundred members to visit, our entire time has been spent on the work, with the exception of two weeks spent with our parents at Lake, Miss. From the report given by the stewards and others, the work is in a much better condition, spiritually, than it was at this time last year. There has been a great ingathering of souls into the Master's vineyard. We have gone the round of protracted meetings, and are indebted to faithful services of Bros. H. P. Lewis, J. T. Abney, M Ferrell, B A. Beeson, Henry Gatlin and E. H. Mounger. Have received fifty-nine into the church—two of these by certificate. May the Lord keep and preserve each of them. Infants baptized, ten. Would God Methodists would be Methodists, and bring their children to Christ, that he might bless them. They are very few ADVOCATES taken on this work. I have endeavored to get our people to subscribe for this church paper, but they will not. If we wish to grow and prosper, we must be a reading people. Pray for us."

Rev. J. J. Garner, P. C, Cornerville circuit, Cornerville, Miss., Sept. 29: "The Lord hath done great things for us this Summer, whereof we are glad. We have just closed our seventh meeting. The Lord has been with us in great power in the conviction of sinners, and the conversion of mourners, and in the edification of believers. We have had about seventy four conversions and sixty-four additions to the church. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ! We are very grateful to the brethren who helped us. Bro. Cameron was with us a few days in one meeting, and did some very fine preaching. Rev. M. D. Fly did us some very fine preaching. Rev. Bob Moore, of the Methodist Free Church, rendered us good service. In fact, everybody who loved God seemed anxious to see his cause advance. As singing is part, and a very important one, of divine worship, we should see to it that we have some one to lead the singing that can do the work well. We were very ably assisted at Pleasant Grove by Bro. J A. Bell, a Baptist layman. Bro. Bell is a sweet singer, and so full of the Holy Ghost that he gets right hold of the people at once. I gladly say to any of the brethren that want to employ some one to sing for you, you will do well to get him. His future home will be at Poplar Springs, Miss. To God be all the glory! Pray for us."

Mrs. E. W. Lewis, Woodville, Miss., Oct. 6: "As one of the oldest living members of the Methodist Church in Woodville, I have not been an uninterested observer of the great changes that have taken place in our church within the last year, especially within the last few months. 'The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad.' He has poured out his Spirit upon the church, strengthening and confirming believers in the faith, reclaiming backsliders, and converting the unconverted. Our young men have a weekly prayer meeting conducted by themselves, and the Epworth League is growing in interest. We all know by whose efficient agency the good Lord has accomplished this gracious work. Our zealous pastor, with the aid of the Divine Spirit, has brought it about. I believe Bro. Lewis has been permitted to do more for our church in Woodville than any other man we have had as pastor in my recollection; and I sincerely hope that in the providence of God he will be sent to us next year to be permitted to fill out his four years' pastorate. I was very much pleased to hear the suggestion from the pulpit, a few Sundays ago, that we have a general meeting of the churches the third Sabbath in October, old and young, in a grand rally. Our purpose is to become better acquainted with each other, as well as worship God in the sanctuary. We look for a baptism of the Holy Spirit on that day."

E. Peace, Montgomery circuit, La.: "We have just had a glorious meeting here at Atlanta; lasted seven days. It was a long pull and a hard pull, but God gave us the victory. It was conducted by Bro. Currie, P. C., assisted by Bros. Barr, McCain, Horn and Fontain. Many were saved, and quite a number entered the Canaan of perfect love. There were about 24 accessions to the church, from four years old up to old men. There were some consecrated workers from other appointments, and the preaching was with power. 'They failed not to declare the whole council of God.' We always thank God for men who would preach holiness. There were many children wonderfully saved. They would lead in prayer, pray and talk to old sinners or young sinners, get up and testify; sometimes a number of them would be praying at the same time One little boy 10 years old (a nephew of the writer), Davy Ferguson, was saved, and prayed for his wicked father. Said, if it took his life, to save him. God heard that child's prayer, and struck his father down flat of his back; but he was gloriously saved. Praise the Lord! It was enough to convince an infidel to hear those little children, talking, exhorting and praying; a number of them claimed the blessing of 'old-time religion.' They were taught of the Spirit. God used the children to save the grown people. There were a host of seekers at the altar on the last night of the meeting, some that were just worked up to the fact that they were not at peace with God. Nearly all of several families were saved. Thank God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

LEHERTON AND NEW SALEM

The Lord has greatly blessed this charge during the present year. Seventy names have been added to the roll of membership, 9 infants have been baptized, 17 family altars erected, 6 prayer meetings organized, more than a dozen members have commenced public prayer, more church papers are taken than ever before, a number of Bibles have been sold by the pastor, one church has been built, and one is to be painted before Conference.

The general condition of the work is good, but finances are much behind. Two churches are badly needed where the people are not able to build them, owing to the shortness of the cotton crop.

E S. Lewis, H. P. Crowe, and J. M. Bradley rendered valued help in the Summer revival campaign. To God be all the glory!

M'INTOSH AT ROLLING FORK.

Our town enjoyed a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord from Sept. 9 to 17. Three times a day Bro. Smith led the joyous service of song, and as often Bro. McIntosh preached the everlasting gospel in demonstration of the Spirit and power. Great crowds thronged the tent, which was pitched in the court square. The people came from all directions till the tent showed the largest audience ever assembled in the town to hear the Word preached. There was no compromise with sin in any shape, form, degree or person. The church was revived. Scores were convicted. Many were converted or reclaimed and believers built up in the faith. Thirty-eight joined the churches. Twenty-six to the Methodist.

Bros. McIntosh and Smith won a warm place in the hearts of our people, who will follow them with many earnest prayers. They gave a good collection for "his girls" and a handsome purse to himself, and a pupil for Grenada College, and sent the earnest worker off rejoicing. May God bless him more and more in the great work of soul winning! J. V. PENN.

The One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.
Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

If a door is hung to swing one way, there is no use trying to push it the other way. There is a right and a wrong way to do things. Many thousands of women in America are sick, and would like to be well. They are making efforts to get well, but they are making them in the wrong way. They are taking medicines prepared by incompetent nurses, or inexperienced physicians. They are daily submitting to examinations and local treatment, for which there is generally no necessity. They are growing steadily worse instead of steadily better.
There is no reason why almost every woman should not be well and strong. Over thirty years ago, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, an eminent and successful specialist in the treatment of the diseases of women, discovered a wonderful specific for woman's diseases that has since become world-famous as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It cures all forms of female weakness and disease. Its effect is immediately perceptible in the better feeling of the patient. It forces out impurity, soothes the inflammation that is always present in disorders of this kind, promotes regularity, and stops debilitating drains on the system. It cures nervousness, irritability, sleeplessness, lack of appetite, lack of vitality.

GREAT MEDICAL BOOK FREE.

Every woman should have a copy of Doctor Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It is a handsomely illustrated volume of a thousand pages, several chapters of which are devoted to the reproductive physiology of women. It is written in plain language, and contains over three hundred illustrations and colored plates. Until recently, it was sold at a dollar and a half a copy, and at this price, it reached the tremendous sale of six hundred and eighty thousand copies. It is now offered, paper-bound, absolutely free to any woman who will send twenty-one cents in one-cent stamps to cover the cost of mailing only to World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. If handsome, substantial, French cloth binding is desired, send ten cents extra, thirty-one cents in all.

Sociology.

Sociology, sociology, sociology! It is the reigning fad. To study social conditions for the sake of learning how to help the needy is all right. To talk about the "submerged" and to go slumming, so as to be able to render more intelligent and practical help, is commendable and good. But to read and talk and theorize and debate about "the masses" simply because it is the reigning rage is worse than silly. We know people who go around lecturing on sociology, posing before the public as leaders of a modern crusade for the social elevation of the masses, who have yet to do their first honest day's work to help people who need helping at home. If all the gilt-edged sociological clubs in the country would adjourn, and their members go out among the poor people who suffer and do something really practical for them, how quickly many social perplexities would vanish!—Epworth Herald.

Ridicule a Poor Weapon.

Nothing is easier than ridicule; and in nine cases out of ten where ridicule is used, it is resorted to only because it is the only weapon available. The man of intelligence will use his reason in the argument with his opponent; the man of knowledge will use his knowledge; but the man who has neither knowledge nor intelligence must resort to ridicule. It is a poorly furnished armory which supplies no better weapon.—Sunday-School Times.

S. S. KEENER, Sec.

Difficulties are blessings in disguise.

Some people save their kind words to be engraved on a tombstone.

Growling does not pay; singing does, whether it is done audibly or only in the heart.

The devil does not care how lofty our professions are. It is holy living that hurts his kingdom.

He was a wise man who said, "The duties of home are a discipline for the ministries of heaven."

The present opportunity once departed will ne'er return. "Be wise to-day; 'tis madness to defer."

Many men would be very glad to have truth on their side who are not at all anxious to be on the side of truth.

"The trivial round" and "the common task" afford divinely given opportunities for the development of the Christian graces.

It is better to read one book slowly and thoughtfully so as to digest its contents than to read a thousand in the modern slapdash style.

A word once spoken can never be recalled. How careful, then, we ought to be to speak words that will be helpful, not harmful to our fellowmen.

Every true Christian puts into the world a little more of spiritual life and power than it had before. Are you a Christian according to this test?

Jesus of Nazareth lived the doctrines he taught. If all who teach in the pulpit or elsewhere would do the same, the cause of Christianity would receive a tremendous impetus.

Transfiguration glories are well in their place; but in the very nature of things they are transitory. We must come down from the mount and glorify God by serving humanity.

A one-talent man may accomplish much by concentrating his powers on one thing, while the five-talent man will accomplish very little if he disperses his energies over many things.

Some people who claim to be disciples of Christ do not hesitate to violate his commands whenever those commands come in conflict with the conventionalities of fashionable society.

The biggest sham on earth is Sunday religion. If Christ is not with you amid the activities of business life during the week, then your claim that he is with you in the sanctuary on Sunday is a fraud.

What Ails the Man?

We can allow the very doctrines which distinguish us as a church, and which are the mud sills underlying our ecclesiastical fabric, to be discredited, renounced and ridiculed by leading ministers in our church, and yet never hear a word of protest from the guardians of our church machinery. But let a preacher among us, however gifted and brilliant and faithful he may be, offend some ecclesiastical dignitary by some indiscreet allusion or expression, and, sooner or later, that man will meet his fate. A subservient church press will begin to hound him; Conference resolutions will pelt his head; finally an august trial is brought forth. Three reverend Bishops preside to add augustness to the scene, and for long days, at a cost of a thousand dollars, the bill of charges—a mere rope of sand—is laboriously gone through with by the magnates, and "guilty" is the verdict. Soberness sits down to read the charges, and, behold! fighting worldliness in the church and the use of tobacco, are among the chief charges which called forth the grave trial.

While this farce is in progress, other D. D.'s are writing against the vital, fundamental doctrines of the church; others failing or refusing to administer discipline to delinquent church members; and thousands of preachers are taking unconverted people into the church; but not a word of protest do we hear, not a citation to trial, not an arrest of character. All this is due to a Romanizing tendency in Methodism. As we drift away from God we tend to exalt officialism, to land power, and trust to machinery instead of God.—Tennessee Methodist.

We clip the above from the issue of Oct. 1, in order to enter our protest against the unfairness, the arrogance, the reckless disregard for facts, which characterize this wonderful utterance. In the first place, it is not true that "we can allow the very doctrines which distinguish us as a church . . . to be discredited, renounced and ridiculed by leading ministers in our church, and yet never a word of protest from the guardians of our church machinery." Methodism remains doctrinally intact.

Some men may not accept Bro. Haynes' statement as to what the doctrines of the church are; but does that constitute them heretics?

Since when has he been the Heaven-appointed interpreter of Scripture and Methodist standards?

When was it ordained of heaven that all men should bow to his dictum?

Such a wholesale charge against the church is unjust and unwarranted by the facts.

His reference to the trial of Dr. Steel is not only a reckless and cowardly assault on the authorities of the church, but an insult to Dr. Steel. Dr. Haynes knows that "preaching against worldliness in the church and the use of tobacco" were not "among the chief charges." The case seems to be lugged in here, just to afford a chance for a spiteful fling at the Bishops. It is an insult to Dr. Steel, because neither Dr. Haynes nor any other man can make us believe that Dr. Steel signed an agreement not to preach against worldliness in the church. That Dr. Steel may have made mistakes may be true, but we positively refuse to believe him capable of surrendering his convictions to a desire for a place.

In the name of the conscientious men who edit the church press, we protest against the arrogance that stigmatizes them as "subservient," because they presume to differ with Dr. Haynes.

It does not require a great amount of courage to abuse a Bishop, because he can not afford to go into print to answer every critic that chooses to assail his character or administration, but to pose as the only and original editor with courage enough to assail a man whose hands are tied, and then sneeringly denounce all who do not as subservient, is simply nauseating.

It is hardly endurable that a man who owes all that he is to the Methodist Church, will spend all his energies in trying to hold her up to the ridicule of her enemies. Nor that a paper that owes its existence to the fact that it is a Methodist paper and the organ of a Methodist Conference, should consecrate its space and time to abusing the church to which it owes its life.

If the purpose is to reform the church, we would suggest to the editor that a correct statement of facts would detract nothing from his power as a reformer. If it is beyond the hope of a reformation, why does he not get out from under a tyranny that requires the surrender of manhood and conscience, according to his statement?

In the name of religion, of truth, of manhood, of decency, we insist that it is time for this ceaseless sinice of sneering invective, of persistent misrepresentation, of unfair and unmanly attack on the church, of arrogant assumption of superior courage and piety, of wholesale disparagement, to cease.

We have written plainly, because we feel strongly. We love the Methodist Church, her polity, her doctrines, and he whose dagger is ever thrusting at her vitals is wounding us far more deeply than if he were attacking us personally. If the church is worthy of his loyalty and devotion, let him hush his growling, or war, if he must war, in a manly and Christian spirit. If it is the corrupt tyranny that he pictures, let him vindicate his manhood by getting out and fighting it from the outside.—Alabama Advocate.

[In the name of Southern Methodism we thank Dr. Andrew for this well-merited rebuke of a species of demagogism that has crept into our church press. The man who asserts or insinuates that the power of our episcopacy and the entire machinery of the church are wielded for the persecution of preachers, because they fight worldliness, is guilty of slander. Such journalism is a disgrace to the church. Its proper place is in the ranks of an unscrupulous political party. Those who write such diatribes against the church, in utter disregard of well-known facts, ought to have the decency to take themselves out of its pales.—EDITOR.]

Well Put.

In view of the hard times some thousands of our oppressed and depressed fellow-citizens, who feel that something must be done, have charitably resolved to take up a six-thousand-dollar collection for the benefit of the circus that is coming to town this week.—Richmond Advocate.

And Louisiana and Mississippi are just as liberal as "old Virginia." If there is a circus in the vicinity of Richmond, whose treasury needs replenishing, just let it come down this way. It will receive a contribution of thousands of dollars in any town it strikes. Hard times may hurt the church collections, but the circus not much.

A Noble Example.

It is said that Mary Amos, an English woman who died recently, raised during her lifetime $50,000 for the Wesleyan Missionary Society. The money was raised a little at a time, day after day, through a number of years, no single contribution exceeding fifty cents. What an a noun of toil does this sum represent! Moreover, Mary Amos was not a woman of towering ubilities; she was simply a modest, obscure, one-talent woman, who did day by day whatsoever her hands found to do. What a noble example!

The Newest Church.

We gave notice recently of the ordination of Ballington Booth. He now gives notice that a number of his co-workers, including Mrs. Booth, will soon be ordained, and that hereafter the sacraments will be duly administered among "The Volunteers." He disclaims any intention of organizing a new church, but it does not take two eyes to see that this will be the final outcome. Well, he has just as much right to organize a church as John Wesley had; and, if there is need for such a church, who of us should say, Nay?

What We Are Doing.

The evangelical churches of the Christian world have 11,574 missionaries at work in heathen lands, besides more than seventy thousand native helpers. The number of converts is considerably more than a million and a half.

Don't misunderstand what the Bible means when it speaks approvingly of contentment. It certainly does not mean that you are to look with complacency or indifference upon evils which it is in your power to remedy. No such contentment ever received countenance from the Man of Galilee.

Every setting sun brings you one day nearer to the end of your earthly pilgrimage. Does it also bring you nearer to your Father's house of many mansions? Does the record of each day in the books above show you more God-like in spirit and more active and efficient in the service of your King?

A New Book.

MODERN MISSIONS: THEIR EVIDENTIAL VALUE. (Cole Lectures for 1896.) By Charles B. Galloway, D. D., LL.D., a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Nashville, Tenn.: Publishing House Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Barbee & Smith, agents. 1896. Price, $1.

We are indebted to the Theological Faculty of Vanderbilt University for a copy of the above-named work. It is a 12 mo. of 240 pages, neatly printed and well bound. The lectures are seven in number under the following titles: The Question Stated, or the Answering Voice of History; Christianity and Other Religious; Portable Evidence from Many Lands; Fruits from Various Fields; The Message of Missions to the Church; Lessons from Some Mater Missionaries.

The preparation of a work like this is no easy task. To prepare a series of lectures on missions in general is not very difficult; but it is a very different matter to prepare seven lectures on one single phase of the subject, and to do this in such a way that they shall measure up to a high standard as a platform performance, while at the same time they possess those qualities which make them worthy of preservation in book form. This difficult task Bishop Galloway has performed in a manner that is alike honorable to himself and profitable to the church. As to literary merit the author's name is a sufficient guarantee. The work is replete with interesting information which, if universally disseminated, would vastly increase our missionary revenues and stimulate missionary activities. We bespeak for it an extensive circulation. Every preacher ought to procure it, and our leading laymen as well.

In the Living Present.

An Anti-Free Mason Congress has recently been held at Muntua, Tyrol. Half of the delegates were Roman Catholic priests. An archbishop presided. Pope Leo sent his benediction. The Hungarian marriage laws, adopted two years ago, were specially denounced. These laws, requiring license for marriage from the civil government, as in our country, detracted from the prerogatives of the old church. Dr. Wekerly, minister of justice at that time, is an enthusiastic Mason.

The Peking Gazette has celebrated its ninth centennial. During that long period only ten editors occupied their positions as long as seven years, while one hundred and three have been beheaded for real or imaginary transgression of existing laws. But, notwithstanding the precariousness of that position, there are always a vast number of candidates for same. Thus it appears that the Chinese do not differ from Americans after all.

Pope Leo deposed the regent of the Catholic University in Washington, Bishop Keane. Ablegate Satolli, who has recently left our country, has reported the deposed as not sufficiently cosmopolitan, and too intensely American. If he had said, "Irish-American," it would have been nearer the truth.

The office of lawyer, it appears, pays best. More than half of our United States Senators are lawyers. In New York lawyers earn annually twenty million dollars—twice as much as the numerous physicians. In that same city all the preachers receive only three million dollars for the same period. It affords us pleasure to note that the contributions for the churches exceed those for theatres and other places of amusement.

A Bishop recently said truthfully, that too many preachers fail to properly ventilate the moral aspects of political issues. That same class were usually those who allowed themselves to be precipitated in the vortex of party politics. A political preacher is a disgrace to the holy calling.

"Be Christ our pattern and our guide!
His image may we bear!
O may we tread his holy steps,
His joy and glory share!"

The Journal of Hygiene holds that excessive use of table salt produces Bright's disease. The same paper assures that the more liberal use of drinking water would prevent complications of the kidneys. Again, that worry is one of the most prolific causes of nervous prostration.

Ex-President Harrison and the present Chief Executive of our country are Presbyterians. The Democratic candidate for that same office belongs to that same denomination. The candidate for Vice-President of that ticket, Mr. Sewall, is an enthusiastic Swedenborgian. McKinley, the Republican candidate, is a Methodist. The candidate for the second place on that ticket, Mr. Hobart, is a Presbyterian. ICH DIEN.

Zion's Herald says the following timely, needed, and sensible thing:

"A revival of true church loyalty seems to be called for. There is less of it in most people than it is good for them to have. The abuse of it in some quarters and in past days has led to a reaction equally dangerous. To magnify unduly the things which separate us is no doubt an evil, but it is equally evil to teach or suppose that there is nothing of any importance that does separate the denominations, that all are equally good since they are working for the same Master, and that it does not signify which one is joined. The easy corollary to this is that one might as well join none, and so avoid making invidious distinctions. Nothing but disaster can come of such a policy. It is simply and positively true that one can best serve the interests of all churches by giving his efforts steadily to promote the interests of some one church."

A prominent educator, in a recent address, laid stress on the fact that people usually succeed in attaining what they really consider worth while. This is strikingly illustrated in the Chautauqua Reading Circle, whose membership is recruited from the busiest mortals the world over. Yet once convince the busy man that he needs the four years' training of the C. L. S. C., and the alacrity with which he adjusts his other plans and self-imposed duties to his new endeavor makes him quickly master of the situation. Few people appreciate that a few months or years of systematic mental training will often open up to them unsuspected powers. It is one secret of the far-reaching influence of the C. L. S. C. that the comprehensive nature of its course, with its historical, literary and scientific aspects, touches humanity on many sides, and so has developed undreamed-of possibilities in many lives.

Interesting statistics were recently put forth showing the relative voting strength of Catholics and Protestants in the United States. One-third of our population, or 20,613,307, are church communicants. Of this number 14,000,000 are Protestants and 6,000,000 are Catholics. The number of qualified voters in this country is 15,137,889. Of these actual voters 3,500,000 are Protestant communicants, while more than 10,000,000 are nominally Protestants. The total voting force of the Catholics is a little more than 2,000,000, or about one-fifth that of the Protestants.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

No power on earth can hinder a man from worshiping God if he so elects. As Jeremy Taylor says, "Every man can build a chapel in his own breast." Paul and Silas had a miniature Pentecost in a dismal dungeon.

NOTES.

Rev. R. H. Wynn is in bed with malarial fever.

In the absence of Rev. F. S. Parker his pulpit is filled by Rev. G. A. Mandeville.

Rev. George Stuart will begin a meeting at Columbus, Miss., on the eighteenth.

Greater New York will consist of forty-five islands. It might be called the Island City.

Bishop Keener preached a good sermon at Carondelet on Sunday morning from Heb. xii, 24.

Bishop Galloway has accepted an invitation to deliver an address in Boston on the negro question some time this month.

At Hotel Royal, in this city, we had the pleasure recently of celebrating the rites of matrimony between Prof. J. B. Barnes, of Houston, Texas, and Mrs. Olivia Barnett, of Hattiesburg, Miss. Prof. Barnes is the principal of a flourishing institution of learning in Houston. Mrs. Barnett is the accomplished daughter of Col. A. B. Avery, of Hattiesburg. The handsome couple have our best wishes for success and happiness through life.

Epworth College had a very fine opening. Its boarding department lacks but a very little of being full.

Michigan has passed a law fixing a heavy penalty upon railroad companies for the employment of persons addicted to the use of intoxicants.

The votes taken in the Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church so far seem to indicate that the women will not be admitted to the General Conference.

The transfer of Dr. S. H. Werlein and Rev. F. R. Hill, Jr., did not materialize. Dr. Werlein goes back to Lafayette Park, and Bro. Hill to St. Paul's Church.

Rev. W. M. McIntosh is now carrying on a meeting at Franklinton, La. The Holy Spirit is present in power. Look for joyous tidings from that quarter.

Rev. J. L. Bowling, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, who transferred to the St. Louis Conference last Winter, has been appointed for the ensuing year to Malden, Mo.

The United States and Great Britain are the two great foreign missionary countries of the world. Of the 1,157,668 communicants in foreign mission churches, Great Britain has 312,297, and the United States 312,252.

We regret to learn that Rev. N. M. Clarke, of the Mississippi Conference, is confined to his bed with malarial fever and jaundice. It is thought that he will not be able to do much work between now and Conference.

Miss Effie Thompson, of Chicago, has been elected to fill the place in the faculty of the Kansas City Training-school made vacant by the death of Miss Holding. She is said to have remarkable gifts as a teacher, and has had special training for this line of work.

The St. Louis Advocate is authority for the statement that suit has been brought against Vanderbilt University for $10,000 by Mrs. Wilson, widow of John D. Wilson, who fell through the shaft of one of the Vanderbilt buildings a few weeks since, and was thereby killed.

The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church is rejoicing over the fact that it has at last liquidated the debt of $100,000, which has long been an incumbrance upon it. May the day speedily draw near when our own beloved Zion can have a similar jubilation!

From Mrs. Junius Hurt, daughter of the late Dr. H. F. Johnson, we learn that her eldest brother, Leander Johnson, died on the twenty-third of August at his home near Hendersonville, N. C. He leaves a wife and four children, the eldest of whom bears the full name of his distinguished grandfather.

Italy has adopted a new system of clock notation, the dial plate having twenty-four instead of twelve divisions. It seems to us that this change has much to recommend it. It would abolish the P. M. and A. M. from our railroad time tables and other chronometrical literature. If one were used to it, it would be easier to say 15 o'clock than to say 3 o'clock P. M. Twenty-four o'clock is less cumbrous than 12 o'clock, night.

Rev. James A. Parker and his family were recently the victims of an assault. His parsonage home was invaded by a party of men and women, most of them church members, and a vigorous pounding was administered. When the invaders left, the occupants of the manse began to wonder if it would not be well to pull down their store-room and build a larger one. All we have to say is, He deserves it; give it to him again.

A short time since Miss Edith Hill, pastor (or pastress, which?) of the First Baptist Church, at Pittsburg, Kansas, was married to Mr. John Callaway Booker, the ceremony being performed in the Methodist Church, by whom we are unable to say. The invitations were sent out in the name of the First Baptist Church. Miss Hill has been pastor of this church for three years, and during that time has erected a handsome new house of worship.

Whitworth College.

It was with some hesitation that I accepted the cordial invitation to preach the opening sermon of the present session of this "time-honored institution." Nevertheless, I enjoyed my visit, and my sermon had the rare merit of brevity. It was a pleasing disappointment to many. Eighty boarders had entered at the date of my last information, and more were coming. President Chambers has done a fine work at Whitworth, and with his present corps of teachers will do better this session than ever before. No college in the State has better accommodations, fare, comfort, or facilities; and its faculty is equal to any. The present session promises great success.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

The auspicious opening of the present session of our college for boys is a cause for joy to everyone who is interested in the welfare of Mississippi Methodism. Of course, we hope to see many more bright boys and young men enter before the close of the term; but especially do we look for a steadily increasing roll of law students. No other institution in the State can compete with the Law Department of Millsaps College, and none elsewhere can offer superior advantages. With Edward Mayes, LL.D., at the head of this department, and ex-Chief Justice Campbell and ex-Attorney General Johnston, and other distinguished lecturers to assist; with the State Supreme Court, the Circuit and the Chancery Courts, and the United States District and Circuit Courts to furnish examples in the practical application of the principles of law and the theories of the lecturers; with the great State Library and the numerous volumes so easily accessible, a law student is afforded every means for thorough equipment.

And the other departments, or schools, are abreast with the one which I have just so cheerfully commended. A Methodist need not pass Millsaps or Whitworth by in search of a college for the thorough education of son or daughter.

Notice.

The services of Mrs. J. P. Campbell, our missionary from Snehow, have been secured for the auxiliaries of the North Mississippi Conference, from Nov. 1–19. She will visit such societies as desire her presence, holding public meetings, etc. Let each society wishing her services communicate with me at once, care of Grenada Collegiate Institute, as I desire to make out her schedule of travel in North Mississippi without further delay. The only expense attached is the payment of her railroad fare from place to place.

A Reply.

I have received several letters of approval of my article on the "Redistricting of the North Mississippi Conference," and have also received two letters of disapproval—one from a presiding elder, and another from one who expects to be a presiding elder some of these days; and I have seen what Bros. Lagrone and Poe had to say on the subject.

Now, I deem it unnecessary for me to say anything more, except to say that I was wrong as to my figures, and Bro. Poe is about correct. I detected this error before the article was published, but it was too late to correct it.

One of my correspondents says: "If your article was not intended for the present or past presiding elders, pray tell me who does the article refer to." I answer this by saying, it refers to whoever the cap fits. I said it had no special reference to any particular presiding elder, present or past, nor to all of them, for it does not fit all, and yet it does fit some of them—not only in the North Mississippi Conference, but in every Conference. I had no desire to mislead anyone or to injure anyone. I only had in view the good of the church, and I believe good will come out of the discussion.

Belated.

A certain individual who seems to be afflicted with the disease technically known as cacoethes scribendi publishes an article in which he expresses surprise that Mrs. Truehart and Mrs. Butler were allowed to speak in Rayne Memorial Church. Poor, benighted individual! It is known to the world that the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society is a part of the machinery of the M. E. Church, South, and that its officials, such as Mrs. Truehart and Mrs. Butler, have as much right to use our churches everywhere as have Drs. Morrison and Lambuth. All Methodists who read their church papers know that Mrs. Hargrove, wife of Bishop Hargrove, makes addresses at the Annual Conferences in the interest of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, which she has the honor to represent in an official capacity. New Orleans Methodists know that she and her husband made addresses together at this same Rayne Memorial Church some months ago. The ignorance of some people is amazing.

Preachers' Association.

The Greenville District Preachers' Association met at Shaw, Oct. 7 and 8. This was the best meeting we have yet had. The attendance was good, the papers were carefully prepared, and some were really of a good order. The fact was developed that even Methodist preachers do not agree as to their own distinctive doctrines. We need more light. Shaw treated us nicely. The association meets next year at Gunnison.

A Pleasant Way to Cure Catarrh.

Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a very pleasant and positive cure for Catarrh, Brochitis, Asthma, etc. It is used by smoking in a pipe. The healing vapor goes directly to every affected spot, giving speedy relief and making a permanent cure. Any reader of the ADVOCATE who is afflicted with any of the above diseases, who will send his name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 12 and 13 Grant Building, Atlanta, Ga., will receive a free sample by mail for trial, which will convince him of its merits; after which he can, if he wishes, get a box containing a month's treatment for $1.

Grenada District Epworth League Conference.

By appointment of Rev. H. C. Morehead, presiding elder of the Grenada district, and Rev. T. B. Clifford, president of the State Epworth League, the Grenada District Epworth League Conference convened in Coffeeville, Oct. 8 and 9.

There had been a beautiful programme arranged for the occasion, covering the entire purposes and object of the League. These had been arranged under several heads, and suitable speakers for each topic. The speakers all acquitted themselves admirably.

Nothing has come to our town that has impressed the people far good more than this. Our young people have all been stimulated and have formed resolutions to be more zealous workers in the future. Our most efficient president, Rev. T. H. Clifford, presided with dignity and to the satisfaction of all.

I am sorry that so many of the preachers and delegates failed to come. I know if they could realize what a blessing this would have been to them, they would have been here. I don't see how any preacher who proposes to keep pace with the movements of the church, and be an efficient pastor, can afford to be absent. The question of this day is saving the young people to the church. When you see the snares laid at every corner and turn in life for the young, and that these are being drawn away by the insidious methods of the evil one, will our pastors and leaders be so unwise as to methods, means and energy as to have the Master to say that "the children of this world are wiser in their day and generation than the children of light?" No, but let them seize the opportunities of the day and "become workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Whitworth College.

Whitworth College is in a most prosperous condition. At this date there are ninety-two girls in the boarding department, and more expected every day. The work in every department is moving along in a manner which promises most satisfactory results.

The two literary societies are flourishing. The "Philolathean" is an old society, but the "Harvey Johnson" was organized this session. These societies are doing all they can to raise enough money to furnish a hall in which to hold their meetings. Carpet, chairs, curtains, etc., are needed at once. Will not the friends of the college and those who hold in sacred memory the name of the late Dr. Harvey F. Johnson contribute something to this deserving cause? Who will be the first? Address, Rev. John W. Chambers, president.

I have received several letters from brethren in the southern portion of the State suggesting that—owing to the extreme drouth, and the failure of crops in this section—the seat of the Annual Conference be changed from Ruston. Permit me to say through the ADVOCATE, once for all, that such a thing has never been spoken of by any citizen of Ruston, or even thought of, so far as I know. Our people are looking forward to entertaining the members of the Conference next December with delight, and are expecting "a feast of fat things," spiritually.

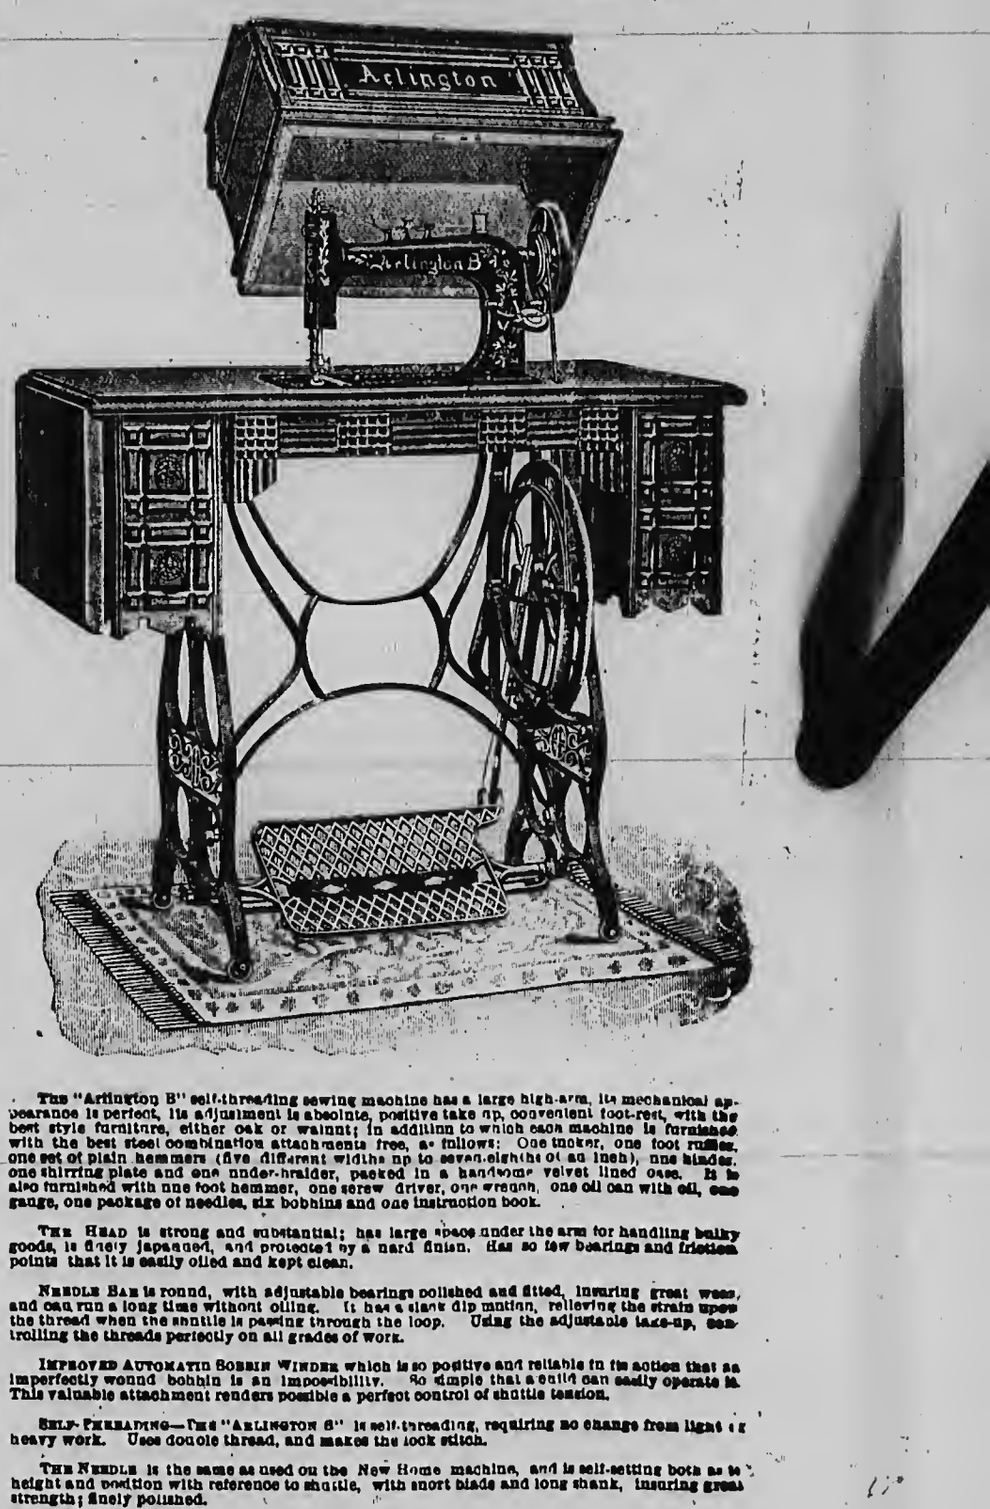
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



THE "ARLINGTON B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great ease, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slow dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change of adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

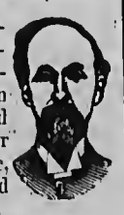
Restored His Hearing in 5 Minutes.

My age is 68. I suffered from Catarrh 10 years. Had intense headache, continual roaring and singing in ears, took cold easily. My hearing began to fail, and for three years was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Everything I had tried failed. In despair I commenced to use Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of Catarrh.

ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

I became very hot from overexertion, which was followed by chronic catarrh of the ears, nose, throat and lungs. I lost weight, became short of breath, had severe cough, continual roaring, buzzing and ringing in ears, my hearing failed, and in a short time could not understand any conversation. I used Aerial Medication in '94; in three months could hear common conversation across a room and a clock tick 30 ft. Can say honestly and candidly I am cured, and have remained well over a year, and my hearing is still perfect.

THOS. J. GLASS, Estill, Mo.



Am satisfied I had consumption; had a distressing cough, profuse expectoration, was reduced in flesh and strength. Used Aerial Medication four years ago. It cured me, and I have been well and able to preach ever since.

"LUCK."

BY EBEN E. REXFORD.

The boy who's always wishing
That this or that might be,
But never tries his mettle,
Is the boy that's bound to see
His plans all come to failure,
His hopes end in defeat,
For that's what comes when wishing
And working fail to meet.

The boy who wishes this thing
Or that thing with a will
That spurs him on to action,
And keeps him trying still
When effort meets with failure,
Will some day surely win,
For he works out what he wishes,
And that's where "luck" comes in!

The "luck" that I believe in
Is that which comes with work,
And no one ever finds it
Who's content to wish and shirk.
The man the world calls "lucky"
Will tell you, everyone,
That success comes not by wishing,
But by hard work bravely done.

On Seizing Opportunities.

Some men never are awake when the train starts, but crawl into the station just in time to see that everybody is off, and then sleepily say, "Dear me, is the train gone? My watch must have stopped in the night!" They always come into town a day after the fair, and open their wares an hour after the market is over. They make their hay when the sun has left off shining, and cut their corn as soon as the fine weather is ended. They cry "hold hard!" after the shot has left the gun, and look the stabledoor when the steed is stolen. They are like a cow's tail, always behind; they take time by the heels, and not by the forelock, if indeed they ever take him at all. They are no more worth than an old almanac; their time has gone for being of use; but, unfortunately, you can not throw them away as you would the almanac, for they are like the cross old lady who had an annuity left to her, and meant to take out the full value of it; they won't die, though they are of no use alive. Take-it-easy and Live-long are first cousins, they say, and the more's the pity. If they are immortal till their work is done, they will not die in a hurry, for they have not even begun to work yet. Shiftless people generally excuse their laziness by saying, "they are only a little behind;" but a little too late is much too late, and a miss is as good as a mile. —Spurgeon.

The Sheep and the Donkey.

"How foolish you are to eat thistles, whilst there is so much sweet, green grass!" said a sheep to a donkey, as they were eating their dinners together side by side, on a common.

"That is a matter of taste," replied the donkey. "I think you silly to eat grass, when you can have delicious thistles."

"But, then, those nasty prickles must hurt one's mouth so," bleated the sheep.

"Perhaps they might hurt yours," said the donkey, "but they don't hurt mine. Nature did not make all our mouths alike. And perhaps I am better off than you, for I can eat thistles as well as grass, and you can only eat grass."

"No! I'm better off than you," retorted the sheep, angrily, "for they give me hay and turnips, and nice things in the Winter; and they work you hard and leave you to shift for yourself."

"Yes, indeed," answered the donkey; "but they'll keep me alive as long as they can, to work for them. And they will kill you and eat you as soon as you are fat enough. I would not change places with you, neighbor. It would not do for us all to be alike."

"Well, I grant that," said the sheep, boastingly. "For when I am dead I shall at least be eaten by men and women; whilst you, and that poor worn-out old horse yonder, that is lame and nearly blind, will be sold as food for cats and dogs. A fine end that, surely."

"I should advise you to check your foolish pride," said the donkey; "and to make yourself happy whilst you are alive. What can it matter to you what happens after you are dead? The horse and I have done our duty by working hard all our lives. And if we were to be eaten by kings and queens, what good would that do us? We should not know it. The great thing is, to do our duty whilst we are alive, and not fret ourselves by imagining what will happen after we are dead. Again I say, we have each of us our appointed work to do; and our duty is to strive to do it, as well as we possibly can."

So saying, and munching a fine juicy thistle, the donkey walked slowly on, leaving the silly sheep to think over what he had said.

The donkey was quite right; it would not do for us all to be alike, or we could not fill the different places providence has appointed us to fill in this world. —Astley H. Baldwin.

No Man Liveth to Himself.

We often hear men say that they can do as they please, for if harm is done at all it is to themselves alone, and no one else has any right to complain. Well, let us see. The pebble flung from my careless hand as I stood beside the lake splashed down into the depths of the water, and that was all. Was it? No, it was not all. Look at those concentric rings, circling one after another over the wide face of the water, rolling their tiny ripples among the sedgy reeds, dipping the overhanging boughs of bush and willow, and producing an influence, slight but conscious, to the very shores of the lake itself. In its length and breadth, and to its deepest depth, not a single drop of water in that lake but has been disturbed and felt the influence of the dropping of that pebble on its surface. This is a common fact which every school-boy knows, and no one of ordinary intelligence will deny.

The hasty word, that word of pride or scorn flung from my lips in casual company, produces a momentary depression, and that is all. And yet it is not all. It deepened one man's disgust at godliness, and it sharpened the edge of another man's sarcasm; it shamed that half-converted one out of his penitent misgivings, and it produced an influence, slight but eternal, on the destiny of an immortal life. How often in passing out from the house of God, where the soul has been deeply impressed by the mighty truths which have been brought home to it, and has been almost persuaded to accept the love of God and the life eternal which he bestows, has some careless, flippant word, it may be from Christian lips, destroyed all the good effect, and thrown the soul back again into its former indifference and peril of eternal death! And yet it was but a hasty, thoughtless word

It is a terrible power that we have—this power of influence, which, for aught we know, may often prove a power of life or death. And it clings to us with a tenacity that can not be broken. We can not shake it off. It is born with us, and grows with our growth and strengthens with our strength. It speaks, it moves, it walks; it is powerful in every look of the eye, in every word that comes from the lips, in every act of our lives. It goes with us wherever we go, and it is impossible for us to rid ourselves of it. We can not live to ourselves. We can not separate ourselves from the influence and consequences of our actions and words. We must either be a light to illumine, or a tempest to destroy. We can not stand alone in any relation. However sad the thought may be that any should perish, it is a sadder thought still that no man ever perishes alone in his iniquity. We are so constituted in our nature, and so placed in our social relations, that it is not possible any man should be able to live to himself alone. We must have an influence, greater or less, for either good or evil. Let us pray and strive that it may be for good.—Christian Work.

Thelwall once said to Coleridge: "I think it is unfair to influence the minds of children by inculcating opinions before they shall come to years of discretion, so they may choose for themselves." Coleridge made no reply, but asked his friend to visit his garden. When inside he said, "This is my botanical garden." "How can that be," asked Thelwall, "for it is all overgrown with weeds?" "O," said Coleridge, "that is only because my garden has not come to the age of discretion. The weeds, you see, have taken the liberty to grow, and I thought it unfair to prejudice the soil in favor of roses, berries and delicious fruits."

It is not yourself only you will serve by the formation of hopeful views and habits; you will be a perpetual cordial and tonic to all those among whom your lot is cast.—Disraeli.

God's Creatures.

Be careful how you treat dumb creatures. I have seen boys catch flies and stick pins in them and impale them to a board or desk, or pull off their wings and legs. I have known boys to tease and worry cats, and finally stone them to death. I once heard of a boy who took a cat to the garret window of a house and threw it out to see if it would fall on its feet. Some boys carry "slingshots" to shoot pebbles at the birds in the trees. Sometimes a man overworks a horse in a cart; the wheels get into a rut; the horse is unable to pull such a load out; but he can not say so, and the man sets to beating him, not with a whip, but with a heavy stick. The horse can not defend himself; he can not even complain of his cruel treatment.

Now, let me give you a good rule: Never hurt dumb animals. Remember they are dumb; they can not speak; they can not complain of your conduct. Their very helplessness appeals to your humanity. Do not abuse them; do not hurt them; and do not let others ill-treat them. They are God's creatures. He made them all; he cares for them all. Remember the words of the poet Coleridge!

"He prayeth well who loveth well
Both man, and bird, and beast,
He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all."

How He Was Helped.

"When a boy," said a prominent member of a church, "I was much helped by Bishop Hamline, who visited a house where I was. Taking me aside, the Bishop said: 'When in trouble, my boy, kneel down and ask God's help; but never climb over the fence into the devil's ground, and then kneel down and ask help. Pray from God's side of the fence.' Of that," said he, "I have thought every day of my life since." Continuing, he remarked: "Sanford Cobb, the missionary to Persia, helped me in another way. Said he: 'Do you ever feel thankful when God blesses you?' 'Always.' 'Did you ever tell him so?' 'Well, I don't know that I have.' 'Well, try it, my young friend; try it, try it. Tell him so; tell him aloud; tell him so that you will hear it yourself.' That was a new revelation. I found that I had only been glad, not grateful. I have been telling him with grateful feelings ever since, to my soul's help and comfort."—Young Men's Era.

There exists a very beautiful custom in Germany, which it would be well to imitate everywhere. On the first day of the new year, whatever may have been the quarrels, or estrangements, between friends and relatives, mutual visits are interchanged, kindly greetings given and received—all is forgotten and forgiven. Let this custom begin with reconciliation to God, then friendship and fellowship may be found that is blessed and lasting.

It is not difficult to get away into retirement, and there live upon your own convictions; nor is it difficult to mix with men, and follow their convictions; but to enter into the world, and there live firmly and fearlessly according to your own conscience, that is Christian greatness.—F. W. Robertson.

But apart from and above all others is the book, the Bible. Alone it has civilized whole nations. Be our theories of inspiration what they may, this book deals with the deepest things in man's heart and life. Ruskin and Carlyle tell us that they owe more to it in the way of refinement and culture than to all the other books, plus all the influence of colleges and universities. Therein the greatest geniuses of time tell us of the things they caught fresh from the skies, "the things that stormed upon them, and surged through their souls in mighty tides, entrancing them with matchless music," things so precious for man's heart and conscience as to be endured and died for. It is the one book that can fully lead forth the richest and deepest and sweetest things in man's nature. Read all other books, philosophy, poetry, history, fiction, but if you would refine the judgment, fertilize the reason, wing the imagination, attain unto the finest womanhood or the sturdiest manhood, read this book, reverently and prayerfully, until its truths have dissolved like iron in the blood. Read, indeed, the hundred great books. If you have no time, make time and read. Read as toil the slaves in Golconda, casting away the rubbish and keeping the gems. Read to transmute facts into life, but read daily the book of conduct and character—the Bible. For the book Walter Scott and Daniel Webster placed under the pillows when dying is the book all should carry in the hand while living.

The New Testament is occupied from first to last—specially the Sermon on the Mount—in showing that acts are nothing except as they are fruits of a state, except as they indicate what the man is; that words are nothing except as they express a mind or purpose.—Maurice.

Education begins at the mother's knee, and every word spoken within the hearing of little children tends toward the formation of their character.—H. Ballou.

The turn of a sentence has decided the fate of many a friendship, and, for aught that we know, the fate of many a kingdom.—Jeremy Bantham.

Some people are always finding fault with nature for putting thorns on roses; I always thank her for having put roses on thorns.—Alphonse Karr.

HYGIENE

The late Henry Ward Beecher said in one of his sermons: "It is not enough to pray for self-control. We must all study the cause of irritability. I have known men who prayed for a good temper in vain, till their physician forbade their eating so much meat. The physician, by the aid of science, revealed to them the cause of this irritableness, and their prayer was answered. It is quite in vain to pray for a tranquil spirit, or a genial, hopeful spirit, when the organs of digestion are out of order." As for fresh air and exercise, it has been well expressed by Thomas Hardy, where he remarks that two people engaged in a dispute, if in a small room, may soon reach the point of insupportable exasperation with each other; when, if both step out into the night and walk alongside, talking, all their late heat dissipates itself, and calmer thoughts come in place of angry ones.

Eat Onions.

Onions are almost the best nervine known. No medicine is so useful in cases of nervous prostration, and there is nothing else that will so quickly relieve and tone up a worn-out system. Onions are useful in all cases of coughs, colds, and influenza; in consumption, insomnia, hydrophobia, scurvy, gravel and kindred liver complaints. Eaten every other day they soon have a clearing and whitening effect on the complexion.—Northern Christian Advocate.

Rest from Study.

The human mind, like a hickory bow, is capable of extreme tension. The mental strain is an important means of education; but to maintain its elasticity, the mind, like the bow, must be unbent. Recreation is as important as study; vacation has an important office as well as term duties. All study and no play makes a dull student. Relaxation, no less than work, is admirable in its time.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE

In one of his wonderful sermons very truthfully said, "My brother, your trouble is not with the heart; it is a gastric disorder or a rebellious liver. It is not sin that blots out your hope of heaven, but bile that not only yellows your eyeballs and furs your tongue and makes your head ache but swoops upon your soul in dejection and forebodings,"—and

OBITUARIES.

DUNN Dr. R. L. DUNN, "the beloved physician," everybody's friend, is dead. Many eyes were wet when the rumor ran through the streets that Dr. Dunn was dead. Scarcely anybody expected anything of the kind, for scarcely anybody knew that he was in any but the best health. To a very few he had said that he knew that he would be called suddenly, and possibly soon; yet none of us really looked for it so soon. In a drug store he complained of feeling badly, asked the clerk for a place to lie down, and began to reel. The clerk caught and lifted him to the counter. In a minute or two he was gone.

I had known him from my boyhood and his young manhood. I knew his father and mother, and the old farm where he was reared. He was my first school-master, and I always loved him. It was in 1837 He had graduated the year before from old Centenary College, and taught a school for boys in Dover, the village near his father's farm, and I was one of the boys, then only eight years old. The next year he went off to medical college, graduating in 1839. He practiced medicine in Yazoo county, where he had been reared, from his graduation until his death, full thirty-seven years, save the years he spent practicing in the Confederate Army, and a very little while on Honey Island, in Holmes county. He went into the army as a private, but his services were soon required to minister as he was so finely fitted to do—to the sick and wounded who wore the grey. When the war was over he returned to his practice in old Yazoo, settling in Yazoo City, where he fell at his post on that bright July morning of the present year.

He was married in 1866 to Miss Stella Gibson, of Natchez, who, with a son and daughter, survives him. He was born in 1833.

He was an official member of the M. E. Church, South, and held positions of honor and trust in the Masonic and other secret orders. He was an exceedingly popular man, though reserved and quiet in manner. As a physician, he was as remarkably beloved for his gentleness in the sick-room as he was trusted because of his skill and his learning. He is sadly missed among us.

I never saw a gentler, more considerate and thoughtful husband and father. His home life was too sweetly beautiful to attempt to portray, and even too sacred.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

CONNELL—ENOCH PRINCE CONNELL was born near Springfield, Tenn., Feb. 12, 1831, and died at his home in Starkville, Miss., Sept. 14, 1896. When he was quite young his father, Hon. John T. Connell, came to Mississippi, and settled in Lowndes county. Here, at the age of thirteen, Enoch joined the M. E. Church. At eighteen he entered the University of Pennsylvania as a medical student, and graduated after four years with the highest honors. He then went to Europe and pursued his studies in Paris and Berlin. Returning from Europe, he began the practice of medicine in Nashville, Tenn., where he became noted as a physician and surgeon. His health failing, he came back to Mississippi, where, in 1860, he was married to Miss Cordelia Lampkin, of Okatibbeha county. In 1861, when the war began, he volunteered, and was assigned to duty as a surgeon in the Fourteenth Mississippi Regiment. After two years' service he had a stroke of paralysis, and had to retire. The last twenty years of his life he lived in Starkville, practicing his profession. In this he gained an eminence second to no man in the State.

His mind was of a noble cast, broad, cultivated, strong. He was pre-eminently a thinker. We have scarcely known a man capable of clearer or more discriminating, independent thinking. His faith in God, in the atonement, in the immortality of the soul, in the great possibilities and noble destiny of the human race, was to him and to others a tower of strength. He was a lover of humanity. He did, proportionately, the largest charity practice of any physician we have ever known. Then he was ready to help in every case of distress. To his church he was liberal even beyond his means. He never spoke evil of anyone. The highest order of character was the result of these fine qualities. Except to minister to the sick, his place was rarely vacant at any of the services of his church. His piety was sincere and unaffected. He is sadly missed.

W. S. HAMILTON.

FUDGE—Died Aug. 6, 1896, JOHN A. FUDGE, aged forty-eight years.

Bro. Fudge was a man who could talk about religion in his shop, and live at about the same rate the year round. His religious temperature was as high during the holidays as in protracted meeting. His blacksmith and shoe shop seemed a consecrated place. Many of the saints in glory will attribute their salvation to the influence of such man as honest, Christian Jno. A. Fudge. He was twice married. A widow, infant son, and two daughters survive. He was an invalid for several months; suffered a great deal, and praised the Lord through it all.

Bro. Fudge often expressed himself ready at the Master's call. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

B. P. PATTERSON.

SHELMIRE—Mrs MARY K. SHELMIRE (nee Williams) was born Sept. 9, 1815; converted and joined the M. E. Church while young; was happily married to Mr. Thos. S. Shelmire, March 28, 1841, and died Aug. 3, 1896, at the residence of her son, Mr. John Shelmire, in Pass Point, Jones county, Miss., near where she was born and reared.

Sister Shelmire was a devout Christian; one who loved God and the church. She was always in her seat at the house of God when able to attend, and contributed liberally to all the enterprises of the church. Her life of devotion impressed those who knew with the fact that there was a divine reality in the religion of Jesus. Her liberality to, and interest in, her pastor was remarkable, always contributing to his support, and doing all in her power to make him happy, and always commanded him to others.

She was sorely afflicted for several months, but never was heard to murmur, believing that these "light afflictions" were for her good and God's glory. Often she expressed herself as "anxious to depart and be with Christ," but was submissive to God's will.

She leaves several children, grandchildren, and a host of relatives and friends, all of whom, I think, "know where to find her," and expect to see her again.

May her mantle fall upon her only living daughter, and may God's blessings rest upon her sons and all the bereaved!

THOS. J. UPTON, P. C.
Zachary, La.

MCCLATCHEY—Mrs. ELIZA T. MCCLATCHEY (nee Ragsdale) was born Dec. 2, 1860; married to Mr. Franklin T McClatchey, Dec. 26, 1878, and died in the triumphs of a living faith at their home in Marshall county, Miss., after a short illness of congestion, Sept. 28, 1896, at 12:05 A. M. She joined the M. E. Church, South, at Marvin, Holly Springs district, in early life, of which she lived a consistent member till the Master called her to a higher seat in his kingdom of light and love. When told that she must die, she called her family and neighbors to her side, bade each farewell, saying that she was ready and not afraid to go, and requested all to meet her in heaven.

As daughter, sister, wife, and mother, there never lived and died a brighter witness to the abiding, saving power of the gospel of Christ. May the grace and faith which enabled her to live and die so well enable her bereaved family to see the rift in the cloud through which her sunny face may be seen again as she watches their homeward footsteps! And may the Holy Spirit strengthen them all, that they may cheerfully prepare the little ones for their bright home and her!

HER PASTOR.

BECK—Departed for the better land, July 16, 1896, ENNICA, daughter of John J. and Mrs. L. A. Beck, aged three years eleven months and eleven days.

Ennica was a bright-faced, intelligent and affectionate child, full of life and joy. While her stay on earth was brief, she had entwined all the heart-strings of her home and community about her fair young life; and now that her childish prattle is gone, the ties are stronger that bind her loved ones to heaven. The parting was sad, but the words, "Good-by," must some time be said by us all and to us all. It was hard to give her up, but it would have grown harder day by day, as we were constantly learning to love her more. The "right time" never comes, if we judge from a human standpoint; so let each loved one say, "My Master's time is mine," and surrender themselves to the will of God.

Sadly is she missed; but if she meets homecoming friends and relatives no more at the gate down here, thank God she waits at the gate "up yonder." God is comforting the sorrowing ones with his Holy Spirit.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures this affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

By invitation of the presiding elder, I recently spent three weeks very pleasantly in the Corinth district, preaching, promoting the Sunday-school cause, and circulating good literature. During the time I visited Gaines Chapel and Jacinto on Corinth circuit; Blythe's, Marietta circuit; Carolina, Booneville circuit, and Booneville and Corinth stations. At the first two named I aided in protracted meetings; the one at Gaines Chapel resulted in great good to the church in several respects, and the one at Jacinto was not in vain. Presiding Elder Tucker was with the "visiting brother" at nearly every place, helping him in the work he represents by words of hearty commendation and exhortation. He recognizes the fact, that in the various lines of church work we are laborers together and should co-operate as true yoke-fellows in a common cause. He does not consider that the prosecution of one special work is detrimental to another, but that in helping another one helps himself. Bro. Tucker is a busy man in his work, both in "overseeing" and preaching. He does not need a larger district to keep himself employed.

One gratifying work that we did was the supplying of several churches and many persons with our Standard Hymn Book. We endeavor everywhere to enforce the disciplinary direction: "In all our congregations let the people learn to sing and to use our own hymn and tune books."

Bro. R. A. Tucker (son of H. R.) is doing good work on Corinth circuit as the successor of Bro. Graves, who had gone to school. He will be an applicant for admission on trial at the approaching session of our Conference. He is a talented young man, and will be a valuable addition to our ministry.

Bro. Sage and his people in Booneville are watching with delight the erection of their new and creditable church-building, the completion of which they expect in the near future.

At the earnest solicitation of Bro. Broyles, I spent last Sunday and Monday at Tibbee, preaching twice and disposing of a number of books. Bro. B. still has to walk with crutches, but he is diligent in his work and is happy over the apparent results of his labors and the riches of grace in his affliction.

The preachers generally are in health and fine spirits. Most of them will appear at Conference in good apparel and with fair reports. Those who began in time and have looked carefully after the collections will be well up with their financial reports. Many will make good reports of revivals and accessions to the church. All these things, notwithstanding the general, long-continued and severe drouth which is yet unabated.

Let all who are indebted to the colporter remit at once. Don't wait till Conference. It is needed now.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Respect the Stomach.

Few people do have proper respect for the stomach. If a thing "tastes good" and is not so hot or so cold as to be painful to the mouth or throat, it is swallowed by too many people regardless of consequences.

Do not give the stomach food that will irritate it or retard it in the performance of its natural functions, or it will retaliate in a way that is decidedly unpleasant. A headache, a "lump" or "heavy feeling" in the stomach, and irritations of the skin, are mostly symptoms of disordered digestion resulting from unwholesome food.

Alum baking powders are responsible for the larger part of this unwholesome food, for it is a fact well recognized by physicians that alum renders food indigestible and unwholesome.

The danger to health from this cause is so imminent that it behooves everyone to adopt precautionary measures to keep alum baking powders, which are now so numerous, from the kitchen stores. It will be found that those powders sold at a lower price than Royal are almost invariably made from alum, and therefore of inferior quality and dangerous to health.

The safer way is to look for the well known red-and-yellow label of the Royal Baking Powder. That is certain to cover a powder free from alum. The Royal is made of cream of tartar, a pure, wholesome fruit acid derived from grapes. It is renowned for adding anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food, as well as for making finer and better food.

Baby Roll.

Our Parsonage and Home Mission Society has recently organized a baby roll, consisting of five names, which we would like published. They are as follows:

Lawrence Lipscomb Paxton, Robert Henry Bingham, Thomas Henry Bingham, Prentiss Nelson and Julien Lee Lipscomb.

Also please publish the name of little Lucie Bryan as a member of the Angel Band Loan Fund.

Thus you see even the little ones are shining as stars in the Redeemer's crown by helping to build homes for his ministering servants.

Making Money—Butter Made in Two Minutes.

EVERYBODY KNOWS what a fortune there is for a man that can sell a churn that will make butter for him in two minutes instead of the long comfy work that the ordinary dasher churn compels. Now any of our readers who want to make money, should write the Queen Butter Maker Co., 21 East 21st St., Minneapolis, for circulars. Everyone who keeps cows must have a churn and now easy it will be to sell such a churn as the above. Anyone can sell five a day and make $50 a month easy. Take it into any farmer's house on churning day and they will not let you take it away after you have once used their butter for them in two minutes. Will. C. Isar, Bellevue, sold five machines the first day and made $12 50, and only worked in the morning; this will give him $75 a week. Any person can do this as the butter Maker sells itself.

Church Dedication.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Rosedale, La., will be dedicated Sunday, Oct. 25, by Rev. J. M. Henry, pastor of Moreau Street Church, New Orleans, La. The public are cordially invited to attend.

WM. SCHUHLE, P. C.

A Money Maker in Hard Times.

I have for the past five years had a pretty hard struggle to make a living, but about three months ago I began selling Self-Heating Flat-irons, and have made from $4 to $5 every day, which I think is pretty good for an inexperienced woman. My brother is now selling irons and makes more money than I do, but he has sold other things and is more experienced. The iron is self-heating, so it is the proper heat all the time; and you can iron in half the time you commonly do and have the clothes much nicer. You can iron out under a tree or in any cool place, and one cent's worth of benzine will do as ordinary ironing, so you save the price of the iron in just a few weeks. By addressing W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburgh, Pa., you can get full particulars, and I know anyone can do splendidly anywhere. We sell at nearly every house, and every woman that irons once with a Self-Heating Iron will have one, as it saves so much labor and does so much better work.

MRS. M. B.

Free Speech Is Better Than Free Silver.

I want to thank the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for publishing Rev. G. W. Randolph's card on stuttering sent to you by Rev. M. F. Leake, of Bartlett, Tenn.; also the St. Louis Advocate, Tennessee Methodist and Nashville Christian Advocate; Bible Reader, of Richmond, Va.; Florida Advocate and Commercial-Appeal; for after reading that letter, as well as one from Rev. J. W. Lowrance, D. D., and ex-Gov. J. M. Stone's letter, I saw at once that Prof. Randolph was no humbug. Accordingly I left my home in Greenville, Miss., and came to see this great voice trainer. I could not tell him my name or where I lived. He first carried me to Dr. W. B. Sanford, a noted physician as well as surgeon of Memphis. This great doctor saw me strain my life nearly out of me while attempting to call my name. He assured me that Bro. Randolph could cure me, as he had witnessed about twenty of his cures. Next he carried me to the Memphis Christian Advocate's office, and in presence of the editor (Rev. Banks) and —— Jordan, business manager, he explained to me his method for the curing of stuttering, and to my surprise I found that I could talk without stuttering. Then I went to practicing in earnest, and now I can talk all right. He is curing every stutterer who comes to him. I do hope you will publish this for humanity's sake. Respectfully,

H. H. O'BANNON.

CHILLIFUGE is guaranteed to cure Chills and Fever. It makes rich blood. Children love it.

According to unofficial, though trustworthy, information received at the Department of Agriculture, the German government has followed up its prohibition of the importation of American dressed beef and live cattle into Germany by a new regulation, which practically shuts out American canned beef from the German markets.

When you feel shaky, Malaria has singled you out as a victim. Take CHILLIFUGE; it will rout the trouble at once.

The United States Post Office has spent $8,127,088 in excess of its receipts during the last fiscal year.

WE HAVE BEEN FRIENDS TOGETHER.

BY CAROLINE NORTON.

We have been friends together,
In sunshine and in shade,
Since first beneath the chestnut trees
In infancy we played;
But coldness dwells within thy heart,
A cloud is on thy brow;
We have been friends together—
Shall a light word part us now?

We have been gay together;
We have laughed at little jests;
For the fount of hope was gushing,
Warm and joyous, in our breasts;
But laughter now hath fled thy lip,
And sullen glooms thy brow;
We have been gay together—
Shall a light word part us now?

We have been sad together;
We have wept with bitter tears
O'er the grass-grown graves where slumbered
The hopes of early years.
The voices which are silent there
Would bid thee clear thy brow;
We have been sad together—
Oh, what shall part us now?

From a Presiding Elder's Wife.

As the wife of a presiding elder, I have read with much attention and interest the recent discussions in the ADVOCATE regarding the size of districts, the presiding elder's work, etc., and I venture to knock at the door of journalism for entrance into print just long enough to express my honest convictions, born of experience, upon the subject under discussion.

It seems to be the prevailing impression that the presiding elder starts out for his appointment Friday morning, preaches at his destination one or two sermons, or, perhaps, three, and then goes home, there to remain until the following Friday or Saturday. Now, of conrse, I do not know the habits of more than one presiding elder; but I want to say that mine, from June to November, spends two-thirds of his time on the district. He begins, as soon as he thinks that congregations are accessible, protracting every quarterly meeting he holds until just time to get home, readjust his wardrobe, and take the train for his next appointment. He preaches, during these meetings, two sermons a day, wears out his voice, his body, his clothing, until, when he reaches home, tired and dilapidated, he is fit for nothing but "tired nature's sweet restorer—balmy sleep." He often does better work, with more satisfactory results, than the evangelist who is so implicitly relied upon by some for revival fires of "the old-time religion," and gets no extra pay for all this—and, verily, he considers it a privilege to have the opportunity of thus working in the Master's vineyard. Sometimes he seems, to my anxious eye, too much fatigued to continue such steady work through the dust and heat of Summer, and I ventnre to suggest that he take a rest, but he invariably answers my remonstrances with the reply that he is doing nothing more than his duty, nothing more that is absolutely necessary to keep his district alive and in good working order. Now, this being the case, I can not see how he could manage any larger district; but this part of the subject I leave entirely in the hands of "the powers that be." My object in writing this is to refute the very erroneous idea that obtains so universally among the people, that presiding elders have nothing to do. I can not think that mine is the only one who thus devotes his time to the Lord's service, and I do agree with Bro. J. A. Poe in his article (ADVOCATE, Oct. 8) that "twelve or fourteen charges are enough to keep any presiding elder busy." I believe, too, that "the presiding elder is the best help that the preacher in charge can get in his protracted meetings," for he is one amongst the people—not an alien, with no further interest in the congregations than to do effectual work while the meeting lasts.

With all due deference to the paid evangelist, he can not possibly have the same interest in the people of the districts as the preacher in charge and presiding elder feel—no more than a hired attendant can feel the all-absorbing interest in a child which fills the parental bosom.

After the whole district has had the benefit of every moment which he could devote to preaching, and the protracted meetings close, then comes the arduous duty of "placing" his preacher for another year. This work causes the midnight lamp to burn, and robs his pillow of sleep. Phantoms of weary toilers appealing for a change; pastors with sick wives necessitating a search for healthier climes; preachers with disgruntled members declaring that they can no longer do efficient work unless removed; frail and afflicted laborers anxious for a work which will not be too ardnous for their strength—these, and many more, haunt his mental vision until Conference approaches, and stills, for a while, the busy machinery which moves a presiding elder's life.

Besides all this, there are sermons to prepare—sermons that will arrest and chain attention; that will carry conviction and awaken not only sinners, but Christians to a fuller sense of their duty. And here let me say, parenthetically, comes in another fallacy equally as absurd as that presiding elders have nothing to do, and that is the popular belief that sermons come to preachers like zephyr-fanned inspirations—no time necessary to prepare them. When laymen are estimating how much a presiding elder gets for each sermon, can they form any adequate conception of what it costs a man to prepare that sermon? Did any of them ever try writing three or four sermons a week? "Oh," they are ready to retort, "where are all of his old sermons?" Preached, I answer, until everyone has heard them, and he needs must write! I've never seen that mythical barrel of sermons that I used to hear about before I became a preacher's wife; hut I do know that he has a goodly lot filed away which have been "referred to" as often as expedient, and that many new ones have been added to that list—emanations which have cost the preacher, to begin with, years of study (as his thumb-marked text-books testify); snbseqnently, time, research, talent, patience and prayer, for a feast that will satisfy both intellectual and spiritual appetites can not be prepared unless the heart and soul of the preacher be in attune to the will of the One who has said unto him, "Go, preach my gospel."

The presiding elder preaches twice as many sermons as the preacher in charge, even with the ordinary Saturday and Sunday services, and when he undertakes to be a local evangelist one-half of the year, one can readily see that one harrel of sermons will not suffice.

These are some facts that the careless and ignorant have not considered, and had I command of space and the patience of my readers, I could enumerate many others to prove that the presiding elder is one of the busiest of men. H. W. J.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

Well, now, right here at the very nick of time, the most important season of the year—the harvest season—I am laid up with a sore toe—the most painful affliction I ever had in my life. I am not able to walk or to put my right foot to the ground. It looks like the little toe on my right foot will come off in spite of all that can be done for it. What a time this has been to grunt, groan, and to suffer. It is strange that so small a toe could generate so much pain. My little toe has been a great offense to me, but I have not had courage to cut it off and cast it from me. Self-surgery is hard to do—impossible if an anesthetic be taken. This is the kind of moral surgery the commaud of the Savior enjoins. I never thought till now why it was so hard to do. It is self-surgery. It has to be done by one's self on one's self. Courage fails when it comes to this.

For fifteen days past we have had the longest nights I ever saw. I lie, and roll, and tumble, and suffer, and think ten thonsand thoughts, and long for daylight to come. It is so hard to suffer in silence, and alone and in the dark. I have courted Sleep, begged her to come and take me in her arms and let me rest; but the shy thing she is, she would not. Perhaps she was afraid to grow so familiar, lest my wife become jealous. Job cursed the day he was born, but I have felt more like cursing the night. The night is harder on me than the day, ten to one. "Why not take morphine?" asks one and another. Well, for several reasons. Morphine is a great curse. It is a growing evil. It is easy to contract the morphine habit, and almost impossible to pull loose from it. I'd rather die of a painful sore toe, and go to heaven, than to die of painless morphine and go to hell. I never take morphine because it has such a fine effect on me. The danger of the drug lies in the happifying and pain-lulling effect of it. I've always been weak in the matter of habits. For this reason I never take stimulants, and shun soporifics. I can't trust myself. "Best safety lies in fear." When one runs to morphine or to anti-kamuia for every little pain, pain soon becomes chronic and constant. The imagination conjures up a pain as a pretext for taking the drug. I stand shy of all these things for myself and for my family. As a pastor, I have seen a world of sorrow in the homes of others from these things. None are in more danger than those who have no fear.

This confinement and suffering go hard with me, because I have been confined so little and have suffered so little. God has been good to me. I have not had to stay in bed twenty-four hours at a time in thirty-eight years. Confinement goes hard with me. I love to be up and out of doors and going. Nothing helps me to bear pain like a good book that absorbs all my attention. When I become absorbed I forget pain. It is difficult to keep one's mind off of a sore spot, and still more difficult to keep from impressing the sore spot on other minds. The Psalms are full of sore spots. The best poetry is often born of the deepest suffering. I think and feel Psalms and poems, but never write them. I have the sense, but lack the expression of a poet.

Well, I am at home with my sore toe. I am glad of this. It would be so trying to be so troublesome to other people. When I was a boy I carried all my sore toes to my mother. I always got sympathy, a rag, turpentine, and sugar. A sore toe makes a boy long for mother and her tenderness and love. Now, when I am sick or suffering, I long to be with my wife. I tell her it is not good for a man with a sore toe to be alone. He needs the ministry of love—that that has interest, sympathy and tenderness in it. When it comes to nursing the sick, ministering to the suffering, binding up wounds and sores, and pouring in oil, one woman is worth a whole half dozen men. Their fingers are not all thumbs, as happens in the case of most men. They go at things gently, and not in a rough, jerky way. They understand the philosophy of rags, poultices and lotions. My wife can dress my sore toe a dozen times a day without giving me a single pain. When a man looks at it even I nearly jump out of bed.

A supply of trained nurses will be a great blessing to the world. I am glad we have a fine school where our women can become skilled proficients in this exceedingly fine art. They have the natural endowments, and only need the training. The difference between an intelligent and experienced nurse and a raw hand is very great—even among women equally gifted. My wife went to no training-school, but she has been the principal of a nursery for thirty-six years. The mother of seven boys ought to know something about sore toes. She has had a lot of experience—nails grubbed off, toes mashed and cut nearly off with axes and hatchets—all this, and more too. The wonder is, that a boy lives to be ten years old. Girls rarely ever suffer from sore toes till they are old enough to have—to have— Well, I need not say; everybody knows what.

Here I am propped up in a chair, my foot elevated, and resting from reading by writing a chapter on sore toes. The subject is very nearly personal. I have a feeling interest in it, whether others do or not. The past fifteen days have been days of agony and prayer. I pray more when I suffer than when I do not. Most praying people do. Perhaps our Lord did so, too. The record looks that way. I have not prayed so much to be delivered from pain as for grace to endure it. Doubtless it is good for me to have it, and I ought to get all the good possible out of it. GILDEROY.

Presiding Elders.

Bro. Streater, in his article heretofore noticed, proceeds to say: "While the presiding elders were paid $1,028.65 for this kind of service"—described in a preceding part of his article—"the preachers in charge were paid an average of $427.24, and they are supposed to be busy all the time."

This was for the year 1895 in the North Mississippi Conference—a concrete case with "local habitation and a name." Who were the nine men in charge of these districts, and were overpaid "for this kind of service"? A disclaimer is indeed needed, as given in his last paragraph. But why should this accusative contrast be made between our presiding elders and the preachers in charge? Are we two classes to be set in conflict with each other, or one blessed body of preachers, each trying to fill his place in giving the gospel of the grace of God to the people, and in maintaining the order and integrity of the church? This question can be settled by the reports rendered at the Annual Conference. If any man is really unfit for his place, let it there be shown, and proper correction made. Whenever our itinerant ministry becomes divided by conflicting differences, transmutation or disintegration will set in. If there be any defect in the existing plan of supporting the ministry, that can be corrected by law without disturbing the harmonious and co-operative relations existing between Bishops, presiding elders and preachers in charge.

That our presiding elders are really paid too much—more than a reasonable support—I do not think anyone will assert. That many of our preachers are paid too little—some of them a meager pittance—is painfully true. But it is rare if anyone of them holds his presiding elder in the least responsible for the grievously short allowance or payment. If the people whom this pastor serves have eyes to see and hearts to feel, they can save their preacher from distress. Surely the low pay to the preacher in charge should not be put in offensive contrast with the simple living paid to the presiding elder.

It ought not to be overlooked that quite as wide differences exist in the payments made by the charges to their respective pastors; and, further, that the cost of living differs much in different places, as also the modes of supplying the preacher's needs; so that equality of living is much more nearly approached than statistical figures tell.

Bro. Streater has made his complaint stronger than his argument, and fails to show clearly that the districts ought to be enlarged.

The Condition of Mississippi.

"There has been so much said and written about the hard times and down-trodden condition of the people of Mississippi," remarked an old native-born citizen of Mississippi to the Picayune correspondent to-day, "that I am bound to make a few remarks contrary. I am now getting to be an old man, and I have lived in Mississippi all my life, and have been a participant in the business conditions that have prevailed, and I put it down as a fact that can not be disproved, that the masses of the people are better off to-day; have more of the substantials and comforts of life, owe less money, are living better at home, clothing their families and educating their children better, and there is more general intelligence than ever before in the history of Mississippi.

"Money has been more accessible to the farmer and at lower rates this year than ever known before, and the banks of the State have had more money, and have been anxious to loan it out at lower rates of interest than ever before known.

"Why, just look at Mississippi, that applied to borrow $400,000 the first of July, at 5 per cent. interest, by issuing bonds, and the people of Mississippi took the bonds at a premium of 103 to 105, and the bids of Mississippians alone amounted to over a million of dollars. Every single one of the bonds were taken by the people of Mississippi, and not by any one class, but they were taken for widows, guardians, by poor and rich alike.

"When did Mississippi ever see the day before that it had the money to do this? When did the State of Mississippi ever before see the day that it could float a 5 per cent. bond at a premium?

"They talk about unemployed labor. Only the other day I heard a leading planter complaining of the scarcity of labor.

"There is now a great demand for labor in the Delta bottoms to pick cotton at 50 cents per 100 pounds, at which rate a cotton picker can, with a day's labor, buy more of the substantials of life than ever before.

"Last year the planters of Mississippi raised an abundance of corn, a great deal of meat, and a fair crop of cotton, which sold at remunerative prices. This year a fair crop of cotton has been raised economically, and is selling at fair prices."

In connection with the claims made above as to the good condition of the State, the tables furnished by T. C. Kimbrough, the secretary of the State Railroad Commission, are interesting. They show that there is a large increase this year over the gross earnings for the year 1895.—Picayune.

"The Right Arm of Power."

Every experienced pastor knows the importance of religious literature as an adjunct to his own work in the pulpit and in the care of the varied interests of his flock. Now and then, however, an unusually observant and efficient minister puts down his testimony in this regard in an unusually terse and striking fashion. Such a testimony is now before us. It comes from a busy man in a distant city, in charge of a large congregation. We will not mention his name, but we may say that he stands in scholarship, preaching power, and pastoral tact in the foremost rank of his brethren. His words deserve to be considered, and his policy may well be emulated by young preachers who have their spurs to win and their record to make. Were one-half of our ministers awake to the influence of a representative Methodist paper, widely read from week to week by their people, they would use greater diligence to circulate it. This testimony we think is worth more than an editorial exhortation, and hence we append it:

"When I went to my present charge I found only two or three official papers taken. I determined to remedy that defect at once, and I sent for sample copies, made my canvass, preached on 'Good Literature a Help to Good Living,' and secured about thirty subscriptions for our own paper—the Central Christian Advocate. That was two years ago, and I have noted many signs of growth in the congregation which I can not but attribute to the ministry of the paper among the people. They listen more closely to the Word; they take a deeper interest in general Methodism; they appreciate more than they used to the greatness of our benevolent societies; they respond more generously to my appeals in behalf of the needy; and in general they are more alert, more intelligent, more devout. I count the Central my best friend, my right hand of usefulness, my most important adjunct, in the administration of a pastorate. I can not understand how any pastor can get along in his work without aiming, first and foremost, to make his people a reading people, and then to circulate among them their own home Advocate."—Central Christian Advocate.

Methodist Women, South.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, received last year $121,157, and paid out $73,393. The sum of $30.90 was received for the Memorial Fund. Appropriations were made at the recent annual meeting of $37,960 for China, $14,225 for Brazil, $37,965 for Mexico, and $6,150 for the Indian Territory. Including the contingent and other miscellaneous appropriations, the total amount was $93,300.

The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, aided last year through its Central Committee 21 parsonages to the amount of $5,475, while the local organizations aided 39 parsonages to the amount of $1,584, and supplies were sent out to the amount of $3,096. The society publishes and distributes a considerable amount of literature; sustains a mountain work, which is well advanced, with results that "will be more apparent next year;" is collecting building money for a school at London, Ky.; has a school at Brevard, near Asheville, N. C., with 36 pupils, for which citizens of the place have given land for a site; has a home and school at Greenville, Tenn., with a building nearly completed; sustains a Cuban mission work, with 2 day-schools, 4 teachers, and 150 pupils, with a new building at Ybor City approaching completion; and maintains city mission work, employing 9 missionaries in several large cities. One of the city missions has been organized into a church. The total receipts of the society for the year were $17,500, or $9,301 more than those of the previous year.—Western Advocate.

A preacher may not be all that he ought to be, but when a member tries to undermine his character, or to impede his work in order to get rid of him, he proves his unworthiness to a place in the membership of the church. When a man does this and the church silently ignores his conduct, it becomes a partaker in the work of breaking down the minister. A wise man once said: "Your pastor needs your sympathy and support in your own homes. What you say for or against him and his work is certain to reproduce itself in the church. That minister's usefulness is practically at an end whose reputation and character and work are not upheld in the families of his congregation, and especially by parents in the presence of their children."—Methodist Protestant.

RESIGNATION.

BY F. R. HAVERGAL.

Just to let thy Father do
What he will;
Just to know that he is true,
And be still.
Just to follow hour by hour
As he leadeth;
Just to draw the moment's power
As it needeth.
Just to trust him, this is all!
Then the day will surely be
Peaceful, whatsoe'er befall,
Bright and blessed, calm and free.

Some Things as Seen from the Standpoint of a Traveling Preacher versus "Some Things as Seen from the Standpoint of a Layman."

Having been round about for some time in various portions of the North Mississippi Conference mingling with presiding elders, preachers and people, and having received numerous letters anent the question being discussed concerning the number and size of districts, I deem it not amiss to note some things seen and heard in reference thereto.

That it may appear that I am not alone in opposing the reduction of the number of presiding elders' districts, hear what the brethren say, as follows: "I think you are right about presiding elders' districts."...."When I read your reply to 'Gilderoy,' I said, Amen."...."For one, let me thank you for your timely article. I am glad you wrote as you did."...."You have the thanks of your brethren for your complete reply to 'Gilderoy.'" ...."I hear no complaint on this district except where quarterly meetings have to be held on week days. If our Bro. Streater supposes that the money paid now to two presiding elders, with fewer districts, would be diverted to other worthy objects, he was never more mistaken. Our new district, made five years ago, has increased, rather than decreased, the Conference and missionary collections."...."There is no assurance of economy in reducing the number of districts, because the large districts may pay $1,500 or $2,000 to the presiding elders, while the small ones now pay about $1,000." (Some advocates of large districts make the argument that they should be large enough to command $2,000-men!)

I make the above quotations as a few out of many, that I might introduce from letters received to indicate how the tide of opinion is flowing. It is safe to say that three-fourths of the preachers are opposed to reducing the number of districts in our Conference, and they are men, too, who are not afraid of "incurring the displeasure of the presiding elders" by expressing their true convictions of right.

Bro. Streater, in his article in last week's issue of the ADVOCATE, vented some strange and astounding utterances, and the more so as coming from one who for years has been considered as one of our truest and safest laymen. His vision of "things as seen from the standpoint of a layman" was evidently not taken from his usually high catholic "standpoint." Whatever he might be seeing near by, he certainly was not seeing far off and all around, else he would not have written as he did about the larger portion of the preachers being afraid of incurring the displeasure of the presiding elders, the useless expenditure of the salaries of two presiding elders, the presiding elders not having employment enough, the dear preaching, character of sermons, etc. We—i. e., myself and others—fail to see any argument in any or all of this in favor of the side he espouses. Of course, we do not hold Bro. S. responsible for our obtuseness; but if there is anything in it more than adverse reflections upon presiding elders and preachers, we hope that he will turn on the light more fully, so that we may be able to see it.

One brother, in eminent position, writes me thus: "Bro. Streater presents himself in a light never before seen by some of us. We thought him to be a kind, careful, conservative man, but not so now."

The monstrous idea of making the districts larger, in order to give the presiding elders more to do, is amusing to some of us who know how much a presiding elder has to travel and toil to hold even one quarterly meeting a week—two days of preaching, presiding, taking collections, etc., and from one to two days of going to and fro in a great many instances, besides many extra services, and the general oversight of all the preachers and every church interest. In all of which most of our presiding elders are faithful and diligent. I have been with some of them recently who are putting themselves en double duty on the last round in order to help their preachers to close up their year's work successfully. They have also rendered much and efficient services in protracted meetings. Presiding elders, as well as pastors, need time for reading and studying new and standard books, and making fresh sermons, else they will become dry and stale in their preaching and official work. Hence there is other useful employment for them, besides being all the time on the go and away from home and their study.

As to the cost of our presiding elder's sermons Bro. S. is wide of the mark. He or the types made a great blunder. One presiding elder claims that at the rate of $64.29 per sermon he is due for last year's preaching about $12,000; another one claims $10,000 About $8 or $10 per sermon would be nearer correct. One brother writes: "Bros. Streater and Porter differ. The latter thought men were paid too much for 'overseeing,' while the former gives credit for nothing except a little preaching, and poor at that. This provokes a smile."

In conclusion, let us all pray the Head of the church to so direct in the adjustment of the work and the men to each sphere of the same that all things may be done to edification.

The Baptists and Methodists of Mississippi—Comparative Statistics.

The Baptist State Convention was held in Starkville, July 16 to 20 of this year. The presence and spirit of the Master was with them during the entire Convention. They have many able men, and they seem devoted to the work of the Lord. They are doing a great and good work in this State. I was deeply interested in their statistical report, and at once began to compare their work with ours.

I have before me the Minutes of their Convention, held in Starkville, July 16, 1896, and the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference, held in Water Valley, Miss., Nov. 27, 1895, and of the Mississippi Conference, held in Yazoo City, Dec. 4, 1895. All the statistics given will be taken from these Minutes, except the report of the woman's work, and their figures will be given from their Minutes which are before me.

The Convention reports 1,236 white churches and 87,135 white members. There are in the North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, including ministers, 80,257. There are four other branches of white Methodists in the State. They are the Congregational Methodist, the Protestant Methodist, the Methodist Episcopal Church (North), and the Independent, or Fly Methodist. I can not give the statistics of these churches, as I have not the information on the subject.

The Baptists have a fund called Sustentation Fund for the support of their aged and worn-out ministers, corresponding to our Conference Fund. The Convention raised last year $336.45 for this, and our church raised $9,494.15 for the same purpose.

The Convention reported $81,692.39 for pastors' salary and home uses, which includes home missions, as that was raised for pastors on mission works. Add to that the Sustentation Fund, and we have $82,028.84 paid the Baptist ministry during the Convention year. Our two Conferences paid pastors, presiding elders, Bishops, Conference claimants, and for domestic or home missions, paid to ministers serving missions, $151,711.40.

The Convention reported 28 parsonages, valued at $47,050. Our Conferences have 216 parsonages, valued at $196,676. There are 272 pastoral charges and districts in the State, and with 216 parsonages. All of our ministers engaged in the regular work were furnished a home except 56.

The Convention reported 302 Sunday-schools, with 17,196 officers, teachers, and scholars. We have 815 schools, with 42,053 officers, teachers, and scholars. They have 26 churches which have preaching every Sunday; we have 50.

The Convention reports eight schools as Baptist schools: Blue Mountain Female College, Carrollton Male and Female College, East Fork College, Gillsburg Collegiate Institute, Hillman College, McComb City Female Institute, Mississippi College, and Stone College. These colleges have 66 instructors, 1,085 students, and are valued at $156,500. Mississippi College has an endowment of $42,166. We have Brookhaven Female College, East Mississippi Female College, Port Gibson Female College, Edward McGehee College, Grenada Collegiate Institute, Epworth College, and Millsaps College. These colleges have 52 instructors, 844 students, and are valued at $220,000. Since the publication of the Minutes $13,000 has been added to the buildings at Millsaps. Millsaps College has an endowment of $107,000. All of these colleges belong to the M. E. Church, South, except Epworth, and that is under the auspices of our Conference, and the Bishop presiding over the North Mississippi Conference appoints its president.

The Convention reported as raised for State missions, $2,943.26; for home missions, $1,952.20, and for foreign missions, $3,639.44, making a total for missions of $8,534.90. Our Conferences paid on assessments for foreign missions, $15,347.80. Add to this the amount raised by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, $4,582.11, and we have $19,929.91. For domestic or home missions the Conferences raised $4,885.41. Add to this what was raised by the women in Parsonage and Home Mission Society, $982.63, and we have raised for home missions, $5,868.04. The Conferences raised on assessments for church extension to help weak churches in destitute places to build houses of worship, $3,919.53, and for the American Bible Society—one of the grandest missionary agencies on the earth—$804.50, making a total for missions of $30,521.98.

Reply to "Gilderoy."

I feel, in justice to myself and the text quoted by me from Heb. iv, 12, and referred to by Bro. "Gilderoy" in his article to me, that some further investigation is necessary. He says I went off wrong on the word "quick," and was misled in my interpretation and application of the passage. Where he gets the idea that I was misled by the word "quick," I can't tell. I referred to the whole text, and, of course, included the context. It is very clear to my mind that he is the man misled by the word "quick." To take one word from a grand text like this, and give three definitions from the dictionary, then shove the whole thing aside and jump at a conclusion, as though he had thoroughly and fairly investigated the whole matter, is rather a strange way to dispose of a text of Scripture on the great doctrine involving the salvation of a soul. I don't think this is the brother's usual way of preaching or teaching the Word of God; yet I shall not accuse him of a perversion of God's Word. I don't think my good brother would be guilty of a thing of that kind. I will say, however, the way in which he disposes of that text is, in my judgment, calculated to mislead. Since he is fond of studying the dictionary, let us take up the word "quick" where he leaves off. I'll give the definitions as given by himself—"living," "live," "vital." Now, this is right. 'Tis the living Word from the month of the living God. To thoroughly understand this, we must know what kind of life it has. We will see what the dictionary says about the word "living." "Issuing continually from the earth, running, flowing as a living spring or fountain; opposed to stagnant." This corresponds well with the Bible view of salvation (Jer. ii, 13). The prophet refers to God as the fountain of living waters. So we will take the word "running." "Moving or going with rapidity; the act of running or passing with speed." You see, my brother, by a thorough investigation of this word we find that this is the living Word of God, full of activity and vital force. Now, to make a thorough investigation of the entire text, we ought to take, next, the word "powerful." You will find by an investigation of this word that in connection with its meaning the same text is quoted in the dictionary that I have quoted. "The Word of God is quick and powerful." Then the word "sharp" means, quick to discern or distinguish. Now, take the words "piercing," "dividing," "asunder." Investigate them. Then take the word "discerner." It means that which distinguishes, or that which causes to understand, and this quotation immediately follows the meaning, the very same text: "The Word of God is quick and powerful; a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." So it seems from an investigation of this text that Mr. Webster must have been misled by the word "quick." I am satisfied, therefore, from the information given by the dictionary on this text that we are justified in expecting immediate results from the preaching of sound doctrine.

Now, let us examine the Commentary a little. It says in reference to this text: "The written Word of God is not the prominent thought here, though often quoted as if it were; still the Word of God (the same as that preached) used here in the broadest sense, but with special reference to its judicial power, includes the Word of God, the sword of the Spirit with double edge—one edge for convicting and converting some, and the other for condemning and destroying the unbeliever. And, again, the word 'quick' means 'living,' having living power; as 'the rod of the mouth and the breath of the lips' of 'the living God.' Powerful, 'energetic,' not only living, but energetically efficacious. Two-edged, sharp at both edge and back; sword of the Spirit, its double power seemed to be implied by its being two-edged. It judges all that is in the heart, for there it passes through at once, punishing unbelievers and searching both believer and unbeliever. Gods' wisdom simply manifold and uniformly multiform, with incomprehensible comprehension, comprehends all things incomprehensible."

Let us take a Bible view of the question now. Without taking space to examine the promises and prophecies contained in the Old Testament, it will be sufficient to refer to a few texts in the New Testament. First—Heb. iii, 13: "While it is called to-day." The Commentary says in reference to this text: "To-morrow is the day when idle men work and fools repent. To-morrow is Satan's to-day; he cares not what good resolutions you form if only you fix them for to-morrow." Acts, ii, 41: "Then they that gladly received his Word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." Acts xi, 15: "As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on us as on them at the beginning." Thus we see Jew and Gentile realized immediate results from the preaching of sound doctrine.

Now, let us take as casual survey of the labors of Knox, the Wesleys, Whitefield, and others, during the days of reformation. Then down the line of march to the present day; look at the mighty host that are daily demonstrating to the world that we may and ought to expect immediate results from the preaching of sound doctrine.

Now, it would be just and right to investigate his side of the question from a dictionary standpoint. He says: "The effect may not be seen immediately." Webster says this means at the present time. On what authority does he promise the sinner salvation to-morrow, next week or any time in the future? Surely not upon the authority of God's Word; and it would be worse than folly to refer him to time that's past, that only brings remorse of conscience; he knows it's gone, unimproved, forever gone! It will indeed be a sad day for Methodism when we, as ministers, go into the pulpit without any faith to hope for immediate results from the preaching of sound doctrine, or for the membership to go into the pew with formality and fashion, without prayer and faith to believe in immediate results in the salvation of souls from the preaching of the everlasting gospel of the living God.

Now, my brother, I merely referred to I. Sam. xxi, 8, by way of illustration. If an earthly king's business required haste, how much more the business of the King Eternal! He admits himself that David was in a hurry, thereby forgetting his implements of warfare. It would be well, therefore, for us to be careful and not get into the same dilemma.

Now, we have viewed this question from a dictionary standpoint; have examined the Commentary, and have given both a biblical and practical view of it, and are still confirmed in the belief that we ought, as laymen and preachers, to expect immediate results from our labors.

W. J. O'BRYANT.

Mother and Son.

In nothing that the incarnate Christ ever said, or did, or was, is his superlative beauty of manhood more manifest than in his perfect filial devotion to his mother; and nowhere was that devotion more striking than in that hour baptized with the horrors of Calvary, when he swept aside for the moment all the unutterable agony that bore down upon him, and all the supreme business of redemption, to commit his mother to the care and home of the man he most loved, that she might have a sure, safe, and sweet home-haven for her evening of life. No wonder that the angel who so long before announced her coming motherhood should have greeted her as blessed above all women; for no mother on earth ever had such a Son. Yet he is the model for all sons; and noblest, manliest sons are they who follow closest this perfect Model.

Nothing more perfectly indicates the tone and trend of a boy's life than his attitude to his mother. Unless your mother, my boy, is unusually and unnaturally unworthy, she is your best friend and your safest counsellor; and if you have any real manhood about you, she will be in your eyes a queen to whom you will gladly give the most chivalric deference, the readiest obedience, the warmest love, and the most courteous attention.

But, mother, suppose you are flippant and worldly and follow not the Christ, must I say this to your son? I dare not. If you, by suggestion or example, lead him to one of these modern gambling schools, misnamed card parties; if you tempt him to become a drunkard by putting wine on your table; if you would like to have him dance that he may "get into the swing" of so-called society; if you have him go with you to the theatre where his young mind will be debauched by presentations of the immodest and the impure; then may God grant that the poor boy may find his closest female friend in some other and better woman! But if you are a true mother, something after the model of Mary the Mother of our Lord, and your son has any manhood at all about him, you will receive from him that beautiful chivalric devotion and deference which will be to you a perennial joy, and which you deserve. God pity the mother and son, when she is not, or ought not to be, a queen in his eyes!

Interdependence of Home and Foreign Missions.

It is a wonderful and inspiring thing to be able to accomplish two distinct and grand results while engaged in the direct pursuit of only one of them. Such is the privilege of both the home and foreign missionary, and this is just what every man, woman and child is doing who in any way aids our home or foreign missionary work. In furthering one you are really promoting both. You are doing what Joseph did when, in saving Egypt, he also saved alive his father's family, the progenitors of God's chosen people, and helped to carry out an essential part of God's plan for the establishment of his kingdom on earth, and for the salvation of the human race. In helping to save America we are helping to save the world; in laboring to save other lands we are doing work whose reflex influence is essential to the salvation of our own country. What a marvelous thing it is thus to be working out God's glorious purpose of mercy with ever self-multiplying and cumulative power! When we work with God we do that always.

The history of Christ's church in this country during the last century abundantly proves the truth of the above statements. Where should we be to-day, as a country, if during these seventy years past our Home Missionary Society had not planted over 5,000 churches, and thus become the true source and inspirer of Christian activity in all directions at home and abroad? Who can estimate the blessing to the churches of our land of the missionary spirit which inspired Samuel J. Mills, and sent forth and sustained such men and women as the Judsons, the Sonders, and the whole noble army of heroes and heroines, whose achievements have rivaled those of the apostolic age, and made it possible to speak of and hope for the reaching of all nations of the earth with the gospel? In one word, there can be no foreign missionary work without live and vigorous home missionary work; and there can be no live and vigorous churches in the home land without the missionary spirit of which some one has well said: "The very soul of our religion is missionary, progressive, and world embracing. It would cease to exist if it ceased to be missionary, if it disregarded the parting words of its Founder. That church is dead which is not anxious to preach the gospel to every creature."—Selected from Review of Missions.

Selections.

Do Not Be a Lazy Christian.

Be lazy in your worldly matters, if you will, you will soon feel the effects of it; but don't be lazy in your Christian work. Let it be done promptly. Keep up to time with it. It must not lag behind. Don't be late to the house of God. Don't come in five minutes after the service begins, to disturb pastor and the worship. Don't be late at the prayer meeting. You lose much by it. It is the disadvantage of others also. Don't neglect the evening service because you are weary, or it is too warm. Don't let your class believe you are a lazy laggard, because they are there and you are not. Be on hand, be up to time, be energetic as one determined by the grace of God to succeed, and you will know no failure. The sluggard is the man who says: "Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep."—Christian Instructor.

If the congregations are declining, depend less upon the preacher and more upon yourself. Get stirred up yourself, and then stir up others. Stop fault-finding, and do something telling. Talk up the church more. Have a good word for minister, elders, trustees, the Sabbath-school teacher, and even the sexton. See something to praise in the prayer meeting, church service, Christian Endeavor Society, Sabbath-school and missionary society. Take a hopeful view of things. Put cheer into the despondent. Get some live people about you, and set them to work. The effect will be magnetic. People will see a stirring among the dry bones, and new interest will be felt in the services and work of the church. This method of filling the pews is usually more effective than costly music or a change of pastors or of officials.

Here is a definition of a pure gospel which will bear the test of the "white light." It is from the Arkansas Methodist, and it coincides so perfectly with our ideas of Bible teaching that we take pleasure in commending it to all our readers: "We hear much said of a pure gospel. Well, the proof of the gospel is in its fruits. That is a pure gospel which leads men to pay their debts, speak well of their neighbors, help the poor, co-operate in all work for the public good, forgive injuries and love enemies, and, above all, make the home more sacred than the church itself."—Pacific Advocate.

Our brethren in the ministry must bear in mind the fact that God's Word teaches that, in addition to all other qualifications, we must have "a good report of them that are without." Any gross impropriety, any undue levity of manner, any mistake in our business relations with the world, will seriously affect our influence over our fellow-men.—The Central Baptist.

Poverty is uncomfortable, as I can testify, but nine times out of ten the best thing that can happen to a young man is to be tossed overboard and compelled to sink or swim.—James A. Garfield.

A holy life is the very gate of heaven. But let us always remember that holiness does not consist in doing uncommon things, but in doing everything with purity of heart.

As plenty of good exercise gives a healthy man an appetito for his dinner, so plenty of exercise in good deeds gives a Christian an appetite for the Word of God.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. W. Burton, Ramsy, Ala., Oct. 10: "I have been in nine protracted meetings since June. Most of them were pronounced good, some better. The fourth Sabbath in September I was to be with Bro. C. W. Huff at McNeal, but was too feeble to leave home. I am now convalescent. Bro. Huff is an Alabama boy, and has made choice of the Mississippi Conference, in which I hope he will find a congenial home. I was raised in the Mississippi Conference; professed religion under the ministry of James M. Gann; therefore, I love the Mississippi Conference and brethren, as well the dear old ADVOCATE, which I have been taking about twenty years."

Rev J. A. Wilson, P. C, Salem circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Oct. 5: "We have just closed the most powerful revival I ever saw. I have been in great meetings in Chicago, New Orleans and other places, but have never seen nor heard of such wonderful manifestations of divine power as we have had for the last week at old Tabernacle Church. People were heard praising God all over the community on the road home and after they had gotten to their homes. I was made to think of what Peter said on the day of Pentecost when he said, 'These are not drunken as ye suppose.' Bro. W. D Bass conducted the revival for me. All of my people were highly pleased with his labors. I did not expect to get my salary at this church before the meeting, but Bro. Bass took a collection for me and raised over the assessment in cash and subscription. Bro. Bass is fine help for any pastor. We had 34 additions to our church and 9 to the Baptist."

PALMER CAMP MEETING.

This meeting begun pursuant to announcement, Oct. 1, and closed on the sixth instant. From beginning to close the power of God was demonstrated. Contrary to the expectation of some, the meeting was a glorious success. The following preachers were present and did the preaching—Revs. C. A. Powell, J. E, Seashore district; J. M. Hough, L J. Jordan, H. B. Trebillion, L. R. Roberts, A. P. Cox, and Alex. Scarborough. The preaching was deeply spiritual, edifying and uplifting. Bros. James Smith and Lewis Hayard (exhorters) rendered valuable service in the altar. Some of the sweetest music that I have ever listened to on this sacred spot was rendered at every service by the choir, which was composed of our home girls and boys, with two young ladies, one from Jackson, Tenn., and the other from Whistler, Ala. Every tent on the grounds, except two, was occupied with from two to three families in each tent. With the exception of a little rude conduct on Saturday night, peace and harmony prevailed throughout the meeting. The congregation on Sunday was estimated at 1 000.

There were a number who professed conversion, several joined the church, and scores from time to time filled the air with shouts of praise to the God of their salvation. In this meeting two things were apparent. First is that it is a mistaken idea that we have to import organist and singers to do our singing and playing at our camp meeting, and, secondly, the Lord is not dependent on specialists to do the preaching.

G. R. ELLIS, P. C.

FROST BRIDGE CAMP MEETING.

September 25 was the beginning of what proved to be a most precious and profitable meeting. It gave me great pleasure to join this meeting, having been here one year ago, and having seen many wonderfully saved and many believers sanctified wholly. Now, the brush arbor—native grove—has given way to a substantial wooden shed, well arranged, seated and lighted. Four pastors took part in the meeting, and their people joined in its support Frost Bridge is on the Matherville charge, but Isney circuit, State Line and Waynesboro station came to the rescue. The presiding elder, Rev. L. Carley, spent two days and did much good by his faithful preaching. Bro. W. W. Hopper spent three days, and added interest by his sermons and prayers. Bros. R. C. Williams, J N. Ware, H. E Partridge and W W. Moore united in beautiful harmony in seeking to promote the work of the salvation of sinners and the sanctification of believers. Miss Nettie Brown, of York, Ala., and Sister Ann M Moody, of Big Rock, Miss., did good service in prayer and testimony.

I have not witnessed more gracious results. The attendance was large, and shouts of victory ascended from persons saved or sanctified at almost every service. If differences of opinion existed as to the doctrinal statement of the experience of entire sanctification, all agreed "without holiness no man can see the Lord." Love seemed to be the ruling principle, and God very signally owned the work. It was a time of heart searching and salvation. Not less than from seventy-five to one hundred professed either conversion, reclamation or sanctification. One lady, eighty-one years old, was gloriously sanctified. A number of comparatively old people were converted. The meeting closed Sunday night, Oct. 4, about 10:30, amid glad songs and shouts of victory.

The Camp Meeting Association will arrange extensively for next year. To God be all the glory!

C. H. ELLIS.

VOSSBURG CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I have held a protracted meeting at the four appointments of this charge. At Goodwater I failed to secure ministerial help in time. The meeting continued five days. Several professed to be converted, and we had four accessions.

At Central Rev C. H Ellis, of New Orleans, did the preaching after the first day. Sinners and saints were duly provided for. The doctrines of regeneration and entire sanctification were pressed upon the people with great fervency. Eight accessions, many converted and a few professed to the blessing of perfect love. The meeting lasted 12 days.

Vossburg had a precious meeting. The brother itinerant, pledged to help me here, failing, I called on Bro. Ellis to my aid on the fourth day. One accession, and church greatly revived.

At Eucutta, we held a ten days' meeting, including two Sabbaths. Seven professed entire sanctification, and some twenty claimed to be regenerated. Six applications for membership.

Revs. H. C. Brown, of Heidelberg circuit, and C. H. Ellis were the main workers in this meeting. The influences of the Eucutta meeting were most gracious. The people will never forget Bros. Ellis and Brown for their faithful presentation of the Christian's privilege in Christ—a holy life, to be enjoyed before the Lord, in the land of the living. I thank God that the Methodist Church still insists upon a complete deliverance from sin, through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

The spiritual condition of my charge has been steadily advancing all the year, and these meetings have comforted many troubled souls. Members of the Baptist and Congregational Methodist Churches attended, and expressed themselves greatly blessed. I can truly say: Glory to God for the sweet communion that the Holy Spirit affords my soul! I ask the prayers of the faithful, that my hearing may be perfectly restored in order to my greater usefulness.

GRENADA DISTRICT EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

On the eighth instant the Epworth League Conference of this (the Grenada) district made its "debut" in the M. E. Church, South, at this place by the direction of our presiding elder, H. C. Morehead, and under the auspices of T. B. Clifford, the president of the State League Conference.

A very interesting programme was arranged, which brought into requisition some of the most efficient and consecrated church workers (both from the ranks of the clergy and laity) in the district. With T. B. Clifford presiding, is enough to say that there was no side-tracking in the proceedings from the beginning to the ending of a two days' session

The usual formalities of entertaining, and making the occasion one of great pleasure to the delegates, was duly observed by the good people of Coffeeville, regardless to denominational tendencies. Oxford, Water Valley, Torrance and Grenada were all represented, and gave cheering reports of the satisfactory labors this new daughter of Methodism had already accomplished through the young Leaguers at those places on the several lines this young and vigorous auxiliary of our church has been assigned to. From every quarter could be heard that exultant and happy refrain coming from the young people of the district, "O, the good we all may do while the days are going by."

To personate would be a trespass upon the space of your columns, for I could not begin this task without elongating too much. Be assured of the fact, that every sermon preached, every talk made, every paper read and every song sung throughout the whole convocation was befitting the occasion. You may judge the interest that these deliberations evoked, when I declare there were as many Cumberland Presbyterians and Baptists present as there were Methodists. Nor was it idle curiosity that drew them out; for when testimonials were called for, they could not refrain from rising and owning to the benedictions the deliberations of the Conference had been to them. To show the enthusiasm and interest this Epworth League Conference elicited in its determination to be true and faithful to the motto inscribed upon her banner, the following resolution was offered and passed:

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Grenada District Epworth League Conference, respectfully petition the Bishops presiding at our next State Annual Conferences to appoint Rev. T. B. Clifford (our president) State Epworth League agent; the duty of said agent to be to visit the Leagues in the State, correspond with them and by every means possible stimulate and strengthen this new department of our church work."

From the above resolution it will be seen that the Grenada district is ablaze on the Epworth League work, and now wants the whole State electrified by the "Cyclone" of Methodism pent up in her borders. We assume that it is generally understood what the term 'Cyclone" means, and to whom reference is made. It occurs to your humble correspondent that, should the authorities appealed to concur in this resolution by favorable action, that ere long many a dead church will be awakened by this recent production, so uniquely and appropriately dubbed the "Cyclone of the North Mississippi Conference," owing to the desire for due consideration as to the proper season of the year in which to hold these annual District Epworth League Conferences. No place or time for holding the next Conference was chosen, but left in the hands of the presiding elder.

Nervous

People wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and Nervous Dyspepsia. The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood feeding the nerves on refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich blood; gives natural sleep, good digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Bad dreams are one symptom of ill health. People generally treat such matters lightly. They believe that they are caused by the eating of something indigestible, and that this is a small matter. Perhaps sometimes it may be. The most horrible dreams are, however, due to affections of the nerves. Irritated, tired, worn out nerves are one of the chief causes of indigestion. More than that, they are a continual strain and drain on the brain. They are sapping the vitality of the brain every instant in the day. By the time night comes, the brain is too tired to rest. It is an unnatural condition of fatigue. The little worries and irritations of the day find repetition at night in the form of dirty, muddy water, filled with slimy, crawling things, from which the most frantic efforts give no relief until the sufferer finds himself wide awake, sitting up in his bed, with sleep banished for that night. That is nervousness, perhaps caused by, or causing, indigestion, and producing insomnia—sleeplessness. It doesn't take a man long to wear out with that sort of work. The day after a night full of horrible dreams is not likely to be a good day for business. A man's work for that day is not likely to be very valuable—nor the woman's either.

There is a cure for bad dreams, sleeplessness, indigestion, brain fatigue and debility. Its name—"The Golden Medical Discovery," called so because its discoverer knew that it was more valuable to the world than the discovery of gold in California, or Australia, or Africa. It makes what is far more precious than the finest gold—good health. It purifies the blood, strengthens the nerves, aids digestion, invigorates the action of every organ in the body, and produces firm, solid, healthy flesh. It will fill out the cheek-hollows of bloodless, pale women and nerveless, lifeless men. It is sold by druggists, and there is nothing "just as good."

A panacea for ingratitude: Look around and see how many people there are who are worse off than you are.

Satan does not need to waste time on Christians that are quarreling with each other. They are already in his service.

Love, like many another choice plant, can be increased by judicious cultivation, or it can dwindle and die of neglect.

It is a sad fact that thousands of names are on the church register that have never been enrolled in "the Lamb's book of life."

All your praying and Scripture reading and church going is worth nothing unless it leads you into the pathway of obedience to the revealed will of God.

Take a retrospective view of your own life and see if your happiest days have not been those in which you have forgotten self and labored for the good of others.

The prayer, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults," is mockery when it comes from the lips of one who is reveling in secret sin and making no effort to free himself therefrom.

It may be very well for a man to try to reform the world, provided he commences at the right place—with himself. But that is just what many latter-day reformers are unwilling to do.

We know of no greater mockery than to pray every day, "Thy kingdom come," and then expend one's time and talents in abetting the kingdom of Satan. Is this a fancy sketch?

A belated traveler who puts out the light kindly furnished him free of charge, and then growls and fusses because darkness envelops his pathway, is a simpleton. How much wiser is the skeptic?

The following from the pen of Dr. T. L. Cuyler is as true as the gospel:

Giving money to the Lord is just as much an act of sacred service as offering a prayer, or singing a hymn of praise, or teaching in a mission school, or coming to a sacramental table. In the Bible the consecration of our substance is not made a mere incidental; it is put in the forefront of our religious duties.

Prayer for Our Country.

We desire again to emphasize the duty of praying for our country. Theoretically, all Christians admit this obligation; and yet thousands of church members might as well deny it, so little do they regard it in practice. The call for prayer which was recently made by a number of Chicago Christians, including Mr. Moody, has been ridiculed by some of the secular papers on the ground that it was issued in the interest of political partisanism. The utter nonsense of this is apparent, in view of the fact that the call was made by men of all political parties.

Partisanism should never be allowed to stand in the way of any Christian duty, especially that of prayer. Every Christian, no matter what his political creed may be, should always be ready to join with every other Christian in prayer to Almighty God in behalf of his country.

The truth of the matter is, that the picture of the status of our country presented in the Moody call is not overdrawn. It does not take supernatural prophetic gifts to discern the shadows of coming events. The safest way to judge of the future is by the past, and the history of former ages is full of facts, in the light of which it would be wise for us to study the forces and tendencies of the present with reference to their bearings upon the future. Studying the trend of the times in this way, few men of ordinary sagacity, we believe, can resist the conclusion that evil days loom up before us as a possibility of the not distant future. Forces are at work whose final outcome, unless they can be counteracted in some way, will be the drenching of our fair land in fratricidal blood.

We do not mean that any such result will ensue as the sequence of the present political campaign. The result of the battle of ballots on the third of November will be accepted by the American people in a law-abiding spirit.

But he is blind who supposes that the next presidential election will put a final end to all our strife and turmoil. There will be only a lull in the storm. Far back of any and all questions of coinage and revenue lie mighty sociological problems that are yet very far from solution. Forces more turbulent and unmanageable than those with which we of the present day have to do are to be reckoned with by the civilization of the future. But, whatever may betide, one thing is sure: "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth"—reigneth over the inhabitants of the earth no less than among the armies of the sky. To him, therefore, let supplication be made that the dangers which threaten us may be averted, and that peace, prosperity, righteousness and happiness may be our inheritance as a nation.

A Lesson.

A short time since Dr. Berry, editor of the Epworth Herald, the Epworth League organ of the M. E. Church, published an editorial headed, "Do Your Own Thinking, Boys." Reading it over carefully before putting it into the hands of the printer, he congratulated himself upon having given some good advice to young men of all political parties without saying anything which could be construed into an attack upon or an endorsement of any particular party. Only a few days elapsed, however, before he received letters accusing him of partisanism. One writer claimed that he had made a direct thrust at the Republican party; another denounced him for making war upon the Democratic party; another thought he had sinned against God and his own soul by fighting prohibition. Of course, such things show that there are many silly people in the world; but they also vindicate the wisdom of the Southern Methodist policy of keeping partisan politics out of the pulpit. The utterances of the pulpit on such themes are as sure to be misconstrued as are those of the tripod—yea, more so. Hence the man who preaches in the interest of any political party is sure to alienate a part of his flock, unless all should happen to agree with him, which is not likely to be the case. Partisanism is blind enough and bitter enough as it is; and it would be much more so if our pulpits, as the manner of some is, were converted into political machines, ranged on this side and that of every question that arises in the field of politics.

A Noble Philanthropy.

Some time since Miss Sophie Wright, the accomplished principal of the Home Institute, a flourishing girls' high school in this city, opened a free night school for men and boys. The enterprise was a purely philanthropic one, and Miss Wright alone is entitled to the honor of its origination. No organization or individual stood at her back with open purse to second her efforts. Her enthusiasm in the cause and her influence in educational circles are such that she soon rallied around her a teaching force sufficient for her purpose, the entire faculty doing their work without remuneration. The school has steadily grown until it has reached an enrollment of 250. Moreover, there are now 150 applicants who can not be received for want of room. Miss Wright, however, has a plan in her head by which she hopes in the near future to accommodate all these and even more. We do not doubt that she will succeed. Her past successes are an augury of what the future will be.

This is practical Christianity. What a pity there is not more of it in the world! Why do not men of means found such schools in every city? Every one sees the need of them. For although the public school opens its portals "without money and without price," there are in every city numbers of boys who can not attend, for the reason that they must work "to keep the wolf from the door." Moreover, there are numbers of young men who are barred from the public schools by age, even if they could spare the time. To all such what a boon is a night school!

Such exhibitions of philanthropy on the part of men of wealth would contribute immeasurably towards the restoration of amicable relations between capital and labor. If such a spirit could become general among capitalists, the anarchistic agitator's occupation would be gone. The sum and substance of the whole matter is this: Let the capitalists of the world catch the spirit and imitate the example of Jesus of Nazareth, and they will solve problems that are too hard for the economist and the statesman.

She Won.

About sixteen years ago a druggist in New York failed in health. His wife stepped into the breach and carried on the business. Having no acquaintance with the mysteries of pharmacy, she at first acted as business manager, employing such help as she needed. As time rolled on she felt that it would be wise for her to acquire a thorough knowledge of pharmaceutical science, which she accordingly did. A short time since she applied to the State Board of Pharmacy for a license. The license was refused solely on the ground of her sex. She then sought redress through the law and obtained it in the shape of a mandamus compelling the Board to grant the license. All honor to the court; three cheers for the woman! Woman can master the science of pharmacy as easily as man; and when she has done so to deny her the privilege of making use of her knowledge for her own support, as well as for the benefit of suffering, is an outrage upon justice—a relic of barbarism.

A Wise Utterance.

Bishop S. M. Merrill is rightly looked upon as one of the wise men of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In more than one critical instance he has succeeded by virtue of his lucidity of thought and utterance in determining the policy of his denomination. When he addresses the public, it is always to give expression to a mature judgment. The words of such a man are entitled to the widest possible circulation. The following paragraph from one of his recent letters in Zion's Herald is so admirable that we reprint it on our editorial page with our most cordial commendation and approval: "More and more it is coming to pass that the young people of the church receive their knowledge and views and biases with regard to the doctrines, polity, institutions, life and aims of the church, as well as their notions of the social and moral questions of the day, from the church papers coming into their homes. Scarcely an issue of any one of them leaves the press that does not determine some great problem in the religious life of somebody in the range of its circulation. I often feel amazed at the indifference of pastors on this subject. How any one can expect to train the young people of his congregation in these days so as to make intelligent Methodists of them, and ground them in faith, and develop in them love and loyalty, and firmly attach them to the institutions of their own church without the aid of the church paper, is more than I can understand. It may be that it can be done in some instances, but it seems to me that the risk is too great, and the responsibility of attempting it enough to cause the stoutest heart to tremble."—Exchange.

Life Insurance.

The large and enormously wealthy insurance companies are considering a scheme to prolong human life.

Steps are now being taken by these companies which will result in the building of a sanitarium for the express purpose of prolonging lives of consumptive policy holders. It is a pure matter of business. They believe they will be able to save an immense amount of money by providing sanitariums for those of the policy holders who are affected with tuberculosis, instead of allowing the disease to proceed unchecked until it results in the premature death of the policy holder.

The sanitarium will fulfill the medical and surgical ideal. Every method known to science and art will be employed, and every theory advanced by the great scientists of the world to check the invasion of the dread disease will be promptly tried, so that hereafter the consumptive who is fortunate enough to hold a policy in one of the companies connected with the sanitarium may feel confident that he will be enabled to live as long as there is any human way of keeping the breath of life in his body.

One of the early results which is expected from the establishment of the insurance sanitarium is that the time will soon come when consumptives, no less than persons in good health, will be insured by the companies. This is no mere theory, but according to Mr. Halsey, vice-president of the Manhattan Life Company, is a policy that will be forced upon the American companies. Already those of Germany having the sanitarium system in operation are planning to have their representative branches in this country take such risks, and the American companies will have to defend themselves by doing the same. By refusing they would lose not only the consumptive patients, but hundreds of others every year, who would be influenced by the greater benefits of the German companies. Indeed, under such a system thousands of persons will be insured for the simple purpose of securing the advantages of the medical treatment.

Exactly where the new sanitarium will be located has not yet been decided, but it will be in a place where all conditions of the air are favorable to the battle with the disease. It is believed that by the time the sanitarium is built there will not be an insurance company in this country that will not be associated in the enterprise.—Times-Democrat.

In the Living Present.

Rev. Dr. Dixon, of New York, the rabid Baptist rationalist, has temporarily ceased mutilating theology, and devotes himself every Sunday to party politics. While thus preaching last Sunday an enraged auditor called him "a liar." Others whistled. Not perturbed by this interruption, he remarked: "There are no classes in America, but the masses and the asses." No interruption after this.

Archbishop Sebastian Martinelli has been appointed Cardinal Satolli's successor as the Pope's ablegate in the United States. He knows English, though an Italian. Belongs to the order of the Augustinians—the same to which Luther belonged before his conversion. The new appointee has much controversy for him in store. The Polish, Irish and German Roman Catholic element coalesce in our country with much difficulty.

Rev. Dr. Hastings, in a recent lecture to the students of Union Seminary, remarked that the comparative success of a preacher depended as much on his individual character as on what he said. Quoting Cecil, he concluded: "Men look at the preacher out of the pulpit to see what he is worth in it."

According to Le Figaro, Dr. Aubrey charges the press of our day as being a school for crime. Not only the lamentable fact, but also the appalling circumstances of daily transgressions, are eloquently set forth with revolting minuteness. Thus parties predisposed to commit similar crimes find encouragement and direction. The learned doctor is right. Moral carrion is the chief stock in trade. Hedged in with flowers, our papers are the dumping-ground of the world's debris.

The Welsh Calvinistic Methodists and the Congregationalists of that province are about to unite. Why not? The former are Congregational and the latter Calvinists. Yes, in union there is strength. Usually, though, those who favor union want others to come over to them. Not concession and compromise are what most unionists want, but absorption.

To determine that a human being is insane is sometime very difficult. Frequently perfectly rational on most subjects, their irrationality appears only upon introduction of a certain theme. But this irrationality may seem simply vagary. Thus uncertainty prevails, giving the demented opportunity to commit crime. Now, The Medical Age asserts that all persons partially or wholly demented never move their thumb; not even when seemingly sensible. In all gestures the thumb is motionless. An important discovery.

A congress of women has been held in Vienna. The object was to protest against innovations. A Mrs. Crassons read a paper on, "The Chief Virtue of Woman Is Silence." And the reading of that paper occupied two hours. ICH DIEN.

No man should suppose that he is religious because he has religious sensibilities that can be easily touched by the finger of God. Felix was so overpowered by religious emotion that he trembled like an aspen leaf; and yet he lived and died in sin. Nebuchadnezzar is another case in point. His religious sensibilities were so stirred as to call forth from him a vigorous and hearty confession of faith in the God of heaven and earth; yet but a short time elapsed until he erected a golden image and commanded all his subjects to worship it.

We hope all our preachers will read the article in this issue by Rev. T. B. Holloman and also reread the article of Dr. Carter in our issue of the eighth. How any preacher can read the recital of facts given by Dr. Carter, and then make no effort to raise his assessment for education, is more than we can comprehend.

The following clipping from the Greenville (Texas) Banner will be read with painful interest by Bro. Kilgore's numerous friends in North Mississippi:

Mrs. E. G. Kilgore died this morning at 1 o'clock at the family residence in North Greenville after an illness of several months duration. She was the wife of Evangelist E. G. Kilgore, and a purer Christian woman never breathed the breath of life. She has been struggling with that dread disease, consumption, for several months and passed away with the sweet assurance of a life eternal in the great beyond. Not Servants of Men.

Christ rendered the human race stupendously great service. Gave himself for them. He served as preacher and teacher. In washing the disciples' feet he gave us a significant example. Mutual aid a Christian duty.

There is danger, however, of becoming servants of men in a sense very reprehensible. Siuister motives may actuate. Selfish ends may be sought. Though Christ acted the part of a servant, he was not servile. Servility in freemen is despicable.

Not a few endeavor to combat prevalent vices with other than scriptural weapons. Sensationalism rampant. Members employed as detectives. Name of leader paraded. Real benefit equivalent to zero. If conscience of the evil-doer is not previously enlisted, dictating reformation, the outcome will prove a failure. The preacher should not pose as public prosecutor. The government provides for such office.

Docile submission to public opinion is, alas! too general. That opinion is seldom right. Its guidance dangerous. It tyrannizes its subjects. Its discriminations between right and wrong capricious and arbitrary. See, for instance, how it treats the Ten Commandments, making the transgression of some of them a crime, but is utterly indifferent about the other. Heeding its behests is following an iguis fatuus. Moral quagmire the end.

The slaves of fashion numerous. Whimsical and cruel. But its vagaries are deemed law, its freaks solemn obligations. Though expensive and frequently ruinous to health, it dominates all the same. It fills houses of ill-repute, the prison and the grave. The man who dresses shabbily as to attract attention and incite remark is as much in its clutches as the gay damsel with bonnet from Paris.

The political party sways its sceptre over many. Boycott and ostracism its favorite arguments. Like dumb, driven cattle intelligent men allow themselves to be herded by self-seeking demagogues. Rarely that principles are involved. It is only the battle between the ins and the outs. In the meantime the herd traverses muddy streets in enthusiastic procession, being hoarse with hurrahing for the favorite candidate. The oratory of the speakers is on a par with the attending fire works. Not to vote as conscience directs is wickod.

Have known preachors who were the servants of their families. Yes, it is heathen not to provide for saiue. But the interests of the church no less sacred than those of the family. If called of God to the holy ministry, support will always be commensurate with our reasonable wants. Bnt a preacher should be very careful in choosing a wife and raising children. Isaac made his impending marriage a subject of prayer. Few seek advice in selecting a partner for life. Some such families retard the preacher's work. Love wife and children, but do not sacrifice the interests of Zion to their well-being. If wife and children have not grace, or good sense enongh to measure their situation, the preacher should resign his position.

Have heard it said that some preachers are abjectly servile to the rich members of their church. Perhaps the speakers were mistaken. The salary must be paid; the collections must be full. This the impecunious, though pious, can not accomplish. But on account of the larger contributions of the opulent, the preacher should not allow them to organize rings, composed of themselves and a few pliant adherers, to rule over the affairs of the church with a rod of iron. With all humility the preacher should assert his independence and authority. Not at all following the adage, "Aut Cæsar aut nullus," he should treat his members alike. Be found in the hut of the poor as often as in the mansion of the rich. All are sinners, with the odds of salvation in favor of the poor. The utterance of Christ about the needle-eye apropos.

We can not believe that any official superiors in the church are susceptible of flattery. Hence certain clerical parties must nauseate them with their toadyism. Preachers are not fawning sycophants. A man of God does not crouch and cringe.

We have fonnd that those who are not in the fullest sense servants of God are usually those who are servile to men. Those who serve God best are not in danger of servility. They know themselves to be kings and priests and act accordingly.

JEAN PAUL.

Our $1 offer is withdrawn.

That Collection.

By permission, I would refer to and emphasize the points in the article from Dr. C. W. Carter, in your issne of Oct. 8, on "The Educational Collection." I trust that every subscriber to the ADVOCATE in Mississippi has read and will read it again. Every point made for Centenary applies with as great or greater force to Millsaps College. To meet the current expenses and pay the faculty every cent of the assessments on the two Conferences is needed. Every argument produced by Dr. Carter for the consideration of our Louisiana brethren applies to us of Mississippi also. The church should feel that it is a privilege to pay this small amount (and doubtless they would do better if fully informed). Our preachers after reading the article of Dr. Carter will, we hope, give the matter special attention. "Bear ye one another's burdens," etc., applies with emphasis right here.

During the session 1895-96 there were 52 young ministers and ministers' sons at Millsaps College. These at the regular matriculation fee of $30 would have brought in 1,560 dollars; yet the two Conferences paid only 1,207 dollars, leaving a deficit of 353 dollars to be met by some one.

Out of a matriculation of 170 in the college classes this session 65 are ministers or ministers' sons—this is equivalent to an income of 1,950 dollars. At the last sessions of the patronizing Conferences 2,200 dollars were levied as the educational assessment, which amount will barely cover the end for which the call is made.

Do not conclude, brethren, because we have an endowment of $100,000 (itself too small), that the college does not need your assessment in full. Look at these figures and be convinced: Proceeds from endowment, $6,000; income from matriculates, $2,500; total receipts, $8,500. Disbursements: Current expenses, coal, janitor, etc., improvements and insurance, and eight teachers to be paid—all this out of an income of little more than eight thousand when ten thousand would be too small.

The religious spirit of the college is most excellent. The Young Men's Christian Association numbers fifty or more, and is doing a good work. The student body is quiet, studious, and a manly set.

Science Hall rapidly nearing completion, and will be ready for occupancy very soon.

Butter Making—How to Churn in Two Minutes—Making Money Easy.

ONLY THOSE WHO HAVE CHURNED BUTTER for an hour and a half on a warm day know how hard work it is to make butter, and everyone will be delighted with the news that a machine is now made by The Queen Butter Maker Co., of Cincinnati, by which butter can be made in from two to five minutes. Anybody can sell 5 a day and make $150 a month. The machine is made small enough so that any farmer churning from two to five gallons can use the churn. Anyone who wants to make money should secure the agency for the Butter Maker. M. T. Hines, Columbus, made butter in two minutes before six farmers, and sold five on the spot, making $12.50 in half an hour. Easy to make money. The Queen Butter Maker Co., 29 East Third street, Cincinnati, Ohio, will send circulars to anybody that may desire to know about the Machine. Anyone who is looking for something on which they can easily make a good salary should secure one of these machines, and see how easily they can be sold. Every farmer will buy one.

Prayer Meeting Topic for October.

THE FRIENDS OF CHRIST.

SUNDAY, OCT. 18—THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

(John xiii, 23-25; Mark xiv, 1-9.)

It is to John that the title "beloved disciple" distinctively belongs. Five times John designates himself as the disciple "whom Jesus loved," and twice he mentions that he reclined on Jesus' bosom (John xix, 26; xx, 2; xxi, 7, 20). Peter, James and John are frequently mentioned as being nearer to Christ than the remaining disciples, but John was admitted to an intimacy of love with Jesus beyond that shared by any of the others. The laws of natural affection operated in Jesus as in other persons, and his heart was drawn out towards John, while, at the same time, that of John was drawn out towards him. A beautiful and touching sequel to the friendship between John and our Lord is the scene at the cross, when Jesus commits the care of his mother to John, and the charge is gladly accepted (John xix, 26, 27).

"O, that I could, with favored John,
Recline my weary head upon
The dear Redeemer's breast!
From care, and sin, and sorrow free,
Give me, O Lord, to find in thee
My everlasting rest!"

II.—MARY, SISTER OF LAZARUS.

John tells us that the woman who anointed the Savior at the feast in Bethany was Mary, sister of Martha and Lazarus. In many ways did Mary manifest a deep affection for Christ, and twice especially did he find occasion to commend her in terms of affectionate regard. What greater encomiums could Christian womanhood desire than, "She hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her," and, "She hath done what she could!"

"O, that I could forever sit
With Mary at the Master's feet!
Be this my happy choice,
My only care, delight, and bliss,
My joy, my heaven on earth, be this,
To hear the Bridegroom's voice."

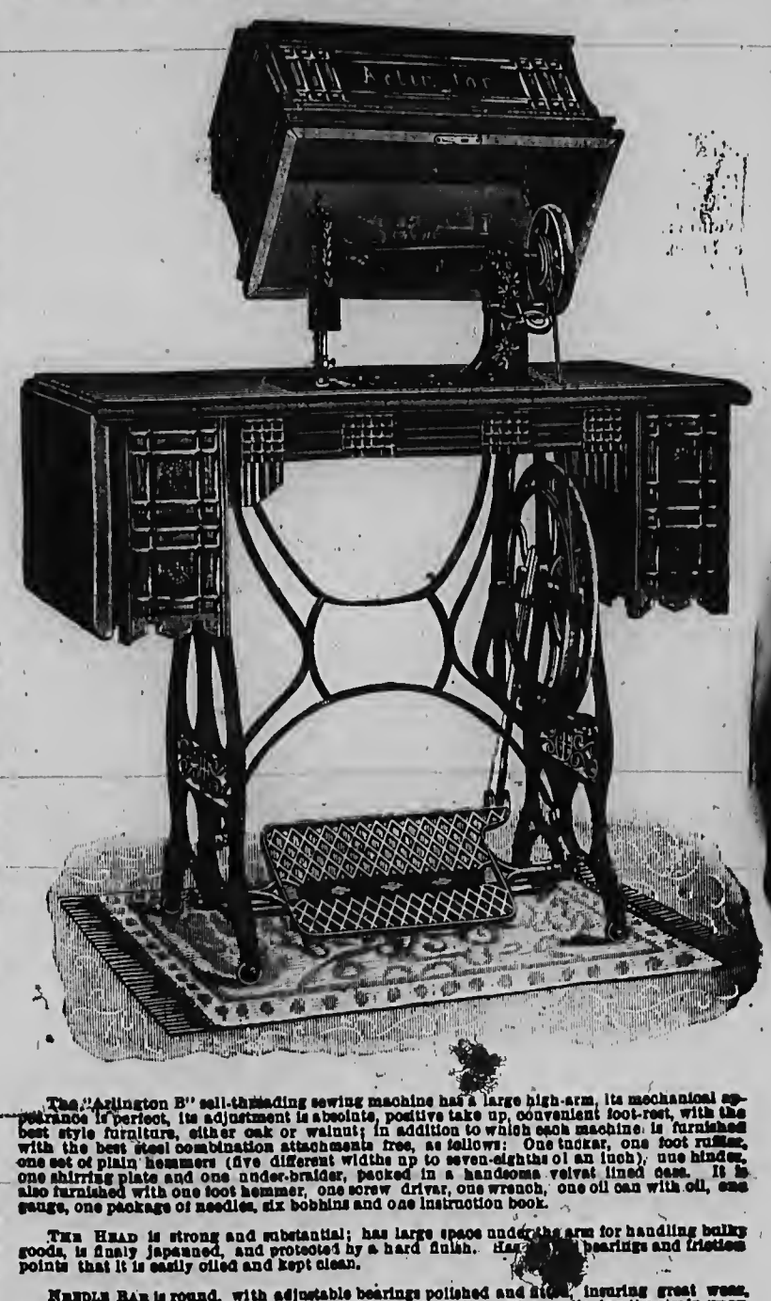
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has [illegible] bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

A TRUST SONG.

Better a smile than a sigh, dear,
Better a rose than a brier;
Better a look toward the sky, dear,
Than always be looking down.

Better in time of trouble
A song of hope and cheer,
Than a heart that broods o'er sorrow,
And makes that sorrow dear.

The joys we find in to-day, dear,
Perhaps seem poor and small;
But better a little sun, dear,
Than to have no sun at all.

Then make the most of the present,
And its little joys, I say;
For what is here we have, dear,
But to-morrow is far away.

So look in my face and smile, dear,
And sing a cheerful song;
It never is worth our while, dear,
To help life's worries along.

We have love, and we have each other,
And God, who is kind and true,
And we'll hope for the best, and trust the rest
To him life's journey through.

On Religious Grumblers.

When a man has a particularly empty head, he generally sets up for a great judge, especially in religion. None so wise as the man who knows nothing. His ignorance is the mother of his impudence and the nurse of his obstinacy; and though he does not know B from a bull's foot, he settles matters as if all wisdom were in his finger's ends—the Pope himself is not more infallible. Hear him talk after he has been at meeting and heard a sermon, and you will know how to pull a good man to pieces, if you never knew before. He sees faults where there are none, and if there be a few things amiss, he makes every mouse into an elephant. Although you might put all his wit into an eggshell, he weighs the sermon in the balance of his conceit, with all the airs of a shred and horn Solomon, and if it be up to his standard, he lays on his praise with a trowel; but if it be not to his taste, he growls and barks and snaps at it like a dog at a hedgehog. Wise men in this world are like trees in a hedge, there is only here and there one; and when these rare men talk together upon a discourse, it is good for the ears to hear them; but the bragging wise-acres I am speaking of are vainly puffed up by their fleshly minds, and their quibbling is as senseless as the cackle of geese on a common. Nothing comes out of a sack but what was in it, and as their bag is empty, they shake nothing but wind out of it. It is very likely that neither ministers nor their sermons are perfect—the best garden may have a few weeds in it, the cleanest corn may have some chaff—but cavillers cavil at anything or nothing, and find fault for the sake of showing off their deep knowledge; sooner than let their tongues have a holiday, they would complain that the grass is not a nice shade of blue, and say that the sky would have looked neater if it had been whitewashed.—Spurgeon.

You Never Told Me.

I once heard a clergyman tell what struck me as a very significant story regarding our deafness to those who are trying to teach us the beauty of heavenly things.

It was a true incident of which he spoke, and was about a little blind child, who had never known the blessing of sight until some wonderful operation was performed, and, to her mother's joy, she was pronounced cured.

He attracted all our attention and woke all our sympathies in the pathetic way in which he described the poor child's excitement when the bandage was first removed, and she was allowed to take her first look upon God's beautiful world.

One seemed to see the trembling little creature and hear her gasp in almost painful rapture and amazement as, clinging to her mother's hand, she stared around the country scene in which she had lived all her little life, yet never known until that wonderful moment.

The parent waited, almost as much excited, to hear what the child would say, for had she not been the patient one to try and explain all that upon which the freshly-opened eyes were now gazing? Had she not toiled with all her ability to make the afflicted one to behold fair sights by careful description, by living word-pictures? And yet the little child turned now, and at last, finding her breath, cried out with a great reproach:

"Oh, you never told me the world was like this!"

Then the poor mother burst into tears.

"I did, my darling, I did, but you were deaf because you were blind, and could not understand my words."

It is years since I heard this little story; but I have never forgotten the deep meaning with which it struck upon my heart. How many of us are like that poor blind little child! We hear the beauty of God and his love told into our ears; we hear the entreaty to look up, to realize all that is in store for those who acknowledge him their King and Master; but our eyes are sealed, and our ears hear, yet do not understand.

And how many, too, like the child, when first a glimpse of heaven shines before us, are as startled at the thoughts of the joy (that might have been ours long ago) around and above us, and cry aloud to our teachers:

"You never told us God's love was like this!"

Well might they reply:

"You were deaf; you were blind." But, unlike the child, we are free, if we will to see; and "he who hath ears, let him hear."—Friendly Greetings.

A Loving Word.

A loving word is always a safe word. It may, or it may not, be a helpful word to the one who hears it; but it is sure to be a pleasant memory to the one who speaks it. Many a word spoken by us is afterwards regretted; but no word of affectionate appreciation to which we have given utterance finds a place among our sadly remembered expressions. Looking back over our intercourse with the dead friend or fellow-worker, we may, indeed, regret that we were ever betrayed into a harsh or hasty or unloving word of censure or criticism in that intercourse; and we may wish vainly that we had now the privilege of saying all the loving words that we might honestly have spoken while she was yet with us. But there will never come into our hearts at such moments a singing pang of regret over any word of impulsive or deliberate affection which passed our lips at any time.

We have reason to be on our guard in our speech in most directions, but we can be fearlessly free in our loving utterances. Apart from any question of the good we do to others by our words of love, we are personally the gainers, now and hereafter, by every such word which we utter; while we are sure to be the losers by every such word when we have failed to speak.—The Churchman.

Don't Hear Everything.

The art of not hearing should be learned by all. There are so many things which it is painful to hear, very many of which, if heard, will disturb the temper, corrupt simplicity and modesty, detract from contentment and happiness. If a man falls into a violent passion, and calls all manner of names, at the first words we should shut our ears and hear no more. If in a quiet voyage of life we find ourselves caught in one of those domestic whirlwinds of scolding, we should shut our ear as a sailor would furl his sail, and, making all tight, scud before the gale. If a hot, restless man begins to inflame our feelings, we should consider what mischief the fiery sparks may do in our magazine below, where our temper is kept, and instantly close the door. If all the petty things said of one by heedless or ill-natured idlers were brought home to him, he would become a mere walking pincushion stuck full of sharp remarks. If we would be happy when among good men, we should open our ears; when among bad men, shut them. It is not worth while to hear what our neighbors say about our children, what our rivals say about our business, our dress, or our affairs.—Presbyterian.

Be Temperate.

Those who make the expectancy of life a study, come to some interesting conclusions. They agree that if a young man is intemperate at twenty, he can expect to live but ten years longer. If he is sober and refuses to touch intoxicating liquors after that age, he may expect to live forty years longer. These are not merely illusive arguments to further the cause of temperance, but substantial facts attested to by the insurance companies and mortuary statistics. This evidence should be sufficiently conclusive to induce young men to lead temperate lives.—Faber Forum.

Living at Our Best.

Do not try to do a great thing; you may waste all your life looking for the opportunity which may never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they come, from a great motive, for the glory of God, to win his smile of approval, and to do good to men. It is harder to plod on in obscurity, acting thus, than to stand on the high places of the field, within the view of all, and to do deeds of valor at which rival armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and the ultimate recompense of Christ. To fulfil faithfully the duties of your station; to use to the uttermost the gifts of your ministry; to bear chafing annoyances and trivial irritations as martyrs bore the pillory and the stake; to find the one noble trait in people who try to molest you; to put the kindest construction on unkind acts and words; to love with the love of God even the unthankful and evil; to be content to be a fountain in the midst of a wild valley of stones, nourishing a few lichens and flowers, or now and again a thirsty sheep; and do this always, and not for the praise of man, but for the sake of God—this makes a great life.—F. B. Meyer.

Solomon's System.

"Do you think it would be wrong for me to learn the noble art of self-defense?" a religiously inclined young man inquired of his pastor.

"Certainly not," answered the minister; "I learned it in youth myself, and I have found it of great value during my life."

"Indeed, sir! Did you learn the old English system or Sullivan's system?"

"Neither. I learned Solomon's system."

"Solomon's system!"

"Yes; you will find it laid down in the first verse of the fifteenth chapter of Proverbs: 'A soft answer turneth away wrath.' It is the best system of self-defense of which I have ever heard."—Home Companion.

An overwrought nervous system may be capable of spasmodic spurts, but sustained useful work is impossible under such conditions. To die in harness before one's time may be fine, and in exceptional cases unavoidable, but how much better to live in harness and do the work which one has undertaken without breaking down. The grown-up men and women, absorbed in the struggle of life, are the people who need to keep a watchful eye upon themselves. It is so easy to let the hour's fresh air and exercise be crowded out by the things which one feels bound to do for the sake of others, and hence for one's immortal soul. We argue that it will not matter if we omit our walk or rest for a day or two, and so we go on from day to day until we are brought up with a round turn, as the saying is, and realize, in case we are still alive, that we are chronic invalids. The walk, the ride, the drive, the yacht, the bicycle, the search for wild flowers and birds, the angler's outing, the excursion with a camera, the deliberate open-air breathing spell on the front platform of a street car, some one of these is within the means and opportunities of every busy worker, male or female.—Robert Grant, in Scribner's.

"It's not so much where you are as what you are that makes your heaven." The bright, cheery soul who lives the life of trust only sees the sunny side of everything; she has learned to endure cheerfully and wear a bright face when everything looks dark.—Exchange.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

Two men under the influence of liquor one night tried to row a boat across a bay. They rowed all night, and in the morning found they had made no progress whatever, for they had neglected to raise the anchor. Many Christians act just as stupidly as this in their endeavors to make spiritual progress. They attend church, give liberally and conform generally to Christian standards, but deep down in their hearts there is something they love more than Christ, and they are anchored to it, so they can make no progress.—Ensign.

Not getting but keeping, enriches. Saving is the basis of wealth. Many persons receive large salaries, but have nothing at the year's end. Others on half of their income have grown rich. The thrifty and frugal habit is commendable, though it must not degenerate into avarice or penuriousness. It is not necessary to be either a spendthrift or a miser. Prudent economy is compatible with a legitimate distribution.—Selected.

The New Testament is occupied from first to last—especially the Sermon on the Mount—in showing that acts are nothing except as they are fruits of a state, except as they indicate what the man is; that words are nothing except as they express a mind or purpose.—Maurice.

HYGIENE

Some Marks of a Good Nurse.

There is, perhaps, no more angelic office filled by any of the children of men than that of a capable and faithful nurse in ministering to the helpless and suffering sick. Right worthy, and we fear quite rare, is the character of which we speak. Let us note a few of the marks of a good nurse:

1. The nurse should know, almost as well as a physician, what to do for a patient in trying circumstances. He must also know how to use his knowledge aright. The good nurse is self-reliant in spirit, calm and gentle in movement, cheerful and hopeful in countenance and speech. Anxiety on the part of the nurse, nervousness in movement, and whispering in the hearing of the patient, often have a discouraging and depressing effect upon the sick. The good nurse never despairs, but sustains the sick, bearing their spirits as one would bear an infant in his arms.

2. A prudent nurse will never dispute or argue with a sick one, but will administer remedies with such loving kindness and affectionate firmness as will forestall opposition.

3. A wise nurse will never have lights burning unnecessarily in the chamber of the sick, nor allow persons to "sit up" and talk, or whisper, in watching over the sick at night. Nervous patients may die for lack of sleep under such treatment.

4. The best nurse will support the faith and hope of the critically ill by timely encouragement to trust in God, the great Physician, who alone gives efficacy to remedies and can heal without medicines. One need not be a faith healer to believe in the helpful power of faith. Prayers have often proven more efficacious than pills in healing the sick.

5. An ideal nurse must be able to sleep (or, at least, to appear to sleep) and wake upon call or movement of the patient any number of times during the night. If sleep is necessary to the healthy, it is indispensable to the recovery of the sick. I say the nurse must be a sleeper, for the idea of the presence of a wide-awake person at one's side, or, perhaps, gazing with nervous anxiety into one's face during the hours of night, has tormented and, doubtless, helped to kill many a victim of bad nursing; while the very thought of one dozing near helps to lull the patient into soothing and healing sleep. "If she sleepeth, she doeth well," said the great Physician. Perhaps the most afflicting and unendurable feature of Jefferson Davis' imprisonment was the sight or consciousness of a guard gazing day and night into his face. Such gazing is a horrible torment to one with sensitive nerves.

6. Religious sentiments, properly administered, especially in song, will be judiciously used by the skillful nurse. All sickness, especially many forms of lunacy, may be greatly alleviated by the proper use of soothing or inspiring sacred songs.

Heart Failure

Of course the heart fails to act when a man dies, but "Heart Failure," so called, nine times out of ten is caused by Uric Acid in the blood which the Kidneys fail to remove, and which corrodes the heart until it becomes unable to perform its functions.

Health Officers in many cities very properly refuse to accept "Heart Failure," as a cause of death. It is frequently a sign of ignorance in the physician, or may be given to cover up the real cause.

A VALEDICTION.

BY CLARA E. DRAKE.

O speak not, friend, the sad farewell!
It wakes within foreboding drear,
And falls upon my spirit's ear
Like tolling of some funeral knell.

We part—and shall we meet? In vain
Our anxious hearts the question raise,
And fain to solve the doubt, would gaze
With eyes that through the darkness strain.

If then again we meet, how soon?
Shall it be after years must roll
Their deepening shadows o'er the soul,
And morning's tints have flamed to noon,

And noon to evening shade has grown,
And where the joyous lark upsprung
To carol to the rising sun,
The night bird warbles sad and lone?

And where shall then our meeting be?
Within some city's bustling roar,
In country lane, or by the shore
That echoes to the heaving sea?

Amid the blaze of festive scene,
In mart, in hall where banners wave,
Perchance beside some lonely grave
All decked in Heaven's immortal green?

I know not when, or how, or where,
O friend of mine, on earth we meet;
Mayhap comes not this boon so sweet
While breathing in this lower air;

But when to higher heights we rise,
The fine, pure atmosphere of heaven,
O then to us, at last, 'tis given
To meet beneath its radiant skies—

To meet on that resounding shore
Which echoes to the angels' song.
No minor strains its notes prolong—
The sad farewell is heard no more!

OBITUARIES.

McCRANE—Murdock C McCrane, the only son of Murdock and M. V McCrane, of Wilkinson county, Miss., was born Dec 20, ——, in Wilkinson county, Miss., where he spent his life. Bro. McCrane was happily married to Miss Laura E. Comfort in December, 1883, by Rev. A White, at the home of Mr. A. W. James. He fell on sleep Sept 19, 1896, at his home in Wilkinson county, Miss. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss.

Bro. McCrane was loved by all who knew him One of his neighbors who knew him best said of him a few days before his death, "One of our purest and best men is going." He was an affectionate husband, a tender father, and always happy with his family He united with the Methodist Church, South, in early life, and remained a consistent member of the same to the day of his death. His seat was always filled He was heard to say, "I think it as much my duty to attend the services of the church as it is the duty of the preacher to fill his appointments." He was devoted to the church. It was my happy lot to be with him several times during his illness, and he always expressed himself as being perfectly resigned to the will of Him who hath said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." When the end drew near he exhorted all around to trust in God When he was told that he could not live, he called for his wife, asked her if she was trusting in God, and continued, "He hath always taken care of us, and will still care for and provide for you and the children."

I would say to you beraft mast: Weep not as those who have no hope. Your father and husband is not dead, but sleepeth. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors." D. F. GUTON, P. C.

Chester, Miss.

FRIZZELL—Nellie Bettie, daughter of Dr. W H. and Ella Frizzell, died at her home, Poplar Creek, Montgomery county, Miss., July 23, 1896 She was about nine years old; a sweet-spirited and promising child loved by all who knew her, God plucked the beautiful bud from the garden of our hearts to plant in the garden of heaven, where it will bloom for evermore, for there will be no ruthless hand of sorrow to blight or death to shatter. Her vacant chair, smiling face and kind words will be long remembered by sorrowing friends, while in the hearts of her father, mother, sisters and brothers there is an aching void which nothing but the love of a kind heavenly Father can fill.

Rest on, precious jewel, for God hath called thee home, and we see your smiling face and pure white hands beckoning us on, while your beautiful feet tread the golden shores of endless rest. R. C. CALLAWAY.

LOCKWOOD—B. M., son of Dr. T. P. and Emma Lockwood, was born in Crystal Springs, Miss., Sept. 13, 1870, and died Sept. 20, 1896 He received his educational training in Newton Institute, Crystal Springs, and at Centenary College, Jackson, La., and University of Mississippi. He graduated with honors in the class of '90-'91, in Belmont Medical College, St. Louis, Mo. September 15, 1891, he was married to Miss Eunice C. Miller. Soon after his marriage he commenced the practice of his profession as partner with his father in this city, and by his happy, genial disposition won for himself a good practice and many friends. It seems strange that one so gifted and so full of promise should die so young. One who has known him from childhood, and was his Sunday-school teacher, said of him: "He was a faithful scholar; was always present, and knew his lesson."

This visitation of Providence leaves a wife and child to mourn the loss of a husband and father; a father and mother, brother and sister, to mourn the absence of a devoted son and brother; and a host of friends to miss the sympathy and skill of one who heard the cry of the needy in the hour of sickness, despair, and trouble.

May the grace of God sustain the bereaved ones, and enable them to realize that "all things work together for good to them that love God!" M. L. BUARON.

SLEDGE—Lula Sledge, daughter of Geo. W. and M. S Sledge, was born March 29, 1883, and died at the home of her parents, near Duck Hill, Miss., Sept. 20, 1896.

She was a beautiful character—one that has left an impress upon the community that will produce fruit for years to come. From early childhood she was devoted to her parents, brothers and sisters. It was her pleasure to make the burdens of life as light for them as possible.

In her fifteenth year, under the ministry of Rev. J. W. Poston, she gave her heart to God and became a member of the Methodist Church. Her church life was characterized by a consecration seldom seen in one so young. She took the lead in all the undertakings of the young people for the upbuilding of the kingdom of Christ. Of strong intellect, a well-cultivated mind, and a pure heart, she was prepared for usefulness. Her pastor found her "ready for every good work." In the family circle, in the schoolroom, and everywhere, she endeavored to elevate all with whom she associated to a higher life.

Her last illness was long and painful, but she never complained She fell asleep in Jesus as calmly and as confidently as an infant in its mother's arms. We buried her mortal remains in the cemetery at Duck Hill, with confident expectation of seeing her again in the better land A. W LANGLEY.

STAFFORD—Little Joshua Stafford was born in Pike county, near Magnolia, Miss., Jan. 20, 1890, and departed this life at 12 A. M., Sept. 20, 1896, aged six years eight months and ten days.

Just four and a half years ago his father died, leaving his mother and seven children, of whom he was the youngest. He was naturally a lovable child, gentle, kind and affectionate in disposition, and won the hearts of all with whom he came in contact. He was loved best by those who knew him best, and had the admiration and esteem of all He even commanded the respect and attention of strangers by his innocent, modest and manly disposition for a small child. Although his stay on earth was short, yet he entwined the strong cords of love around the hearts of many friends and loved ones.

God has taken a gem from earth to heaven. He has simply plucked a choice flower from earth to have it bloom eternally "in that lovely land of unclouded day"

Little Joshua has performed his mission on earth. God lent him to earth for a purpose, and now it is accomplished, and he has gone to his reward.

It may seem a mysterious Providence that one should be taken so suddenly in youth; yet let us remember that God never makes mistakes, and that "behind a frowning providence God hides a smiling face." His Cousin.

POWELL—Mrs Eliza Powell (nee Martin) was born Oct 8, 1856, near Magnolia, Miss.; was married to Mr. J W. Powell Dec. 10, 1874 She became a member of the M. E. Church, South, Sept. 5 1872, at Muddy Springs Church, where she lived until her death, July 8, 1896

We believe Sister Powell was one of the few that walked in the narrow way that leadeth unto life. It seemed to be a pleasure to her to engage herself in making home happy. Though she had a large family, she so managed as to fill her place at church often. She was a faithful wife and a devoted mother—cheerful in health, patient in sickness. It was the writer's privilege to visit her often during her last illness. She was found happy in the love of God, and trusting him for comfort. When told she had consumption, and would not live long, she expressed a willingness to bear it in Jesus' name, that his will might be done. She said: "True, I don't want to leave my family, but the Lord will care for them, and I am ready to go." The Lord bless her family, who mourne her departure, that they may live so as to meet the loved ones gone before. J. T. ABNEY.

MARTIN—Eugene F. Martin was born Jan. 5, 1859, in West Feliciana parish, La. He removed to Pike county, Miss., in early life; joined the M. E. Church, South, at Muddy Springs Church, Sept. 17 1879, and remained a member there until his death, July 6, 1896.

It was not the writer's privilege to be intimately associated with Bro. Martin until a short while before his death.

Five or six weeks before his death he was confined to his bed with typhoid-pneumonia. He endured the pains of his illness patiently and trustfully. He expressed himself as being happy in the love of God. Once, after having talked and prayed with him, he said he expected to meet me in heaven. Even to the last he expressed himself as being ready to go. He leaves an aged father and mother, brothers and sisters, and many friends, to mourn his departure One of his sisters followed on two days later. How sweet to meet in the bright beyond! God bless all the loved ones, that they may meet where parting is no more J. T. ABNEY.

(Formerly MALONE)

Is located in Holly Springs, which is situated at the intersection of the Illinois Central and Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham railroads, into which ten passenger trains come and go every day.

Holly Springs is the highest point in the State of Mississippi, according to the geological survey, and the highest point on the railroad between New Orleans and Chicago; hence it is noted for its healthfulness. The success of the college for the last five years has been unprecedented under the circumstances. We expect still greater success under my successor, A. Sraat and Rev. R. M. Standifer, who will make such improvements as time and experience may suggest. I shall remain in the college as business manager until December, and will take great pleasure in giving to the patrons of the college any information they may desire.

I call special attention to our very reasonable terms.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed. Which ever children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

The corner-stone of the College of History of the American University in Washington will be laid on the twenty-first.

The public works department of New York is importing Belgian blocks for street paving. A consignment of 15,000 of these blocks arrived by an American line steamer a few days ago.

Secretary Lamont has transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury his estimates of appropriations required by the war department for the next fiscal year. The aggregate is $52,875,638.

At the annual convention of the National Sanitary Association, held in New York on Wednesday last, Dr. Thomas C. Craig, physician at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, advocated that consumption should be treated like leprosy, by isolation.

One of the most interesting commercial developments of the past month or six weeks has been the very rapid advance in the price of wheat. From the lowest point ruling during the past Summer, the price of this most important of the cereals has risen more than twenty cents per bushel.

The Cuban and Venezuelan questions have again come to the front in Washington to dispute consideration as topics of discussion with the everlasting monetary subject of talk. It is believed that the Cleveland administration will not go out of office without taking more vigorous action in regard to Cuba.

John P. Altgeld, governor of Illinois, supporting Bryan, spoke in Cooper Union, New York City, on Oct. 17. It is seldom that such a crowd turns out to hear a man as the one which collected in and around New York's historic hall. At least 10,000 persons listened to speeches from trucks and stands erected on the outside.

Saturday night Generals Palmer and Buckner, the candidates respectively for President and Vice President, nominated by the National Democratic Convention at Indianapolis, were greeted by a great concourse of people in this city. They spoke from a platform erected at the head of Canal street, and were attentively listened to.

The vatican, although in favor of Mr. McKinley, disapproves of Archbishop Ireland's letter because it openly mixes religion and politics, which the vatican desires to keep separate in the United States. It is feared the letter will displease the East and South Irish Bryan Catholics. It is probable that instructions will be sent to Mgr. Martinelli, the papal delegate, concerning the attitude of the Catholic clergy.

FOREIGN.

Sharpshooters and dynamite are playing an important part in the Cuban campaign and are being used by the insurgents. The former are used to pick off officers, and the latter to play havoc in the ranks.

Le Guilvinec, a little fishing port at the tip of Cape Finisterre, in France, lost fifty-two men in one night during the recent gales. All the male population of the town was out in the boats when the storm came down.

Another attempt has been made to unite the little Central American States into one large republic, the latest movement including Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Honduras. Guatemala is apparently omitted from the union.

A great sensation has been caused in Havana by the discovery that Spanish officials have been supplying the insurgents with arms, ammunition and medicine. Advices received state that the treason is apparently so widespread that Weyler hardly knows how to act.

Sam Jones Camp Meeting.

I am very much obliged to the good brethren who, though invited to help in the Sam Jones Camp Meeting, were kind enough to me to stay away, for otherwise the emergency would never have arisen that required my services, and I should have missed an opportunity of labor and association that has been a great blessing to me. I like emergency calls. They seem to come from God. And when an emergency that calls me is seconded by one that frees me for the time, I never bother over the fact that I was not the first asked, but hasten to seize the reward that was expected to be another's. If somebody loses his crown, and it is my fortune to find it, I will wear it, if I have to line it to make it fit.

The meeting began Friday, Aug. 21, and continued through Sunday, the thirtieth. Presiding Elder L. S. Jones, of the Natchez district, and Bro. W. B. Lewis and I reached the encampment in time for the 11:30 service Monday morning. Somehow things dragged heavily at first. Whether the lack of interest was from the fact that no doctors of divinity were found in the pulpit corps, or that an evangelist was looked for later on, or that the people were expecting something to occur that did not happen, can never be known. Perhaps all, perhaps none of these really hindered; but we were a long time getting under way, and it was hard work. But, thank God! our prayers were heard, and the labor rewarded, and happy services, with results, followed. I think it was Wednesday night before the first conversions were reported, but after that such results were frequent and, before the meeting closed, forty-five or fifty had testified to a like experience, besides a good number of such testimonies at the children's hour. The attendance was at first small, but increased as the interest grew. Sunday the usual flood of humanity poured in, and I was told that the number in attendance then was greater than for some years. My expectations may have been too great, my hope too large, but I must confess that, while I thoroughly enjoyed the meeting, I felt and believed that more should have been accomplished.

The presiding elder, Rev. L. S. Jones, was not in good health, and engagements for several Quarterly Conferences prevented his being present during the entire meeting, but nevertheless he gave us two good sermons, with excellent results. The other preachers who occupied the pulpit were Bros. W. J. Roberts, J. N. Tucker, T. B. Holloman, Gatlin—I forget his initials—W. B. Lewis, C. C. Miller, J. W. Crisler, J. A. B. Jones, G. W. Huff and myself. Bros. G. D. Anders, G. M. Hull, B. S. Rayner and C. W. Crisler dropped in and cheered us with their presence and prayers and rendered valuable help at the altar.

The singing was well done by an efficient choir under the direction of Bro. C. W. Smith, who is associated with Evangelist McIntosh. He is a genuine Christian, whose heart is in his work, and he sees to it that his part of the service does not lag.

There was sickness part of the time in several tents, and on the last Sunday the spirit of Sister Robinson rose from the camp and conflicts of God's soldiery to the crown and joy of her eternal home.

If we who profess to saving faith and saving grace will only constantly manifest the Christ in our daily conduct, and bring forth the unmistakable fruits of the Spirit—"love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against which there is no law" (Gal. v, 22 and 23)—till the camping time of 1897, there will be such an ingathering of precious souls as the tenters have never known. The great demand to-day upon the church of God is not better preaching, but better living. The sight of our good works is to bring others to glorify our Father in heaven. Who of all God's children would not toil and suffer for such accomplishments? Who, in view of God's rich promises, can fail to pray for and rejoice in the confident expectation of such results?

Remove the Limit.

I have been interested in the discussion by the brethren of my old Conference on the question of the number of presiding elders' districts in the Conference. I have been interested because I know all those brethren to be wise and true, and because I have studied and observed much on that subject of late years.

It is my honest conviction that the time has come when all limit, by specific law, should be removed, and the size of the districts be left to the wisdom of the appointing power. Is there any reason why they should not be as competent to decide what should be the size of a district as the size of a pastoral charge? As it is now in our church, we are having an undue waste of both men and money to supply the districts and to support the presiding elders.

I have for the past eight years been working both as a presiding elder and as a pastor in the same field with the M. E. Church. That church has removed all the restrictions, and it is left to the judgment of the Bishop and his advisers how large the districts may be. They have large districts everywhere except in the strictly mission fields. In the cities, where the territory is compact, it is common for them to have from sixty to eighty charges in a district, and scarcely ever under thirty. It must be conceded that when this is the case the presiding elder can not have all his quarterly meetings on Saturday and Sunday, neither can he give every church an eleven o'clock sermon on a Sunday morning, and it is equally as clear that they are not needed. It gives the presiding elder plenty of time to visit the charges, and look after the matters in his line. In many instances they hold a Quarterly Conference in one charge Saturday evening, preach Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, and go to a neighboring charge and preach Sunday night, and hold the Quarterly Conference Monday; then by holding a few in the middle of the week, they make their rounds very easily and efficiently.

The beauty of it all is in the economy of money. A district of thirty charges can support their presiding elder well on average assessment of $40 to the charge, and by paying it quarterly, it becomes an easy matter to raise it without materially affecting other finances. I have served a charge here in Colorado paying me an $800 salary when my M. E. brother was getting $1,000. My charge was assessed $260 for the presiding elder, and his $30. His people made it a rule to raise his $7.50 by a special call at each quarterly meeting, which was easy to do, and it had no material effect on the other assessments. Had our rule obtained, the pastor's salary and all other claims would have been affected, and the presiding elder would have received a less salary.

North Mississippi, which is an average Conference, has nine presiding elders receiving an average salary of about $1,027, or the sum total for all of $9,250. With the facilities they now have for travel, and the compactness of the charges four men could do the work with more ease than nine could have done it twenty years ago. The church could pay each of these men $1,500, which would be $300 in excess of the highest pastor's salary, and still save $3,250. That would be well applied on weak charges or on charges not now occupied as a help to the home missionary work, or, if not needed there, to swell the foreign missionary collection. In that case each district would have a fraction over thirty-three charges. The charge that now pays the presiding elder $16—which is the smallest amount paid—would only pay $11.56, and the charge that now pays $200—which is the highest sum paid—would only pay $122 to support of presiding elders.

Taking North Mississippi as the average for the whole church, we can easily dispense with 160 presiding elders and thereby save $164,412 per annum, which we might turn into our missionary treasury, or in other places where the need is great. I really believe that we could serve the church just as well with 200 less, which would save us $205,400 per annum.

I think I am aware of all the arguments against such a plan, and understand both their nature and force. The fact is that I was for many years a most tenacious conservative on the subject of presiding elders and districts, as well as everything else in our economy, and there is not an argument in this respect that I have not often used with all the ardor of my nature. I [illegible] such an innovation as I now advocate would utterly ruin the church. All there is in the adverse arguments may be summed up in sentimentality, which often bars all true progress.

Church Dedicated.

Our fourth and last quarterly meeting for Hermanville circuit, Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, has come and is now numbered with the things of the past, and with it came our much esteemed presiding elder. Saturday was a nice, day and tolerably good attendance and interesting Quarterly Conference. Sunday had been set apart to dedicate our beautiful new church at Pisgah, which had been planned and part of the money raised during Bro. G. A. Guice's administration as pastor, and built and the remaining part of money raised this year.

Sunday morning it was raining, and continued nearly half the day, so was very unfavorable; but there finally gathered a pretty good congregation, and the church was formally dedicated. Bro. Weems preached an excellent sermon just suited to the occasion, and the people were well pleased and expressed many desires that the Bishop would send him back to us for another year. He is certainly a model presiding elder.

The people of Pisgah Church certainly deserve great credit for the beautiful church they have erected to the service of Almighty God, and especially are we indebted to one of the members for his liberalty in making it possible to erect such a beautiful house. May God graciously bless all that helped in the work, and give the church great prosperity in the community. God bless the church everywhere!

FOOTSTEPS OF ANGELS.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

When the hours of day are numbered,
And the voices of the night
Wake the better soul that slumbered
To a holy, calm delight—

Ere the evening lamps are lighted,
And, like phantoms grim and tall,
Shadows from the fitful firelight
Dance upon the parlor wall;

Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door—
The beloved ones, the true-hearted,
Come to visit me once more:

He, the young and strong, who cherished
Noble longings for the strife,
By the roadside fell and perished,
Weary with the march of life!

They, the holy ones and weekly,
Who the cross of suffering bore,
Folded their pale hands so meekly,
Spake with us on earth no more!

And with them the being beauteous,
Who unto my youth was given
More than all things else to love me,
And is now a saint in heaven.

With a slow and noiseless footstep
Comes that messenger divine,
Takes the vacant chair beside me,
Lays her gentle hand in mine;

And she sits and gazes at me
With those deep and tender eyes,
Like the stars, so still and saint-like,
Looking downward from the skies.

Uttered not, yet comprehended,
Is the spirit's voiceless prayer,
Soft rebukes in blessings ended,
Breathing from her lips of air.

Oh, though oft depressed and lonely,
All my fears are laid aside;
If I but remember only,
Such as these have lived and died!

Correspondence.

Our St. Louis Letter.

MR. EDITOR: I assure you that the newspaper rumor that I am greatly desirous to leave Missouri is not authorized by me. [Our statement on the subject was based on an article in a St. Louis secular paper with that particular paragraph about Dr. Werlein marked. We supposed that Dr. Werlein had sent it.—EDITOR.] On the contrary, I delight to live in this invigorating climate, and am in no hurry to turn away from this mammoth field of labor. You must know that St. Louis has some very enterprising papers, in so much that when news does not come legitimately they manufacture it. These same papers are in some respects like His Holiness the Pope—they are not willing to admit their fallibility. A statement once made by them flies with the rapidity of lightning, but the correction moves with snail-like slowness. Perhaps the rumor originated in the fertile mind of some one who is enamored with the itinerant system, and believes that eight and a half years should be the maximum limit of an itinerant's stay in one place. Be this as it may, I do not feel greatly afflicted by a continued residence in this Queen City of the West, in which the most promising opportunities to advance the cause of our beloved Methodism are more apparent every year. St. Louis is in every sense a live city. There is more breeziness about Chicago, more display, but for solid, permanent progress, perhaps no city in the country is more conspicuous than St. Louis. The improvements since my arrival have been prodigious. I never saw anything like it. Up to the advent of these hard times business was making vigorous strides. Now the leading merchants declare they have never known money to be so tight. There is no market for real estate, and the great industries are doing only about half their usual work. Thousands of skilled workmen are promenading the streets looking for work, while many of those in service are engaged only half the time.

Everybody has turned politician. Many of our city preachers have felt called to air their opinions on the present issue, and have no sooner published their convictions than they have arrayed for or against them different classes in their congregation. I believe, with one exception, our own Methodist preachers have not given their views to the public. Dr. Mathews has declared for Bryan. Dr. W. W. Boyd, of the Second Baptist Church, declared for gold last Sunday night, and Dr. Palmore remarked to me that on leaving the church he heard a gentleman say: "That decides me; I will vote for free silver."

Last Tuesday night, at First Church—Rev. C. L. Smith, Ph.D., pastor—was held an Epworth League mass meeting. Leaguers from all over the city were present, and the cause was helped by the meeting. An address was made by Mr. J. W. Lewis, Jr., son of Rev. Dr. T. W. Lewis, who extended a most felicitous welcome; and Rev. W. F. McMurry Stell, president, followed. Rev. Z. M. Williams, of the Missouri Conference, spoke on "The Opportunity;" Rev. G. M. Gibson on "The Bible;" Rev. S. P. Cresap on "Godliness," and Rev. W. T. McClure gave a pointed address. Missouri Methodism gives promise of decided advance in League work.

This is a city of conventions. One can almost put his finger on the artery of American life here. The great Auditorium which was specially constructed for the Republican convention has not yet been taken down. They say that from 15,000 to 20,000 people can be accommodated in it. Mr. Bryan entertained a vast throng in this building recently.

A Sunday-school mass meeting was held here under the auspices of the St. Louis Sunday-school Union, and it was one of the most inspiring gatherings. Possibly 5,000 voices sang in perfect unison, and the musical feature reflected much credit on Mr. Bolt, the leader. Governor Stone and Mayor Wallridge spoke.

Next month the National Convention of the W. C. T. U. will be held in this city. At the last meeting of the Evangelical Alliance it was resolved that all Protestant pulpits be proffered the ladies where no serious objections stood in the way of such courtesy. I trust our tornado-wrecked church may be ready to further the work of these consecrated women. The auditorium of the church has been considerably enlarged, and for all the needs of our work it will be much better suited than the building which was almost demolished. Lafayette Park Church was in the track of the tornado, and it was the only Southern Methodist Church which was seriously injured by the destructive storm. (Centenary Church was injured to the extent of about $450.) The stewards of this church on their own responsibility issued over one thousand letters of appeal to pastors of our connection. A noted steamboat captain remarked to me that the church would realize $7,500 on the venture. One of our most prominent and liberal Methodists declared if the church depended on that source for its reconstruction, it would not be repaired till doom's day. Some of our friends said: "The whole country is in sympathy for you. They will send you $25,000." Can you guess how much was realized? The sympathy of Southern Methodism on this occasion amounted in actual cash to less than $100! The appeal made to our local churches was more generously met. More than seven thousand dollars have already been subscribed, and before the repairs will be completed doubtless nine thousand dollars will have been raised and expended.

The mayor of the city was greatly censured by many people for refusing aid proffered by other cities. He declared that St. Louis was amply able to care for itself. The Relief Committee expended about $213,000 in food, clothing, rent and cash for the relief of the sufferers. Next week it is hoped to raise $100,000 more toward this same fund, as the Exposition authorities have proffered all their receipts, except for actual expenses. This amount is inconsiderable when compared with the hundreds of thousands of dollars that were donated in private benevolences.

Most of the residences and buildings which were injured by the tornado—and these were, perhaps, 2,000 in number—have been repaired, though in some cases the ruins still mark the destructive force of the mighty tempest.

We have inaugurated an Epworth League mass meeting, to be held annually at our Conference session. The initial one was quite successful. Rev. Jno. M. Moore, Ph.D., pastor of Marvin Church in this city, has been placed in charge of the page devoted to Epworth League interests in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, and he is determined to arouse the churches and the young people to the importance of this movement.

Dr. Mathews preached his semi-centennial sermon at the Conference. He told us about the early heroes of Methodism in this country, and gave reminiscences interesting and humorous.

I had the pleasure last June, while on a visit to Howard-Payne College, at Fayette, Mo., of meeting the Democratic nominee, Mr. Bryan. We were both the guests of Dr. Hammond, then president of Central College, and Mr. Bryan impressed us as being a very pleasant Christian gentleman. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. His address to the young men was on "Job's Boils." He talked a little about Job and a good deal about the country. The audience was thoroughly convinced that they were in the presence of a pretty live politician, if not a statesman. About that time the prospects for the Democratic party were quite gloomy, and I very innocently asked him whether he believed there was any possibility for the success of the Democratic party at the next presidential election. He replied that he really thought there was some hope for it on the free silver platform. I doubt whether at that moment he remotely suspected that he might be the nominee. He speaks with great fluency and naturalness. He gets his audience at once, and easily holds them to the end.

The days foreseen by thoughtful political economists is now on us. Josiah Strong is proven to be no sensationalist, but a clear-headed and dispassionate thinker. History often repeats itself, and this republic may not hope to escape the breakers on which so many other national fabrics have been dashed to pieces. It is to be hoped that there is more intelligence and righteousness among us as a people, and that wise and considerate leaders may guide us into times of greater security and prosperity. I am persuaded that the questions of this day, if introduced at all into our pulpits, should be very cautiously handled. To ally ministerial influence with any partisan view is to utterly unfit the minister to serve all classes composing his church membership. There is almost enough feeling to-day in our country among some classes to endanger the peace of the nation, and the church of God at such a time as this can not afford to alienate either class from it.

S. H. WERLEIN.

The Presiding Eldership.

VIEWED FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A PASTOR.

I yield to no living man in my thorough loyalty to my church. I was born and reared under her benign influence, and in childhood I was converted under her ministry. For thirty-eight years I have been a traveling preacher in my Conference, during which time I have served one mission, one district, five circuits and nine stations. To-day I stand ready to go to any place to which I may be assigned by my Bishop, and am willing to endure hardness as a soldier of Jesus Christ. I believe in and love the doctrines of my church as they have come down to us from our fathers, and I also believe in and love the polity of my church as it has developed, as I trust, under the guiding hand of the Holy Spirit. An integral part of this polity is the presiding eldership. Around this wheel of our church machinery fierce battles have been fought, but it has stood the test of time and adverse criticism, and is to-day as useful as it is indispensable to our itinerancy. But no observing man can fail to see that this office has lost much of its quondam prestige. There are thoughtful men in our church who look upon the presiding eldership as a needless part of our machinery, involving the expenditure of money that might be better used in some other channel. And there are others whose devotion to the church can not be called in question who regard with indifference both the office and its incumbent. There are causes for this decline of influence, and these causes ought to be ferreted out and removed in order to preserve the integrity of the office.

A weak place in our economy is the absence of any authorized means of information in regard to the acceptability and usefulness of a presiding elder on his district. If a pastor is unacceptable to the people of the charge he has served, and to which he might be returned for another year, the presiding elder, in conclave with the Bishop, will make the fact known to the appointing power; but no such opportunity is afforded the Bishop to get information as to the propriety of returning the presiding elder to the district he has served; and hence it may occur that a man, wholly unsuited to the place, will be continued from year to year to the detriment of the church and to the disparagement of the office itself.

A presiding elder ought to be, in all respects, a representative man. He should be a preacher of ability, who understands and loves the doctrines of the church, and whose style and manner in and out of the pulpit are as near faultless as possible—an example for young preachers who are in their formative period. Wise, prudent, and conservative in speech and conduct, he should be above reproach, and never lower the dignity of his high calling by the slightest departure from the strictest rules of propriety. Should he chew tobacco or smoke cigars? The answer to that question depends on whether the young preachers of our church and the boys of our families should be encouraged in the formation of those habits.

The relations between a presiding elder and the pastors within his district should be of the most cordial nature. They should stand together in the work of the Lord, and be in thorough touch with each other in all the lines of that work. When this is not the case, something is wrong somewhere, and the cause of God suffers as the consequence. Of course, the pastor stands next to the people. He is with them more, and more intimately, and understands their conditions and needs better. In this statement I assume that he is equal to the presiding elder in everything except official position. Often the pastor is younger and less experienced than the presiding elder, which will modify the statement; but sometimes he is older and more experienced. There are often found in the church elements of discord, and parties who will oppose aggressive efforts, and those who will wince under close preaching, and those who will resent the exercise of moral discipline. As a rule, no pastor can do his whole duty to his charge without incurring the displeasure of some of his parishioners. These parties will naturally seek the ear of the presiding elder. I do not hesitate to say that a man who will lend himself to such disaffected elements on the ragged edge, and thus weaken the hands of the pastor when he ought to strengthen them, is incapacitated for the office of presiding elder. I know a presiding elder who will not allow any man to say a word to him against a pastor in the absence of that pastor. He visits extensively, but always with the pastor. There is good sense and sound principle in that course. It is unkind and unchristian to speak disparagingly of anyone behind his back; and no brave, good man will desire to take advantage of the absence of his pastor to communicate with his presiding elder in regard to his pastor.

I have said it is unkind and unchristian to speak evil of an absent brother. What if a presiding elder himself falls into this habit? Some good men are nervous and suspicious. With vivid imaginations they frequently think they have made a discovery about some brother, and they are quick to tell what they think. Thus it often occurs that innocent persons suffer in their reputation. A very prudent preacher once said to me: "I never heard so many hard things said about preachers in all my life as I have heard this year." Subsequently transferred to another district, he wrote me: "It is so pleasant to have a presiding elder who never speaks unkindly of the brethren." To put a man on a district who has a harsh spirit and a censorious tongue is to stab the office of presiding elder under the fifth rib. Full of self-assertion, he may push to the front, gain the ear of the Bishop, and largely control the action of Conference; but the church suffers and the office he fills is disparaged.

A dangerous power is lodged in the hands of the presiding elder. If he is a man of strong prejudices and of a tyrannical spirit, he can do immense damage both to the church and to any preacher in his district whom he may wish to humiliate. It seems to me that our Bishops ought to be very careful whom they put in this office. Men who have succeeded well in the pastorate—broad-minded and kind-hearted, well rounded and free from angularities, and, above all, men who are full of the Holy Ghost—should be chosen for presiding elders.

A Singing "Beast."

A Chinaman lately visited Europe, where he saw many strange things, and, like other travelers, took pleasure in describing to his friends, when he returned, all that seemed to him strange or wonderful. Among the things he had never seen before were pianos, and this is what he said about them:

"The Europeans keep a four-legged beast, which they make sing at will. A man, or more frequently a woman, or even a feeble girl, sits down in front of the animal and steps on its tail, at the same time striking its white teeth with his or her fingers, when the creature begins to sing. The singing, though much louder than that of a bird, is pleasant to listen to. The beast does not bite, nor does it move, though it is not tied up."—Selected.

He Did Not Know How.

A young friend of ours went not long ago to live in a Southern city. His new friends are prominent in "society," and his surroundings have not always been congenial and safe. Referring to the matter in a recent letter, our friend says: "I have been glad many times since I came here that I never learned to play cards. If I had known how to play, I am afraid I could not have resisted the pressure which has been brought to bear upon me by my friends. They have urged me so often.....I simply told them I did not know how."

That quotation is pungent. It contains a ringing argument against card-playing at home. Suppose our friend had been brought up in a home where the children had been taught to play cards "just to amuse themselves." Or suppose he had been encouraged to do so in order that he might not be "driven to worse places to enjoy a social game." Most certainly he would have fallen an easy victim to the vices of his gambling associates. But the thing had no fascination for him. He had never learned how. We commend his experience to certain Methodist parents who can see no possible harm in a game of cards among the children at home.—Epworth Herald.

Ritualism and spirituality rarely go hand in hand. The form usually crowds out the life. So history teaches. In view of this fact, it is a source of much concern to the lovers of the Church of England to observe the rapid spread of the outward signs of extreme ritualism among her clergy. Six thousand churches have adopted the Eastern position, while in 1894 the number was only 5,057, and in 1886 merely 2,433. Now 3,568 churches are using altar lights, when a decade ago there were only 1,136, and two years ago but 2,707. At present the chasuble is worn in 1,632 churches, being an increase within the past two years of 252, and of 1,127 since 1886. There are 307 churches which are using incense, while ten years ago there were only 66. The High Church party may regard this growth in distinctive ritualism as marking a happy era, but impartial observers note along with it a declension in spiritual life. This is to be greatly deprecated. A church declines in abiding power and in regenerative and sanctifying force in proportion as it loses vital godliness. God wants not so much the formal observance as the soul alive to his commands, and attuned to his praise and service.—Presbyterian.

There are daily examples of men breaking down and dying in the prime of life—some from inherited constitutional weaknesses or contracted ailments, and others from self-imposed burdens which prove too heavy to bear. Often the collapse is sudden, and if not immediately fatal, the mistake is discovered too late to be remedied. It is natural for men in the vigor of their manhood, their sinews knit in strength and their nerves strung harmoniously, to argue themselves into the belief, despite the protestations of friends, that they can endure any strain, bear any burden, without harm. That they can not is frequently illustrated, and all such should be willing to take warning against the delusion which sometimes proves fatal. Men whose lot is cast in the midst of the excitement and stress of political life, or who have the care of large fortunes, and the management of colossal business enterprises, should be wisely influenced by the lessons enforced in the prostration of Cornelius Vanderbilt by paralysis and the sudden death of Ex-Gov. Russell, of Massachusetts.—Exchange.

Du Maurier's passing away had in it something very sad and pathetic. While lingering in his fatal illness one of his friends at his side essayed to comfort or cheer him by referring to the success of his novel, "Trilby." "Yes," was the doleful reply, "it has been successful, but the popularity has killed me at last." The success of that piece of authorship was remarkable in intensity, but in the nature of things could only be short-lived. His career lasted until the waning of the book's wild popularity had set in. The writer's fame, as far as it is based on that work, will not be posthumous.—Exchange.

A WORKINGMAN'S EVENING HYMN.

BY GEORGE H. FULLERTON.

O "Son of the carpenter," daylight is gone;
My workshop is closed, my thoughts are now free;
The noise of earth's traffic is hushed in the stress,
And my heart and voice I lift unto thee.

I sing of the glory from which thou didst come
To live in a cottage and work for thy bread:
I sing of the glory which thou didst conceal
In a carpenter's son, 'neath a carpenter's shed.

How low'ly thy life! how simple thy toil!
No temple or palace emblazons thine art;
Thy kinsfolk cared not for thy birth or thy deeds;
Thy mother alone kept these things in her heart.

O "Son of the carpenter," now on thy throne,
Reveal unto me thy wonderful plan
For building an earthly, yet heavenly life—
For growing in favor with God and with man!

I, too, am a toiler unheeded, unknown;
I, too, have a spirit which longs to be free;
O teach me to work and patiently wait,
While knowing my kinship with God and with thee!

Salt and Light.

MATT. V1, 13–16

A man said to me, "If I were good enough for heaven, I should want to go at once." I suggested that he would then be best prepared to stay here; but he did not seem to understand me. The notion is prevalent that if one should be good enough for heaven, he would be too good for earth. The notion is utterly false. God converts men not merely to fit them for heaven, but mainly to fit them for earth. In the twelve preceding verses, known as the Beatitudes, our Lord tells how we become Christians; and in these four he tells the purpose God has in converting us. Heaven is the reward and result of a Christian life, but not its purpose. Work is the purpose of it. To you and to me, as much as to Peter or James or John, or anybody else who heard him that day on the mountain, our Lord says:

"Ye are the salt of the earth;
Ye are the light of the world."

We are not needed up in heaven just now. The choirs of the skies can make music without us; the golden streets of the city of God can spare us; but the world, with its tenantry of the fallen and lost, needs us.

We are to be "the salt of the earth;" we are to be savers and purifiers of society. We are not to withdraw from social life—much less are we, chameleon-like, to catch the hue of the common social life we enter; but are to leaven society with Christianity, and thus sweeten and save it.

We are to be "the light of the world." We are to bring beauty back to a sin-marred world; we are to plant the roses on the sorrow-blanched cheeks of sin cursed human life; we are to bend rainbows of Bible promise over the valleys where men and women despair in the dank and gloom of sin; we are to respan a ruined world with a smiling sky where God's love lights the day-time and stars of hope and guidance sparkle in the night-time; we are to draw the veil from sin-blinded souls and reveal the Christ and his love; we are to bring life eternal and infuse it into souls dead in sin and buried in despair, and thus warm and waken them to a resurrection greater than bursting graves and reanimated dust.

These two plain, but striking figures present, in our Lord's inimitable way, both sides of the Christian life—the inner and the outer. "Ye are the salt of the earth." Your inner personal life must be such that it will permeate with preserving, purifying, saving power the social life into which you are thrown. "Ye are the light of the world." Your outer life must reflect the Christ and carry to the world a beautifying, God-revealing, life-giving light.

If we are Christians at all, we must be salt and light—not one or the other, but both. We must save others. "But if the salt have lost his savor, . . . it is good for nothing." We must shine out the Christ-life to others. "A city that is set on a hill can not be hid." To save and to shine are the test of our profession as Christians. We must be both salt and light.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

The grand purpose of a Christian is not the acquisition of wealth, or the attainment of earthly distinction, or the securing of social recognition, but the culture of the soul, the extension of the gospel, the elevation of society, and the redemption of mankind.

Presiding Elders and Districts.

The contributions of "Gilderoy" and others, both in the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences, on "presiding elders and districts," [illegible] this thing, and, like Job's youngest comforter, "I also will show mine opinion."

It seems to me to be a little late in the history of our church in this part of the world to begin to talk about enlarging presiding elders' districts. The sentiment of all business now (the church included) is to concentrate, not to generalize. It is true of the presiding elder's work, as well as of all others. Our people can all go to church somewhere on Sunday, and do not realize the importance of going in the week, as they once did; so if we want a congregation of the people, generally, we must meet them on Sunday—presiding elders as well as others; so if he is to be a blessing to them, and stimulate them to more zeal in church work, temporal and spiritual, he must come in touch with them. This he can not do without spending a Sunday with them, and several days besides.

There is another reason now, more than formerly, why the presiding elder ought to spend some time with the churches. Our church is adding machinery, more societies, and collections, that demand more time to supervise, or overlook, the interest of the church than formerly.

If these added interests are really means of grace, they deserve to be cared for; and because they are new, they need to be indorsed, and projected, and popularized as the presiding elder only can do. He ought to stay long enough to study the situation, find what part of the machinery needs help, and throw his strength there.

Circumstances demand that the presiding elder be better acquainted with preachers and people, to justly represent them in the cabinet than in years gone by; for while to adjust and run more complicated machinery requires more delicate and careful management, the presiding elder must need study men and places more carefully than before, in order to send the right man to the right place. But if we enlarge his work and make it necessary for him to hold about thirty Quarterly Conferences in the week, and that, too, "on the run," he will not be able to represent the preacher as well as Whitefield did the young preacher to Wesley, when he said, "He has a good yelp." He won't know even if the preacher makes a good religious noise.

The Bishop would be at sea unless he had the Minutes of former Conferences and the reports of the one just closing to refer to.

So let us have not seven districts in North Mississippi, but eleven, with twelve or thirteen charges each; so that our presiding elders can spend Saturday and Sunday, and longer if necessary, at each meeting. Then our church will prosper as it has not for a long time. Let us attend to the business of the church carefully, not in a haphazard, loose, general way, for as long as we do, there will be parts of our machinery that will be cumbrous, and never used at all, in some places.

The Presiding Eldership.

I wish to say a word about the presiding eldership. I believe that in every department of work thoroughness is an essential. From quite an experience I have found that each quarterly meeting should embrace a Sabbath to make it a real success. Eleven charges, requiring forty-four Quarterly Conferences, will embrace forty-four Sabbaths, leaving eight Sabbaths, or weeks, in which to attend the Annual Conference, return to your district, publish your first round of quarterly meetings, and begin your work. This allows little time for a breathing spell. A quarterly meeting, when properly held, requires more time and labor than to hold an Annual Conference. To simply dodge in and out, preach about two or three times, and hold the Quarterly Conference, is simply to do almost nothing efficiently. I think a presiding elder should have the privilege of visiting among the people at least two days before each quarterly meeting, preach Saturday and Sunday, and, if necessary, remain and preach at least Monday and Tuesday, to make his work really efficient. I have adopted this plan, as far as possible, with my second and third rounds. To do this with as many quarterly meetings as there are Sabbaths in the year, I adopted the plan of holding my first and fourth rounds as rapidly as I can get from place to place where the quarterly meetings are to be held. This is far better than to have some of my first Quarterly Conferences three months after the Annual Conference, and some three months before the close of the Conference year, leaving only from six to nine months in which to have your year's work completed in many of the charges. My plan of small districts will solve the great difficulty about evangelists, and will not keep the presiding elder a stranger among the brethren he serves. He can assist in protracted meetings at every quarterly meeting, and thus prevent the evil of necessitating pastors to leave their pulpits empty to assist a neighbor, that he may leave his pulpit to return the compliment. Nine Bishops hold less than fifty Annual Conferences per year. Presiding elders hold from fifty-two to seventy-two or eighty quarterly meetings each year. We can not do our work well as it is arranged. I really believe that ten charges well served will pay the presiding elder as much, if not more, than twenty poorly served, as we, from necessity, are doing. Ten quarterly meetings held in succession should be followed by a little rest before the second round begins; so between the second and third rounds, and the third and fourth. Let's get men full of the Holy Ghost, as well as tried, experienced men, in the presiding elder's office. Let them visit the people at their homes, get their love and sympathy personally, and our work will quadruple in results. The plan that I have adopted of holding my first and fourth rounds in the first and last month of each Conference year has enabled me in almost every charge to assist in protracted revival service. My district this year has had conversions and accessions by the score on every charge. Let's do something to make the presiding eldership efficient in results, spiritually and financially.

We have just received a copy of the Woman's Edition of The DeKalb Press, published under the auspices of the women of the Methodist Church of DeKalb. We are pleased to know of the success of this laudable enterprise, which was undertaken for the benefit of the parsonage there. The following we clip from its columns, thus extending its circulation among the women it was designed to reach.

MRS. R. R. PARKER.

Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

For the Woman's Edition of the DeKalb Press.

Wherever a plea for foreign missions has been made, the ever recurring objection has been urged—"There is so much to do at home." To meet the requirements of the home work, the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society has been organized. Though still in its infancy, the result plainly shows the leading of Providence in its behalf. The primary object, as the name indicates, was to provide preachers homes. Many an itinerant minister has had his hands tied, and his usefulness impaired, on removing to a new charge, by the necessity which confronted him of having to provide a home for his family. Although the Parsonage Society has but completed its first decade, the report shows there are already more than half as many comfortable homes for preachers than in all the hundred years previous. In many instances, the preacher's charge has only been made possible by the existence of the preacher's home—especially in frontier Conferences. As the work has advanced other fields have engaged the attention of our women. It was discovered that whole counties in interior mountainous districts of Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia and North Carolina were almost totally destitute; no opportunities of hearing the Word of God, no educational advantages had ever opened a door of hope to the people in those neglected regions. The effort of the Home Mission Society to establish schools in these mountain districts has been crowned with success, and through coming generations the light of the gospel will shine into homes that would have otherwise continued in darkness. In Florida, the Parsonage and Home Mission Society has established the Cuban Mission for the rescue of hundreds of refugees from that unfortunate island—the Gem of the Antilles—that is not only in a death struggle with Spanish tyranny and rule, but is ready to escape the bondage of religious superstition and ignorance as well. But time would fail us to attempt to enumerate all the avenues that are opening day by day through which this society would go out in blessing to the world. The Mississippi Conference in the fourth year of its organization had fifteen auxiliary societies, but not one-twentieth the membership of our church is enrolled. Still other hands are reaching out to us for rescue—and these are truly nearer home. Many of our auxiliary societies have sent boxes of supplies and clothing to our mission in Indian Territory, while the Indians of Neshoba county, Mississippi, are without the necessaries of life—without our watch-care and teaching in the Word of God. And there are all around us wrecked homes, ruined lives, saddened hearts, that only the hand of a Christian woman can reach. In Mississippi there is not a place of shelter for that unfortunate class of women who in most cases have been more "sinned against than sinning;" to whom, when the veil of deception has been raised, and the dove wounded and torn, escapes the talons of the hawk, there is no choice but to remain an outcast and pariah. So many of these have been received into the rescue homes of New Orleans and Memphis, that the president of the latter has made an especial appeal to the women of Mississippi in their behalf. "Doors of Hope" have been established in Nashville, Atlanta and other places, and many reclaimed lives have emerged from darkness, led by the beacon light the women of the church hold up aloft for them whose home light will never more gleam through their midnight of despair.

With all these various calls for laborers in the vineyard, how wholly inadequate the small number who have responded! How is it that so many of us are idle? It can not be that our women are indifferent to the appeal of our sisters for aid; it must be only because they are so absorbed in the enjoyment of the very blessings with which their lives are crowned—their homes, families, friends—they are unconscious that outside the circle of their own happy, sheltered homes are his sheep that have wandered from the fold. Oh! women of the Mississippi Conference, will you turn a deaf ear to the call? The church has never yet made an appeal to her women to which they have not responded. Our aim is nothing less than a Parsonage and Home Mission and Foreign Missionary Society in every charge, and every woman a member of both societies.

Difficulties in the Way.

BY MRS. K. J. LAMB.

The first difficulty that we have to encounter in our W. F. M. S. work is the lack of a missionary spirit in our churches. It seems like an astonishing contradiction to hear a man who calls himself a Christian say that he cares nothing for missions; and to hear a woman say that she is not interested in missions is actually painful to one who has the salvation of heathendom at heart, as have all true members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. We always feel when we hear such remarks that that man or woman is blocking the wheels that roll the world on to its glorious destiny.

We can never expect to become interested in missions unless we both pray and work for them. We can never expect to pray from the heart for something we are not interested in. Have we no interest in the women who are taught that their very existence is a curse given for some misdeed in some former state, that for them there is no heaven, only a dreary hope that perhaps the future state may be more fortunate than the present? Have we no interest in the women whose birth brings to the family forty days of mourning? Do we not want to know something of our almond-eyed sisters, whose parents are disgraced by their birth, who are crippled from childhood, their only education confined to lessons of obedience to fathers, brothers and sons? Of the African woman who marries as her father chooses, and is one of many wives; who, if her husband tells her not to stand up before him, must thereafter crawl in his presence on pain of cruel punishment? Of the poor woman of India, married before she is ten, perhaps at three years of age, and taken to her husband's home, to be a slave to his mother, to cook his food and carry it to him? When she is sick, no physician is called, but she is taken out, and laid by the Ganges, the sight of whose sacred waters is to cleanse and cure her. She is forbidden to sew or read; her only occupation is to quarrel with the other wives. She lives with no purpose and dies with no hope. Think of the eighty thousand widows of India under six years of age, whose lot is woe, whose portion is blows and curses, and death their only release. O my sisters, if we could remove this difficulty of indifference and ignorance of our American Christian women! Can not we do something in this land of Bibles and books, luxuries and freedom, and all that goes to make us happy, to induce the women of our churches to inform themselves on missions, so that they will not only be willing, but will be anxious to do something to help on the work of Christianizing the world?

Another difficulty that I will name is a lack of funds. We talk of hard times and all that pertains to them, but if we would remember that all we have comes from God, that it is his money, and we the stewards, we might not make that quite so prominent an excuse when called upon for mission money. Systematic and proportionate giving would be the order of the day. Then Christians would not compromise their honor and dignity by resorting in so many cases to novel sensations to make a few dollars for the Lord's cause. We pray God for more missionaries and for the means to send them. Have we not the means? Had we not better pray that he will consume our selfishness, which expends our money on ourselves? Let us be honest, and see if we do really practice any self-denial for Christ's sake. In conclusion, we will quote from Mrs. Bishop, who so beautifully says: "We know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, and we hear his voice to-day ringing down through ages of selfishness, luxury and neglected duty, solemnly declaring that the measure of our love for our brethren must be nothing less than his own. May he touch all our hearts with the spirit of self-sacrifice, and with the inspiration of that love of his which, when he came to redeem the world, kept nothing back!"—Woman's Missionary Friend.

The Week of Prayer.

This has been observed no doubt throughout our entire North Mississippi Conference Missionary Society. We would suggest that those auxiliaries which have not done so would even yet set aside a week for these special services, and make an offering unto the Lord.

In Como it has been a season of peculiar blessing to the members of the auxiliary. The meetings were well attended, as many as a dozen ladies being present every evening except one. The program for each evening was well studied by the leaders, and much discussion was had along all the lines indicated by them. A deeper sense of the responsibility that rests upon us and more joy in the pleasure of contributing to this great work was aroused in each heart. We do not doubt that our auxiliary at this place will be more fruitful in good works because of this week of prayer.

Selections.

Be of Good Cheer.

Christians, of all people, ought to be cheerful. God never intended that religion should banish cheer. He never meant that those who are called by him to be separate from the world should leave all pleasure, all joy, all cheerfulness to the world. When the pleasures of the world are condemned, it is not those of an innocent character that are prohibited to believers. Asceticism is not religion; nor is religion asceticism. Many have thought so in the past; but intelligent readers of God's Word know that salvation is not conditioned on physical penance, or personal isolation, or self-imposed suffering of any kind. It is denying the efficacy of Christ's atonement to offer the sacrifices of an anchorite, or the lashings of a flagellant, either as the price of pardon or of increased holiness. Here and there a great, heroic soul, made for some great service, may renounce those things that alleviate the hardness of life that others may be helped; but such renunciation is not required of the multitude.

Men do not make themselves acceptable to God by wearing haircloth to irritate the body; or quitting human companionship to crucify the affections; or banishing all pleasant thoughts to cultivate sanctimony. A long-drawn, joyless countenance is not a sign of saintliness or heavenly mindedness. It is a libel on the Creator, and a perversion of the Creator's blessed gifts. Our Lord was a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief;" his soul was afflicted for the good of others, and he bore many sufferings for the race; but his countenance was not continually heavy as in Gethsemane, for he always had the power to give courage to his disciples. Again and again he exhorted them to be of good cheer. He cheered the heart of the man sick of the palsy, he brought brightness to the countenance of his disciples by his reassuring words when they saw him walking on the sea and were afraid; and before his betrayal, when their feelings were harrowed with the thought of how he should suffer and how they were to be scattered and have tribulation, he brought glad peace to them by the words: "But be of good cheer." One can not cheer others unless he has cheer himself. Christ through all his sufferings preserved a cheerful heart. He had a joy to sustain him, and he was able to endure because of the joy set before him.

The man of cheer is the strong man. He understands that trials must come, and the purpose they fulfill. He sees that life is not given for the sake of unhappiness; that afflictions are in the nature of discipline, and that through them we learn obedience. He perceives that there is something for every one to accomplish, and that to be of good cheer is to be in the best frame to achieve the end of life. He who loses heart loses hope of success. The battle is lost without courage and hope. It is really a duty to be cheerful, to cultivate the happy side of religion, to be enlivened with hope, not only of the life which is to come, but of the life which now is. Paul was not joyless. He founded no home, he had no family, he was bitterly persecuted, and he suffered many privations; but he was always cheerful. He exhorted the Philippians, from his prison in Rome, to rejoice in the Lord, to rejoice always. He rejoiced himself through all his sufferings, and lived to the last a joyous life.

Such a life is possible to every believer. A spirit exalted by the thought of continuous and final victory and of the glory which shall be, has the power of an endless joy, and counts all the trials of the present as "a light affliction" which is "but for a moment." One who thus rejoices is borne as upon invisible wings over the dark places of life and keeps constantly in the sunshine. He dwells on the glorious thought of redemption and of ultimate victory over sin, and is ever full of praises to him who loved us and gave himself for us.

Half of the fruit of a victory is in the joy of it. If there is no rejoicing, there is no preparation of the spirit for the next contest. The spirit which is full of cheer is invincible. Hope dies in gloom often enough, but never in joy. David knew this, and after his great sin prayed that the joys of salvation might be restored to him. Christ meant something when he said to his disciples, "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." He meant that if they would abide in him, his joy should remain in them and their joy should be full. Why, then, should any follower of the Master be continually cast down?—Independent.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. R. Roberson, Pontotoc, Miss., Oct. 15: "Although I am in the local ranks, I have been helping the brethren this year. I have assisted in twelve different protracted meetings. Have given five months to preparation for preaching and in actual work with the brethren. I have kept no account of the number of sermons preached, the number of converts, or of the number of miles traveled, but I assisted in two meetings in the Mississippi bottom; one at Goodman, one at Olive Branch, one at Byhalia, and several others nearer home. In some of our meetings we had no conversions. In others we had from one to thirty. I believe everywhere the church was revived. Some of the brethren told me if we could get the church revived, it would be a great work, and that much was accomplished at each church. We had some gracious meetings. There were manifestations of power such as are not frequently seen. At several places almost everyone in the congregation was bathed in tears; Christians shouting for joy, and sinners crying for mercy. It has been a happy year to me. I found the brethren doing well, and most of them satisfied and happy. It seems to me that the greatest need of the church today is a genuine Holy-Ghost revival; not converts simply to count, but converts whose lives are changed, and whose hearts are all aglow with love to God and their fellow-men. I believe it would be a good idea for our good Bishop Galloway to suggest a week of fervent, earnest prayer for this much-desired result in the North Mississippi Conference."

Rev. P. R. Knickerbocker, Delhi, La., Oct. 13: "'Expect great things of God. Do great things for God.' In our humble way we have tried to live out this working motto, and God has honored our hopes. When we started this year there had not been an accession by profession of faith at Tallulah for over twenty years, and no revival in Madison parish since 1860. We commenced to work with all the influences and tendencies dead against us. But in May the work seemed ready for a revival, so, after canvassing the parish, we started our meeting. Bro. H. W. Knickerbocker did most of the preaching. Soon the crowds got too great for the church (a thing unknown in Madison previously), and we moved to the court-house, which seats about three hundred people. The people came from eighteen and twenty miles, and at the latter portion of the meeting the house was well filled. We held one week, and had forty conversions and thirty accessions. The work was stable and sound; for to-day, four months having elapsed, all, with the exception of one, are true to their vows. We started the year with nine members. We have forty at present, and expect to close with fifty or sixty. I have just completed a meeting at Bayou Vidal, where there had not been preaching since Bro. Landrum was there in 1879. We started with no members, and closed in six days, preaching twice a day, with seventeen accessions. The people, who are well-to-do and cultured, have gotten up a fund and are completely remodeling the ante-bellum church. We will hold services there regularly in future. Our collections are almost all taken, and we shall come up almost, if not quite, with full collections. The preacher has been well cared for, and indications are that we shall be paid in full. Praised be God for his goodness! We as yet have not held our meeting at Delhi, but expect to do so in November."

Rev. W. G. Backus, P. C.: "We have held protracted meetings at each of our churches with gratifying results. At Norfield and Johnston station we had several conversions and accessions. Bros. Hines, Havers, M. G. Felder and Henry Gatlin did the preaching. At Bogue Chitto quite a number were converted, and fifteen accessions. The church was greatly blessed. Rev. Will M. Waller, evangelist from Atlanta, Ga., did the preaching here, and it was good, scriptural, and in demonstration of the Spirit and with power. I have never seen more thorough work done than that by Bro. Waller. His wife accompanied him, and helped greatly in song and altar work. Bro. Waller also helped me in a meeting in Summit in July. Here the results were not what we desired, but the work done was so thorough that we believe it contributed no little to the success of the recent great tent meeting conducted here by Bro. W. M. McIntosh. Our Topisaw Camp Meeting was one of the best in its history. Here Bro. Waller did most of the preaching. Bros. J. M. Morse, V. V. Boone, W. W. Morse, J. W. Sandell, T. B. Holloman, Robt. Havers and M. G. Felder also favored us with good sermons. The special services for the old folks and for the children, conducted by Bro J. M. Morse, were delightful and highly enjoyed. Sister Waller also conducted special services for the children at Topisaw, Summit and Bogue Chitto, which resulted in the conversion of many children. On Sept. 20 we began the tent meeting conducted by Rev. W. M. McIntosh. This was considered the best meeting ever held in Summit. All classes were benefited and all co-operated to make the meeting a success. Many were converted, and 76 united with the different churches; not quite one-half of this number joining the Methodist Church. The power of the Holy Spirit rested upon the large congregations from day to day, and eternity alone can tell the good accomplished. Bro. McIntosh is a success as an evangelist. He is a fine general; has tact, directness, earnestness, pathos, eloquence, and a wonderful grasp upon the multitudes who listened to the messages which fell from his lips. The singing—conducted by Bro. C. W. Smith, assisted by Miss Clara, his sister, with Mrs. Mamie Buckley, of Summit, as organist; Prof. Brent, cornetist; Miss Alice Lamkin, violinist, with about 25 trained voices selected from the different choirs in our community—contributed no little to the success of the meeting. An Epworth League has recently been organized with flattering prospects, and now to conserve the best results we must put everybody to work and keep them at it. We praise God for these meetings."

FRANKLINTON REVIVAL.

We have just closed a great meeting at Franklinton, La. The whole country for miles around was brought under the influence of the meeting. Over 60 persons committed themselves to join the different churches—mostly the Methodist Church. Bro. Benton is our pastor there, and he is very popular with all the people of the parish. I find it so much easier to hold a meeting where the pastor has a strong hold on the people. Bro. Benton is now winding up his fourth year on that work, and the people say that no preacher has ever been in that parish that did a better work for the church.

A REVIVAL ACROSS THE RIVER.

By the permission of the Rev. M. M. Smith, the presiding elder of the Helena district, of the White River Conference, I have been preaching to the people this year at Laconia and Knowlton's Landing, just across the river, west of the Greenville district. At each place we have had a gracious revival, resulting in fifty conversions and sixty-seven additions to the church, or rather sixty-seven organized into two churches.

A good organ has been purchased for the church at Laconia, and a church is going up at Knowlton's Landing.

Bro. Oakley preached four sermons for us in our meeting at Laconia, and Bro. Pittman preached for us four or five days at Knowlton's Landing. They are holding prayer meetings now from house to house, where the like was never known before. The Epworth College is doing well. It is nearly full; can take but five more girls without renting another house.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

The twenty-fifth annual Summer session of the school closed on the third Sunday in September. The results demonstrate the importance of the work, and the high privilege of systematic Bible study while away from the home school. While enjoying the delightful surroundings of nature's enrapturing endowments—the constantly changing panoramic view of the expanding waters of the Gulf of Mexico, laden with pure and refreshing breezes; the murmur of the waves as they ebb and flow; the aromatic and resinous odors of the various forest trees; the sacred quiet of the holy Sabbath—one might well rejoice in the opportunity of "communion with the saints," and experience such a spiritual uplift as is only consonant with similar conditions.

What hallowed memories cluster about the place! The tabernacle—what thrilling experiences have been given about its holy altar place! What volumes of inspiring songs!—what waves of fervent prayer! What a roll-call of saints, now over Jordan, have testified of the love of Jesus in this holy place! Here, then, have we assembled again, during the Summer months, to teach and learn the Word of Life. We regularly organize the school into classes, and secure for teachers those who expect to remain longest on the grounds. We use our Publishing House literature, and sustain an active interest in some one of our foreign missionary fields. During the past few years Brazil has received our support. The Petropolis School has been the direct beneficiary of our efforts. The letters of Miss M. H. Watts, superintendent, and the printed reports from the work, published in the Woman's Advocate or Review of Missions, were used to stimulate and educate in giving. Each class responded weekly with their offerings, the one reporting the largest sum being proclaimed the banner class, while the scholar that handed in the largest individual offering was announced as the banner scholar of the class. The following classes and amounts are reported for the past Summer: Bible class (adults), $5 70; Bible Readers (boys), $2 65; Flower Gatherers (primary No. 2) $2 51; Children of Faith (girls), $2 41; Lambs of the Fold (primary No. 1), $2 14; Gleaners (girls), $1 95. Earnest Workers (girls), $2; Pillars of the Temple (boys), $1 31; Always Ready (boys), sixty cents; Lilies of the Valley (girls), forty-one cents; sundry individual offerings, $6 82; birthday offerings, $8; missionary social, $6 40—total, $42 90. Deduct for literature, $6 90; balance, $36. A check for $36 was duly forwarded to Miss M. H. Watts, superintendent, on Oct. 6, with the request that the offering be devoted to whatever use, in aiding the school in Petropolis, that she considered most important.

The superintendent's prize, a handsome teachers' Bible for the banner scholar raising the largest sum for the missionary cause, was awarded to Master Jefferson Hamilton Price Williams, he having labored diligently, through catching and selling crabs during the Summer months, to obtain it.

In closing this report, acknowledgement is due to those faithful teachers who wrought so intelligently to make the work the success desired and attained. May the blessing of our Lord follow them as they take up their labors again in their home schools! "God be with you till we meet again."

The Book of Life.
There are many things in the great book of life that every woman ought to know and that few women do know.
Every woman in the world ought to know all about her own physical make-up. She should have a copy of Doctor Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It is a handsomely illustrated volume of a thousand pages, several chapters of which are devoted to the reproductive physiology of women. It is written in plain language, and contains over three hundred illustrations and colored plates. It is now offered, paper-bound, absolutely free to any woman who will send twenty-one cents in one-cent stamps to cover the cost of mailing only to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. If handsome, substantial, French cloth binding is desired, send ten cents extra, thirty-one cents in all. A woman ought to know the vital importance of health. She ought to know that nothing can make her so miserable, or so useless in the world, as disease and weakness of the organs distinctly feminine. She ought to know that this disease and weakness can be prevented and can be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. There are three times in a woman's life when this great remedy reaches its best usefulness—when the girl becomes a woman—when the woman becomes a mother—and when the capacity for motherhood ceases. At these times the importance of a perfectly healthy condition of her system is of the greatest importance. "The Favorite Prescription" is a purifying, curative, tonic, which works directly on one set of organs, and on no other. It cures when doctors fail, and it cures without the humiliating examinations and local treatment, so invariably insisted upon by physicians. It will cure any case of so-called "female complaint." It soothes the nerves, makes the appetite and digestion good, and brings restful, refreshing sleep.

A Challenge to Dr. S. A. Steel.

In last week's issue of the St. Louis Advocate Dr. S. A. Steel has an article in which he uses the following language, "I am forbidden to oppose worldliness in the Epworth Era." This is news to us. We have read the charges and specifications proferred against Dr. Steel by the Book Committee. We have read the proceedings of the celebrated Committee of Trial as far as they have ever been given to the public. We have read the verdict of the committee in connection with the written promise of Dr. Steel on which it was based. In short, we have read everything that has been published on the subject; and we have failed to find any such prohibition as Dr. Steel speaks of.

Is it possible that the Book Committee, composed of prominent representative preachers and laymen, selected by the General Conference from various sections, is so thoroughly worldly in sentiment that it will not allow a paper founded for the special benefit of our young people to say one word in opposition to worldliness? Is it true that the Committee of Trial, composed of nine preachers from as many different Conferences, was equally worldly in spirit, and so demanded this of Dr. Steel as the sine qua non of his continuance in office? Is it true that three of our Bishops participated in that trial as presiding officers without uttering one word of disapprobation of proceedings so infamous? Is it true that Dr. Steel's friends, Drs. Mahon and Hamner, who are reputed to be men of high Christian character, advised him to make a pledge that he would cease to use his editorial pen in advocacy of a high standard of spiritnality? Is it true that Dr. Steel made such a pledge? If all this is true, then we have greatly misjudged Dr. Steel. Whatever we may have thought of his judgment anent certain matters, we have always regarded him as a man cast in a heroic mould—having in him the stuff that martyrs are made of. Alas! that we should have been so deceived! Where is the heroism in a man who is willing to take such a pledge in order to retain his place on the tripod of a church paper?

We have never claimed to be heroic, but we most solemnly affirm that whenever the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE demands such a pledge of us as a condition of continuance in office, our resignation will be tendered at once. If Dr. Steel's statement is correct, then Southern Methodism needs to array herself in sackcloth and ashes. Can this statement be correct? We have no proof of it save the assertion of Dr. Steel. Will he kindly furnish us with the proof? If he does not wish to write upon the subject in the Epworth Era, the columns of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE are open to him.

Will Dr. Steel accept this challenge? As Dr. McAnally used to say, "We shall see what we shall see."

Something New.

The Parsonage and Home Mission Society of this city has inaugurated recently a benevolent enterprise of a very praiseworthy character. It is called a "Boarding Home for Working Women." It furnishes board for $3 per week—about half the usual price. This itself is a matter of no small importance, as there are many wage-working women in the city who have loved ones elsewhere depending upon their earnings. Besides this, it furnishes protection and a wholesome home influence which in many cases will be immeasurably beneficial. It is domiciled at 79 Melpomene street, between Camp and Magazine. The building is a two-story structure of ample dimensions for present necessities. It opened its doors on the twenty-third. The executive committee is as follows: Mrs. W. W. Carre, president; Mrs. T. H. Holmes, vice-president; Mrs. George Brown, secretary, and Mrs. Henry Haag, treasurer; Mrs. F. A. Dicks, Mrs. J. G. Rowland, Mrs. H. Hoover, Miss Arabella Coffrey, Mrs. J. Wilkinson, Mrs. Georgiana Holmes, Mrs. Dr. Reilly, Mrs. F. A. Daniels, Mrs. L. L. Abbott, Mrs. J. Donnelson.

The Central Committee of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society at its last annual meeting made an appropriation of $300 in aid of this enterprise, the necessity for it having been urged upon them by Mrs. F. A. Lyons, the New Orleans member of the committee. The executive committee has been so fortunate as to secure the services of a matron of large experience—Mrs. L. A. Abrams, of St. Louis.

We believe this institution will meet a felt want in this city, and that it will accomplish much good. Every enterprise of this character should meet with the sympathy and support of all good people. It is one of the encouraging signs of the times that the church of God is inaugurating so many philanthropic enterprises. God bless our good women in their noble work!

A Third Salvation Army.

Another full-fledged Salvation Army will soon be campaigning in this "land of the free." This movement originates where we would least have expected it—in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The organization will be thoroughly military. Evangelists trained for their work will be sent in the course of time to all the large cities to operate among the poor. There will be out-door preaching with the usual Salvation Army accompaniments of street parades and bands of music. The plan includes the founding of homes for the homeless and rescue houses for fallen women.

However distasteful some of the methods of the Salvation Army may be to people of culture and refinement, its success in soul saving is an all-sufficient vindication of its right to exist. No higher testimony to its efficiency as an evangelistic agency has ever been given than is found in the initiation of this movement inside that staid, conservative organization, the Protestant Episcopal Church. Bravo! for the Salvation Army. Welcome! Thrice welcome to American shores any organization which can arouse our churches from their lethargy and cause them to devise new methods to seek and save the lost.

Premiums Awarded.

The largest number of subscribers sent in by Oct. 15 was by Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of the North Mississippi Conference, now stationed at Gunnison. He, therefore, receives the first premium, a handsome Miller organ, purchased of Junius Hart, of this city, one of our regular advertisers. The second premium goes to Rev. W. T. Woodward, of the Louisiana Conference, now at Simmsport. He has choice between a handsome gold-filled watch guaranteed for twenty years, and our Arlington B Sewing Machine. The third premium is awarded to Rev. D. W. Babb, Louisville, Miss., North Mississippi Conference. This premium is a set of Clarke's Commentaries, latest edition, with modern additions. Not one of these three brethren had any specially favorable conditions. The secret of their success was diligent work. There are, we are sure, many pastors in the patronizing Conferences who could have equalled these in the number of subscriptions with less than half the amount of work which they did.

Do They Want It?

The caption to this article is so long that I have shortened it, and now explain. The pronoun "they" in the question stands for the members of the Methodist Church in Louisiana. The pronoun "it" stands for Centenary College. So the caption of this article really is this: Do the members of the Methodist Church in Louisiana want Centenary College? This question ought to be answered with a tremendous emphasis in the affirmative, but it can not be answered that way. This is my third year in connection with the college, and I have seen, up to this time, no very striking proofs that the Methodists of Louisiana care very much for it. There are a few Abdiels, but I have come to the conclusion that the large majority of our Methodists don't care the snap of a finger for the success of the college. I have not come to this conclusion willingly. I have been forced to it by the way our people treat the college. We have some rich Methodists and very many well-to-do, yet no one has offered pecuniary aid to help us out of our troubles.

THEY KNOW VERY WELL THE NEEDS OF THE COLLEGE. There is a large number of boys of Methodist parents in our bounds, and yet they do not come to Centenary to be educated. Some think they account for our small number of students by the hard times. This can not be so, for all other schools throughout the State are full to overflowing. Are the Methodists poorer than other people? A brother wrote us that he "took great interest in Centenary and would rejoice in its success," and then sent his boys to a State college! Such interest as that is a pure humbug! That man ought to come here and let us teach him the meaning of some English words. We have up to this date enrolled sixty-five students! If this enrollment is not in evidence that the Methodists of Louisiana do not want the college, what does it mean?

In a former article I showed that the teachers in the college are doing more in the matter of money towards the education of preachers' sons and young preachers than all the church put together. Now, put these things alongside each other, and the question asked is answered negatively. Then why should three preachers and four laymen stay and work where they are not wanted?

C. W. CARTER.

Centenary College, Oct. 25, 1896

The above appeal of Dr. Carter ought to put Louisiana Methodism upon its mettle at once. The Louisiana Conference can not afford to let its only male college die of inanition. If Centenary College had the patronage to which it is entitled from Louisiana Methodists, its class-rooms and dormitories would be crowded. Moreover, the educational collection ordered by the Annual Conference ought to be paid dollar for dollar. Yea, under present conditions, it ought to be overpaid. No one will claim that it is right for the seven men who compose the faculty of Centenary College to contribute more for the cause of education (the tuition of young preachers and the sons of preachers) than all the rest of the Methodists of the State besides. Yet, while every one admits the injustice of this, what is being done to bring about the needed change? Something must be done, and done quickly. No one can fail to realize what Dr. Carter's letter means. Brethren of the Louisiana Conference, can you afford to drive the noble men who compose the faculty of your college from the positions to which you have elected them? We urge every preacher in the Conference to bring up every dollar of his assessment for education. We also suggest to the leaders of the Conference that they put their heads together and devise some plan by which the exigencies of the situation can be met.

The North Mississippi Conference is preparing to get out just after its approaching session a 12-page edition of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, containing the entire proceedings of the Conference except the itemized statistical tables. Ten thousand extra copies will be issued and distributed gratuitously. Thus the people will have an opportunity to read the proceedings of the Conference at once instead of waiting three months for the Minutes in pamphlet form. Is not this an example worthy of imitation by other Conferences?

Lost Opportunities.

Our Savior's woes upon Chorazim, Bethsaida and Capernaum were based upon their lack of appreciation of their glorious opportunities and their failure to improve them. In the important matter of Christian education the eighty thousand Methodists in the State of Mississippi manifest the same stolid indifference to a golden opportunity that will soon be gone forever.

For five years one man has published to the church and the world his willingness to duplicate any amount up to $25,000 that the church would raise, that we might have under the care of Methodism in Mississippi a college of high grade, and yet those eighty thousand members have allowed the opportunity to go by from year to year when the small sum of 30 or 35 cents per member would have secured the handsome sum of $50,000 per annum to our endowment. Surely we have been asleep to this, our golden, opportunity.

To many the endowment of $100,000 seems a great deal, when really it should be but the beginning of a greater work. Large amounts do not find safest investments at high interest. The interest on $100,000 does not mean great things in the support of a faculty such as Millsaps now boasts. Five hundred thousand dollars endowment, with the present rapid growth of the institution, would not more than meet her demands. It is within the easiest reach of the Methodists of Mississippi to secure this princely sum, if they will only make the effort. Twenty-five thousand a year means fifty thousand, and in ten years we have the amount. Already we have lost in five years by our inactivity on this question $250,000.

Brethren, let us think on these things and seize these golden opportunities. In no other business are we so negligent of our advantages. Truly "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

We wish we had the power to emphasize the words of Bro. Holloman in such a way as to make them take hold of the conscience of Mississippi Methodism. We think it would be hard to find in the annals of the Christian Church so remarkable a failure to utilize a golden opportunity. One man stands holding in his hands a purse containing $25,000, and saying to a band of Christian people, 80,000 strong: "I will give you this sum year after year for the cause of Christian education, if you will raise the same amount among yourselves." Does not everybody know that these eighty thousand people could raise $25,000 a year without one single person giving beyond his means? But in matters ecclesiastical it is idle to talk about per capita contributions. Everybody does not give, and will not either to this or any other cause. Suppose, then, we take off three-fourths of the whole—sixty thousand—as representing the parasitical element of the church; we still have twenty thousand members. Could not those raise $25,000? Why, we have hundreds of men who could give hundreds of dollars to this cause without denying themselves or their families of a single luxury, while there are thousands of others who could contribute smaller sums without any inconvenience. We have a few who could give thousands without feeling it. No one, we believe, will plead want of ability on the part of the church as a reason for our failure. This opportunity will soon pass away to return no more. The offer may be withdrawn at any time. It is a wonder that it has not been before now. The reason of our inglorious dereliction at this point we believe is to be found in a want of appreciation of higher education from a Christian standpoint. Our people need to be indoctrinated at this point. We shall recur to this subject again.

Some weeks since there appeared in our columns a commendatory notice of a recent work from the pen of Rev. J. B. Robbins, D. D., of the North Georgia Conference. The notice was not written by the editor, but came from the pen of a contributor at a time when the editor was on the invalid list. Since then we have examined the work and found that it is not one that we can commend in toto. Its teachings concerning depravity and some other points are not in accordance with our views. We deem it appropriate to make this statement. Nevertheless, we predict for the work an extensive circulation.

To the Preachers of the Louisiana Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: Our mission among the French-speaking people within our territory has been a success fully equal to our highest expectations. Two houses of worship have been put into process of building, with hope of having one of them ready for us—but not finished—before the time for our Conference session.

The destructive drouth which has prevailed nearly through our entire Conference threatens to cut our collections down 30, or maybe 50 per cent. less than last year. With this shortage, it will be impracticable to keep Bro. Wallace in the field—among the French. There are generous men scattered all over the Conference who have means sufficient to make special donations for this work, without in the least interfering with the regular collections for missions. Please present this matter to them and ask for special contributions for our missionary to the French-speaking people of our State. If those who are able to help ever had a call, they have it in this emergency.

J. A. PARKER,
Sec. Board of Missions.

In the Living Present.

On Oct. 22 Princeton University celebrated its hundred and fiftieth anniversary. It was a gala occasion. Representatives from the various universities of this and the European continent participated. It is an historic fact that George Washington made this institution a present of fifty guineas. Rev. Aaron Burr, father of Vice-President Burr, the slayer of Alexander Hamilton, was its second president. It is largely endowed. Of its forty-four buildings the Alexander Hall, which can seat two thousand persons, has only recently been finished.

The windy wordiness of many was pertinently illustrated by a public speaker who wished to say that two and two make four. Said he: "If, according to the arithmetic rule, which, among schoolmen, is known by the name of addition, we shall try to determine the totality of two and two other individual units, we will soon discover—and this I declare boldly, without the fear of successful contradiction—we will soon discover, I repeat, by said arithmetic rule—and I declare myself perfectly responsible for this assertion—that the sum total of the two individual units and two other such units make four." Wonder if such style is in vogue anywhere?

The St. Louis Republic, commenting on Dr. Smith's lecture before the National Prison Congress in Milwaukee, saying that the greatest number of crimes are committed by the most advanced and, morally, the most progressive nations, reiterates the Scriptural statement, that "covetousness is the root of all evil." Quoting from said paper: "Since riches can be obtained lawfully and only by a few, the number of those who endeavor to acquire wealth unlawfully naturally increases."

If Great Britain should consent to the dethronement of the Sultan, what then? Islamism would continue. As Christians we could not exterminate the adherers of that faith. Ceaseless revolution would be the result. The fanaticism and cruelty of the Mohammedans are well known. It seems wisest to maintain the present status quo. Keep the Turks in good humor and multiply the number of Christian missionaries to work among them. Conquest by love is Christian.

George du Maurier, who recently died in London at the age of 62, was of French ancestry. For twenty years he received salary as cartoonist of the London Punch. Subsequently, furnishing repeatedly humorous sketches, he was elevated to the editorial staff of that paper. Additionally he produced various novels. In this line his chief production was "Trilby." It has made the author immensely wealthy. He bought a mansion on one of the popular boulevards of London. The outfit is said to be exquisite. Soon after he removed to same he died.

Rowdyism is rampant. Attacking Secretary Carlisle with rotten eggs while speaking in Covington, Ky., a most disgraceful affair. But what are we going to do about it? The tough has a vote as well as the preacher and bank president. Hence, for purposes of manipulation, toughs, roughs, ward hummers, etc., are petted. Besides, the apparent neglect of our boys and young men by their parents will increase the vast army of loafers. It is not necessary to be a prophet to foresee the result.

While we denounce cruelty to animals, we hold that vivisection is right. We employ animals for our comfort, we slaughter others for our food—why not use them for perfecting ourselves in physiology? A human life is worth far more than any number of animals. The sole aim in vivisection is how to prolong human life. To oppose it is wicked.

ICH DIEN.

Joy is a source of strength; despondency, of weakness. Therefore, the Christian ought to be joyous in order to be useful. And why should he not be joyful? He has the promise of all that is for his good in this life and of eternal felicity when life's short day is over.

If you have an onerous job of church work to be done, don't call on people who have nothing to do. Usually those who have most work of their own are the ones that can be counted on for the best service to the church.

NOTES.

Rev. F. S. Parker is rusticating among friends at Laurel Hill.

Rev. F. N. Parker spent last week in Baton Rouge assisting Rev. H. W. Rickey in a meeting.

Rev. J. L. Pierce has returned from his St. Tammany outing in good health and spirits. He occupied his pulpit Sunday to the delight and edification of his flock.

Rev. T. L. Lallance has pitched his gospel tent on Villere street, where it will remain for some weeks. This is said to be a region where the gospel is needed, and good results are looked for.

Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of the Pacific Conference (formerly of the Mississippi Conference), has been transferred to the Los Angeles Conference. This was done by Bishop Hargrove without any suggestion from Bro. Sharbrough.

Mrs. A. E. Boatner, mother of J. B. and I. H. Boatner and Mrs. S. S. Keenor, after a long illness died on Monday, Oct. 19, at her home near Jonesville, La. She joined the Methodist Church, South, at about fifteen years of age, and has lived a faithful Christian life for forty years. A more extended notice will appear in due time.

We are in receipt of an invitation to attend the nuptials of Mr. J. Freeman Walker and Miss Rebecca Carradino. The ceremony will be performed in the Methodist Church at Fayette, Miss., on Wednesday morning, Nov. 11. Mr. Walker is to be congratulated upon having captured the heart of one so accomplished and lovely. May prosperity and happiness be their portion through life!

The twenty-third Annual Convention of the National W. C. T. U. will be held in St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 13 to 18, in Music Hall, which has a seating capacity of nearly six thousand. The convention sermon will be preached by Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, National Superintendent of Evangelistic Work. There are five States which will report an increase during the year of more than five hundred members each—Michigan, Massachusetts, Maryland, New Jersey and Louisiana. It is gratifying to know that the temperance forces are increasing in Louisiana. Would to God they could be multiplied a thousand fold!

The Felicity meeting will close on Wednesday. Up to Sunday there have been eight conversions and four accessions to the church. There are other applications pending. Dr. Leftwich will be with Bro. Singleton in Baton Rouge until the fifteenth, when he will return to this city to assist Bro. Pierce in a meeting at Carondolet. Dr. Leftwich is a very strong preacher. He employs no sensational methods and makes no compromise with sin. His work is solid and enduring. We bespeak for him a large attendance at the Carondolet meeting. On another page will be found an interesting sketch of it from the gifted pen of our correspondent, "S. N. U."

Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn.

A SNAP SHOT OF THIS DIVINE.

A man rather above average stature. Round-bodied, compact, sinewy, of hardy constitution apparently, and instinct with physical endurance and fortitude. A round, symmetrical head, with a broad and gleaming track of baldness stretching from front to back, and fringed with iron-grey hair. A high, convex forehead. A full-whiskered face, with the same colored hair. A physiognomy of handsome features, and rife with an expression of firmness, self-assertiveness, leadership and command. Its predominant expression is grave, almost sombre and darkling. But it has sunny visitations in humorous anecdote, and especially in his incomparable moods of suave and ingratiating adjustment to children. And in this face of weighty solemnity come misty gleams of tenderness, as on the cloud darkened slopes of snow-clad mountains come faint, soft lights through downy cloud-rift, from the sun above.

His prevalent delivery is unpretentious to the last degree, as it is the utmost remove from tameness. There is a commanding lurkingness of reserve power, almost as significant as the placidity of a restful lion.

His gestures are sparing; forbidding comment or criticism.

His voice is not a great organ, but it is effective; for his power is not in tone, but in the electrifications of sentiment. It is not a loud voice, nor a deep one. It has not the roll and magnificence of deep and pealing sonorousness; nor the broad and voluptuous mellowness of the French horn; nor the shrill and ear-piercing note of the fife. It is not "thin and clear," with the mysterious reach of the horns of Elfland. It is hard to describe. It is rather the subdued note of the cornet, when it sputters somewhat, in a sort of metallic clatter or semi-creakingness; but has a sort of ear-invigorating force with its rather grating angularity of intonation. Its inflections lie in a moderate range, and only have their volume dilated by the emphasis of emotion, rather than by an elocutionary art to enhance or impress thought. In fact, he has an apparent disregard—not to say disdain—of elocution. While many of the sentiments he delivers would make the printed page all aquiver with electrifying fire, they escape from him in the most sedate action and utterance. Never, in the writer's observation, has he seen such a union of subdued delivery and vital and commanding power. In this respect he is a master of style; and has an individuality, unique, even to idiosyncrasy. It has its lessons; and illustrates how power will assert its perogatives and that genius is a law to itself. The wild flower has its grace, and dispenses with the nurture of the garden or conservatory.

Dr. Leftwich is remarkably eleanant in exposition, and direct and clear in delivery of thought. He moves on a high plane of reflection, remote from platitude and triteness. There is great freshness, and sometimes a delicious quaintness in his presentation of a thought; and while never strained, he is certainly very original. His evolution of a theme has the beautiful logic, as of a plant unfolding to leaf and flower and fragrance. It grows under his nurture, with a naturalness of expansion; and is not forced in the heat and hurry of development. There are no travails in his exegeses. He seldom storms the heart by sorties of action, utterance or thought. He wins, rather than commands. He differentiates conventional methods, as the sun did the wind in the fable in the struggle to make the man take off his coat. The surly blast did not succeed. The sun, with its noiseless fervors, did. Never was man more easy, natural, simple, unaffected, more free from strain, elocution, artifice, clap-trap.

While his power is unmistakable, in just what line it is most demonstrated is hardly analysable. But, anyway, he melts the heart, and steals upon the sensibilities with a subtle and recondite charm, an almost spell of pathos; and with such an occult ease that one hardly knows how one is led to heart-melt and tears. The writer thinks that Dr. Leftwich wins more victories over the sensibilities of his auditors on the field of anecdote than on any other. His addresses teem with anecdote. They are never surcharged with the latter; but the way he clinches his points with them is most effective. It is most artistic, too, in the best sense, in its mastery of legitimate methods; in its choice of one of the noblest appliances of eloquence, in its refreshment to the mind, by its fascinating kindliness of change. Some of his anecdotes are amusing, always dignified, never frivolous. Most of them are tears-compelling. But he does not make leaden and sombre the horizon of his narrative from verge to verge and put a storm of anguish or sorrow raging in your heart. Rather he makes an April of your eyes; and while the sky of sensibility is tender and loving in weeping, all about play the blessed lights of God's regard and watchfulness; and, back of clouds and rain, arches the supernal rainbow of God's promises and providence. He never desolates the heart by such storms of pathos as leave it drenched, prostrate, wrecked. Like the showers of April, which refresh and fructify, though they transiently gloom the sky, his pathetic anecdotes melt, but fructify the soul.

Dr. Leftwich has a rich technical and literary vocabulary; but he never dallies with turnings of periods. Language is as malleable as gold in his hands, and sterling too, and utterly purged of dross.

He has a penchant for apophthegm, and, at times, an almost lyrical laconicism.

But where shall one stop? A scholar; a deep biblical student; a man of rare judgment and taste; a rich spirituality; of great spiritual power; a man of great culture, and intellectuality; conversant with the great thoughts of great men; meek in greatness, and great in meekness, he illustrates and adorns his holy office.

Let others do likewise as soon as possible, so that we can make a favorable report of progress at Conference. Will each preacher procure so far as he can a sketch of the history of our church in his charge, make a brief of it and hand to me at Conference. I desire the address of any person who may possess any Quarterly Conference or other church records dating in the '30's, '40's or '50's. Also, I want a copy of the General Minutes of the Annual Conferences from 1839 to 1845. Will pay a reasonable price for it. Please let me have responses to these requests.

Arcola, Rolling Fork and Campbellsville.

A trip up the Mississippi Valley Grand Trunk brought me to these places. Very noticeable indeed are the improvements wrought in that section within the past decade. No more marked is any change than that of church life. Our brethren of the North Mississippi Conference are building wisely.

At the three above-named places we were cordially received. Our young Bro. Spraggins (a former pupil at Millsaps) showed us no little attention. At Rolling Fork our own Bro. Penn helped us much in our peculiar work. He believes in comfortable parsonages and neat churches, and looks upon the getting of money for the Lord as much of a religious duty as reading his Bible or preaching the Word. Why not?

At Campbellsville, by previous appointment, we occupied on Saturday and Sunday. Our young Bro Cottrell is doing a good work in that field, and is in favor with his people. Six were added to the church on Sunday. What a glorious future lies before this rich Delta region!

To all three of these brethren we owe a debt of thanks. We returned to our bank to deposit sheckles to both the Endowment and Science Hall Funds.

REFRESHING.

It was indeed a delight to have one, as he drew his check in payment of an old endowment note, say, "I can't discount my note to the church." Noble man! May his number increase rapidly! One pastor said, "Give me those notes, and I'll collect them." Big-souled, unselfish fellow!

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference is sustaining four young men at Millsaps College. The treasury is empty and the board is due. If the amounts due the association were paid, there would be ample to meet all the demands. I appeal to the parties who owe installments on their notes to send the money to me now. Do not wait till the Annual Conference. Some of the young men may have to leave college.

CHRIST'S TESTIMONIES.

SUNDAY, NOV. 1—TO HIMSELF.

(Luke iv, 18-22; xxiii, 3; Matt. xxvi, 63, 64.)

I.—IN THE SYNAGOGUE AT NAZARETH.

In the town where he had been brought up, in the synagogue where he had always regularly worshiped, before an audience of kinsmen and life-long acquaintances, Christ declares himself to be the fulfillment of scriptural prophecy concerning the Messiah. His testimony was indignantly rejected, and personal violence was even attempted against him. There was unmistakable evidence of power and truth in "the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth," but the truth was disagreeable.

Unbelief in Christ and his testimony is always the fruit of a heart whose desires are directly opposed to spiritual truth; but in addition to the ordinary ground of unbelief, there was in the case of the Nazarenes the spirit of envy aroused by hearing one who was on a social level with themselves, and one with whom they were familiarly acquainted, make claims of so exalted a character. The case was aggravated further by the unpleasant thought that believing on him would place them in an attitude of dependence upon him for help.

II.—BEFORE CAIAPHAS AND THE COUNCIL OF ELDERS.

Christ's trial before the high priest marked the declaration of himself as the Son of God before the representative body of the Jewish nation, and the indignant rejection of his claim by this same representative body. Up to a certain point in the proceedings Jesus had held his peace, for there had not been any real testimony for him to answer; but now, in order to force him to say something, the high priest asks him a question under solemn adjuration, which a Jew was legally bound to recognize, "Art thou the Son of God?" Christ replies, "If I tell you, ye will not believe; and if I also ask you, ye will not answer me, now let me go." (Luke xxii, 67, 68.) Then he replies further, "Thou sayest it," or, "I am," and adds the testimony, "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Here matters reach a crisis. The high priest rent his clothes in horror at the awful blasphemy, and declared that witnesses were not now needed—they themselves being witnesses that he was guilty of the worst type of blasphomy. Had Jesus not been the Son of God, their charge would have been correct.

III.—BEFORE PILATE.

When Jesus is taken before Pilate, the charge of blasphemy is not made, but the charge of sedition and treason. In answer to Pilate's question, "Art thou the king of the Jews?" Christ replies in the affirmative, but explains to him that he is not Cæsar's rival—that his kingdom is of a spiritual character. (See John xix, 33–37.)

Self-Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

The late Prof. Basil Manley, of the South Baptist Theo. Seminary, Louisville, Ky., says of Aerial Medication: "I can cordially recommend its use." Write for a fac-simile of his letter.

A Teacher's Experience.

While teaching a country school twelve years ago, I took Catarrh in its worst form, which almost made a physical wreck of me. In '92 I had LaGrippe, was followed by a very bad cough, free expectoration, loss of weight and strength. My physician advised change of climate. This I was not able to do, but used Aerial Medication; to the surprise of friends, it cured me, and for three years have had the good health that belonged to me twelve years ago.

RICHARD OSBORN, Brazil, Ind.

I took Catarrh in 1862. Grew worse for over thirty years, suffered untold misery with headaches, attacks would come on every two or three weeks and last about three days, then the gathering would break and run bloody matter; green scabs would form; hearing and memory became very much impaired. Since using Aerial Medication four months in 1892, am entirely free from all Catarrhal affection; hearing and memory restored, throat and intense headaches entirely cured.

A LITTLE WORD IN KINDNESS SPOKEN.

A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion or a tear,
Has often healed the heart that's broken,
And made a friend sincere.

A word, a look, has crushed to earth
Full many a budding flower,
Which, had a smile but owned its birth,
Would bless life's darkest hour.

Then deem it not an idle thing
A pleasant word to speak;
The face you wear, the thoughts you bring,
A heart may heal or break.

—Colesworthy.

All Are Not Hunters That Blow the Horn.

He does not look much like a hunter! Nimrod would never own him. But how he blows! Goodness, gracious, what a row! as the linnet said when he heard a donkey singing his evening hymn. There's more goes to ploughing than knowing how to whistle, and hunting is not all tally-ho and horn-blowing. Appearances are deceitful. Outward show is not everything. All are not butchers that carry a steel, and all are not Bishops that wear aprons. You must not buy goods by the label, for I have heard that the finer the trade-mark the worse the article. Blow away, my hearty, till your toes lock out of your boots; there's no fear of your killing either fox or stag!

Now, the more people blow the more they may, but he is a fool who believes all they say. As a rule, the smallest boy carries the biggest fiddle, and he who makes most boast has least roast. He who has least wisdom has most vanity. John Leckland is wonderfully fond of being called Esquire, and there's none so pleased at being dubbed a doctor as the man who least deserves it. Many a D. D. is a fiddle dee-dee. I have heard say, "Always talk big and somebody will think you great," but my old friend, Will Shepherd, says, "Save your wind for running up a hill, and don't give us big words off a weak stomach. Look," said he once to me, "there's Solomon Braggs holding up his head like a hen drinking water, but there's nothing in it. With him it's much din and little done."

"Of all speculations the market holds forth,
The best that I know for a lover of pelf
Were to buy up this Braggs at the price he is worth,
And sell him—at that which he sets on himself."

Before honor is humility, but a prating fool shall fall, and when he falls very few will be in a hurry to pick him up.

A long tongue generally goes with a short hand. We are most of us better at saying than doing. We can all tattle away from the battle, but many fly when the fight is nigh. Some are all sound and fury, and when they have bragged their brag all is over, and amen. The fat Dutchman was the wisest pilot in Flushing, only he never went to sea; and the Irishman was the finest rider in Connaught, only he would never trust himself on a horse, because, as he said, "he generally fell off before he got on." A bachelor's wife is always well maneged, and old maids always bring up their children in prime sayle. We think we can do what we are not called to, and if by chance the thing falls to our lot we do worse then those we blemed. Hence it is wise to be slow in foretelling what we will do, for,

"Thus saith the proverb of the wise,
'Who boasteth least tells fewest lies.'"

There is another old rhyme, which is as full of reason as a pod is full of peas:

"Little money is soonest spended;
Fewest words are soonest mended."

Of course every potter praises his own pot, and we can all toot a little on our own trumpet, but some blow as if nobody ever had a horn but themselves. "After me the flood," says the mighty big men, and whether it be so or no we have floods enough while he lives. I mean floods of words, words, words, enough to drown all your senses. Oh, that the man had a mouth big enough to say all he has to say at one go, and have done with it; but then one had need get to the other end of the world till his talk had run itself dry. Oh, for a quiet hay-loft, or a silent pit, or a dungeon where the sound of the jawbone would no more be heard. They say a brain is worth little if you have not a tongue; but what is a tongue worth without a brain? Bellowing is all very well, but the cow for me is one which fills the pail. A braying ass eats little hay, and that's a saving in fodder; but a barking dog catches no game, and that's a loss to the owner. Noise is no profit, and talk hinders work.

When a man's song is in his praise, let the hymn be short metre, and let the tune be in the minor key. He who talks forever about himself has a foolish subject, and is likely to worry and weary all around him. Good wine needs no bush, and a man who can do well seldom boasts about it. The emptiest tub makes the loudest noise. Those who give themselves out to be fine shots kill very few birds, and many a crack ploughman does a shorter day's work than plain John, though he is nothing off the common; and so, on the whole, it is pretty clear that the best huntsmen are not those who are for everlastingly blowing the horn.—Spurgeon.

If I Were a Girl Again.

If I were a girl again—if some benignant fairy should touch me with her wand and say, Be a girl again, and I should feel bursting over me the generous impulses, the enthusiasm, the buoyancy, the ambition, that belongs to sixteen—some things I should do, and some things I should not do, to make me at fifty the same person whom now at fifty I should like to be.

First of all, I should study self-control—the control of body, of speech, of temper; a power best learned in youth before the current of habit has deepened the channel of self-will and impetuosity that seems to be cut in every human heart. I should count one hundred, like Tattycoram, before I would allow myself to utter unkind, impulsive words; I should scorn to burst into tears because of some petty correction or grievance; I should learn to sit quietly, to close a door gently, to walk calmly, even when my thoughts were boiling within me.

I should shun, if I were a girl again, the tendency to be sensitive and suspicious. Because my friend talks to another person, or because a group of acquaintances seems to be enjoying themselves apart from me, I should not fancy myself neglected. I should not construe thoughtlessness into intentional slights, nor abstraction into indifference. I should say oftener to myself, "My friend did not see that I was here; she has not heard of my return; she is busy with her music; she is tired after her journey. I will trust in her friendship, just as I would have her trust in mine."

If I were a girl again, I should be more careful about my conversation. I should beware of slang and gossip and a tendency to drop into silence. I should avoid sarcasm like the plague, remembering that the person who uses it shows her sense of her own infericrity. Nobody ever had so many enemies as Disraeli; and it is to be remembered that sarcasm was his most powerful weapon. I should practice the art of such gay repartee as is free from satire and unkindness, learning to tell a story well, and to dwell upon what is kindly and happy. I should be more ready to express my appreciation and thanks for services rendered; be quicker with my praise and tardier with my criticism. I should cultivate a distinct enunciation, enlarge my vocabulary, and remember Lord Chesterfield's dictum "never to utter one word, even in common conversation, that should not be the most expressive and the most elegant with which the language could supply him."

If I were a girl again, I should be a better student. I should worry less over my lessons, and potter less; but I should think as I study, and try to understand statements in one reading rather then by seying them over and over, like a parrot. I should be more thorough, not passing to one lesson until I had mastered the last; and I should be ashamed of poor spelling or illegible handwriting or faulty pronunciation.

I should be more scrupulous about making and keeping engagements; I should be less daunted by obstacles and defeat, and be less, I hope, the slave of petty, but annoying habits.

These things I should do if I were a girl again. But suppose I have passed my girlhood! Suppose I am thirty! Still shall I not at fifty wish that I could retrieve the past twenty years? Should I not employ them differently? Again, say I am fifty. At seventy could I not better use those precious years of preparation? There is always a golden age, soon to be behind us, which at every period of our life is before us—just as to-morrow's yesterday is still to-day. So we may all take courage. It is never too late to mend.—Lucy Elliot Keeler, in Outlook.

The Germ Cell.

The germ cell of the nation is the home. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, in The North American Review, writes as follows, concerning the importance of our homes. Let us apply every word to our Canadian homes: "Before all forms of government, all types of civilization, all advance in education, the relations of the husband and wife make the everlasting granite on which the whole world rests. Just so fast and just so far as these relations are what they ought to be, and what God intends they shall be, just so fast and just so far will society be uplifted—no faster, no farther. 'How shall we purify public life?' is the great question of the hour. We can purify public life no faster than we purify the private life in the home, for the public life is only the public expression of the private life of a people. The advance of a nation comes only through the improvement of the homes of a nation. As the aggregate of these may be, so will the nation be. For it is in the home, conducted by the harmonious and right-minded husband and wife, that the real harmonizing and civilizing are carried forward."

The same writer says that a drunken husband and father "sends out into the world a hideous caricature of the living God in the person of his own child, whose life stretches away farther than our imaginations can follow. It is the most serious and widespread evil of our time, the drunkenness of husbands, alike in high life and low life, and it portends the direst consequences to posterity. The woman who dares marry a libertine, or a drunkard, with the hope of reforming him, or the expectation of finding happiness with him, ought to have a chance in a lunatic asylum, or a home for imbeciles." The time to reform the man is several years before marriage.—Exchange.

Leave-Taking.

There are thoroughly delightful people who possess every social art in perfection except the art of graceful leave-taking. They can not get themselves out of a room, and in the struggle to say good by to a friend, they wear upon both the friend's patience and their own, till it is threadbare. One sees these unfortunates making an attempt to conclude a call or a visit, and sympathizes with their tentative efforts to introduce the parting word. "Well, we must go," they say feebly, or desperately, as the case may be, but they do not go, and there have been instances where these undecided people have made as long a call on their feet, their entertainers likewise standing, as they did when seated at ease in the drawing-room. Sometimes it is a question of a luncheon or a dinner, and the family, hospitable and sincere, are urgent in their requests to the friends to stay and partake of the meal, but the friends will neither remain nor depart, and the cook fumes in the kitchen, and the hostess feels cold chills creeping down her backbone, and the children snatch a bite as they can, and there is a general state of distressing incertitude, all because the art of leave-taking has not been mastered by the diffident or vacillating guests.

Be Useful and Happy.

It is scarcely possible to say how very, very useful a truly good and happy child can be. I heard a French pastor, who has done much for Christ, illustrate this. A little girl had learned to read the Bible. She used to read portions to her mother. "I wish I could read," said the mother; "but it is too late to learn!" "No, mother," was the answer; "I will teach you." And she sat patiently every day and taught her mother. And some of the neighbors, when they heard, wished to be taught too. And so a class of older girl. "There I found her," said the pastor, "going over the primer, all listening to her, and following her; and then when the lesson was over, she read them a part of the Bible." Christ's welcome was overflowing from her to them. The rill that had been opened in her own soul was in her a well of water springing up to everlasting life. —Christian Herald.

Meditation is thinking of God with aspiration to God; earnest breathing of the soul for conformity to the nature of Christ and to the will of God in thought, word, emotion, and action. The direction of the whole nature is not so definitely towards the intellectual conception as towards God, the author of our being, the center and goal of our hopes. —Dr. Buckley.

To be religious is not to be a seer of visions and a dreamer of dreams. It is not to be a dweller on the Mount of Transfiguration. It is not to be rapt in sweet and serene meditation. It is to be yourself, and, being yourself, to take the nature which God has given you, and use it in his service by using it for your fellowmen.—Lyman Abbott.

The Value of Lemons.

Keep lemons in the house, if possible, as they are sure to be in demand for more purposes than one, and are very healthful. It is claimed where a large quantity of lemons are purchased, and there is fear of their not keeping till wanted for use, that if they are placed in a jar covered with clear water, and the water changed each day, they will keep as long as desired, and are as fresh when removed from the jar as when first purchased.

There are few things as efficacious for breaking up a cold as hot lemonade, taken just before bed time. It is best, to render this more effective, to bathe the feet of the patient in hot water and mustard just before retiring, then give hot lemonade to drink. Put the patient to bed almost immediately thereafter, there to remain well covered until morning, when, unless there is something more serious than a cold, the latter will have almost wholly disappeared.

To make good lemonade, take a goblet of hot water, and into it squeeze the juice of one good-sized lemon, and sweeten to taste. This makes a strong lemonade, and may not be fancied by some; but it is one of this kind that will do the most good when used as a medicine. For a cough, roasted or baked lemon is good. Put a good-sized lemon in the oven, and let it remain until baked, which will be when the whole is very soft; then take out and add a quantity of sugar to make it a thick syrup. Take a teaspoonful of this frequently, keeping it warm, and, unless in a very obstinate case, it will effect a cure in a short time.

The juice of a lemon taken in the morning while fasting is often a preventive of those attacks to which bilious people are so frequently subjected. Lemon juice rubbed over the hands each night before retiring will keep them soft and white. It is good for removing tan, and is a wonderful whitener of the skin.

It is also excellent for taking out stains from the hands. Women who are careful of their complexions, and are fond of vinegar on certain foods, would do well to use a few drops of lemon juice when any acid is desired, as vinegar has a bad effect on the skin.

A piece of lemon bound on a corn, changing for a fresh each day, for three days, is said to loosen the corn that it may be easily removed. Do not throw away bits of lemon from which the juice has been extracted, for they are good to keep for cleaning purposes. When the juice is not convenient, they are nice to rub on the hands to remove any ink stain and other discolorations.

Never eat or allow to be eaten bits of lemon left standing for any length of time, more especially where they have remained in a sick-room. Do not throw away any lemon peel, but dry it in the oven and keep for flavoring. A bit of this dried peel cooked in apple sauce, or put in an apple pie, gives a delicious flavor that nothing else imparts.—The Home Queen.

OBITUARIES.

HAMILTON—Mrs. SARAH C. HAMILTON (nee Therpe) was born Nov. 3, 1832. The place of her birth is not known to the writer. Her mother was an earnest Christian, who sought to properly train and rear her children. She was also much under the influence of her uncle, the Rev. Stephen Johnson, who passed away several years ago, but the force of whose example and saintly life is still felt. As a result of her excellent early training, she connected herself with the Methodist Church at the age of thirteen, and continued to be a faithful and consistent member until the day of her decease.

December 31, 1849, she was married to the late John A. Hamilton, who was well known throughout Holmes county. Their union was blessed with several children, eight of whom are still living.

Mrs. Hamilton's last years were spent at West's, Miss., though she died near Acone, at the home of her daughter Mrs. Mattie E McKee. The date of her decease was April 21, 1896.

Such, briefly given, are the leading events of a life of singular beauty and purity. Social, gentle, and amiable, Mrs Hamilton had many warm friends. She was a devoted wife, a fond and painstaking mother, and an ardent, enthusiastic Christian. The affectionate cordiality existing between her and her husband was strikingly impressive. So perfectly did they suit that one could not be in their presence long without feeling that they were especially intended for each other.

Mrs. Hamilton was also a woman of business ability and rare common sense. After his demise she managed her affairs with admirable skill and tact.

Her death was a fitting close to such a life. It was not only peaceful, but triumphant. Her children were by her side to supply her wants and soothe her pains with sweetest ministries. Christ also was with her. She had been faithful to him in life, and he did not forsake her in death. As her eyes closed on the scenes of this world visions of the "better land" broke upon her sight. "Oh," she exclaimed, "the angels are coming!" and sweetly fell on sleep. Truly, the memorable words of Mr. Wesley, "Our people die well," are still applicable to Methodists.

May God comfort the children in their great bereavement, and may they strive to meet their sainted mother in the better world!

A FRIEND.

BAILEY—Miss CORA MAY BAILEY was born near Cockrum, Tate county, Miss., June 14, 1871, and died at her home in Coldwater, Miss., Sept. 26, 1896, after a painful illness of some three weeks.

In the Summer of 1893 she was happily converted and united with the Methodist Church, in which she lived a most exemplary and consistent Christian life until the Master came and called her home.

The writer had been her pastor only about eight months, but during this brief period had the privilege of meeting her often and knowing her well. Her beautiful Christian character made a deep and abiding impress upon all who were in any way associated with her. "She being dead, yet speaketh," for the salutary influence of her life is like ointment poured forth. Her piety was of the unobtrusive sort, but none the less real and thorough. It shone out in her daily life, and was, therefore, a living experience. Her naturally amiable and gentle disposition was purified and sweetened by the religion of Christ, and made her life a benediction to her family and to society. Her mother preceded her to the better land by the space of seven years.

With heavy responsibilities thrown upon her by the mother's death, she proved herself equal to the demands that arose from an unusual household duties, nobly and bravely acting the part of a mother to her younger brothers and sisters. It was upon her that her father leaned, and to whom brothers and sisters looked for counsel and help. Before the end came she suffered much, but she suffered patiently and uncomplainingly. Her end was peace; her memory precious. Hers was a life wedded to duty, and self-sacrificing love ennobled all. For such a life no fulsome praise is needful. The Book of Life the shining record tells, for there her name and her deeds were written. She has gone into the presence of that Savior for whom she lived and in whom she died. Blessed hope of immortality! We shall see her and greet her again. Heaven bless and keep the bereaved ones, and bring them all safely home!

BATTE—I do not know when I have heard anything that so saddened me as the death of BEN. BATTE, who was killed in a railroad wreck on Oct. 3.

Little did I think, when I told him "Good-by" in Grenada a few weeks ago, that that would be the last time I would ever shake hands with him on this earth. Most surely is it true that "in the midst of life we are in death."

Ben. Batte was converted in our meeting at Meridian, Miss., about three years ago, and lived a consistent life 'till the Master called him up higher. He was one of the best boys I have ever known. As a son, he was true and kind. He supported his aged parents for a number of years. He was a great lover of music, and was never so happy as when playing his cornet in a great revival. He was very social in his disposition, and wherever he went made many friends, and many, many hearts in Mississippi, where he is so well known, will be saddened by the tidings of his death. I would pluck the brightest flower from my heart to-day and plant it upon his grave.

Rest in peace, dear Batte, and some sweet day we will meet in that bright clime, and I shall hear you play in heaven's great choir forever.

W. M. MCINTOSH.

Grenada, Miss.

DAVIS—Mrs. MINNIE LEA DAVIS, daughter of Mr. J. W. and Mrs. Winnie S. Lea, was born April 15, 1875, and died Sept. 8, 1896.

Her illness was of short duration. Congestion of the brain did its fatal work quickly.

She professed religion and joined the M. E Church, South, at twelve years of age, and lived a consistent member of the same until she was called to join the church triumphant. She was one of the sweetest-spirited Christian women I ever knew.

She was married to her now broken-hearted husband, Mr. Levie W. Davis, Dec. 19, 1895. She was a devoted wife, dutiful daughter, loving sister, and loved by all. She has left to mourn their loss a husband, father, mother, four brothers, and three sisters, and a host of friends. A sweet and noble woman has gone to her reward.

Loving friends tenderly laid her sleeping body to rest in the Emory Cemetery, to await the "resurrection of the just."

May the blessings of Heaven rest upon the grief-stricken ones in comforting and consoling power, and lead them to that home above where there will be no more partings!

FISHER LEWIS.

STAFFORD—JOSHUA JOSEPH STAFFORD was born Jan. 20 1893, and died at the home of his mother, near Magnolia, Miss., Sept. 30, 1896, aged six years eight months and ten days.

When Joshua was an infant his father died, leaving the entire care of raising and training the children to the mother, which renders this affliction the harder to bear; yet God says, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Little Joshua was a great favorite, not only of the family, but of all who knew him. He was a quiet and peaceable child, and exceptionally bright and promising for one of his years. Too pure for earth, therefore the Lord saw fit to take him to himself.

May the disconsolate ones find consolation in God's grace, through which they may meet their loved one in glory!

HENAGAN—Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to remove from our midst our little friend and member of our Sabbath-school, FRANK, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Henagan; therefore, be it

Resolved, That he will be missed not only in the home circle, but the Sabbath-school has lost one of its brightest and most promising members. His teacher, too, will sadly miss his smiling face and acts of kindness which he was always ready to extend.

Resolved, That this world has lost one of her radiant lights, but heaven has gained a bright jewel, which shall shine forever.

Resolved, That his pleas can not be filled, and his death has cast a shadow of deep gloom to rest over our Sunday-school and community. God moves in a mysterious way. We know not why our loved ones are taken from us, though God knows best. He is too good to be unkind.

Resolved, That while we have been called upon to pass under the rod, and our hearts are much grieved with the thought that Frank will not be with us any more, the loved one is not dead, but has only taken his everlasting flight into the realms of happiness.

Resolved, That this Sabbath-school extends to the bereaved family its heartfelt sympathy, and may God give them grace to live as he did, and in the sweet by-and-by we will meet him on that bright and golden shore, where partings are no more.

M. and E. VAUGHAN, for Com.

SADLER—Autumn, with its "sere and yellow leaf," had just given warning of its approach, tinting our lovely forest trees with gorgeous colors, permeating the atmosphere with that dreamy haziness peculiar to the season, and bending the golden grain which awaited the reaper's blade, when the "Lord of the harvest" called a faithful laborer in the church militant to her reward in the church triumphant in heaven.

In the death of Mrs. HATTIE BOARDMAN SADLER, which occurred on Sept. 27, 1896, our W. F. and H. M. Society, Bay St. Louis Auxiliary, has lost one of its most devoted members, and we feel that we should offer some tribute of respect and love to her precious memory; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in her death our auxiliary has lost one of its most zealous members; one who regularly attended its monthly meetings, and was ever ready to respond to the work, and cheerfully gave of her means to further its designs.

Resolved, That not only our society, but the entire church here will sadly miss her, for she was a constant attendant upon the services of the sanctuary, and took great delight in waiting upon the Lord.

Resolved, That we cherish her memory, emulate her virtues, and by her beautiful example be stimulated to greater zeal in the cause of Christ.

Resolved, That our prayers go up for the bereaved ones, that God may comfort them in this great sorrow.

S. E. HOWE, for Com.

SUTTON—Whereas, It hath seemed good to the all-wise Father to remove from our midst one of the precious little ones of our church; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of ARTHUR SUTTON the Methodist Sunday-school has lost one of its brightest and most faithful pupils, and one who will be sadly missed by his teacher and comrades.

Resolved, That all the sympathy of our hearts goes out to the bereaved family, and we commend them to the love and care of Him who feedeth his flock like a shepherd, and carrieth the lambs in his bosom.

Respectfully submitted.

HOLLY SPRINGS FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Epworth College

(Formerly MALONE)

Is located in Holly Springs, which is situated at the intersection of the Illinois Central and Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham railroads, into which ten passenger trains come and go every day.

Holly Springs is the highest point in the State of Mississippi, according to the geological survey, and the highest point on the railroad between New Orleans and Chicago; hence it is noted for its healthfulness. The success of the college for the last five years has been unprecedented under the circumstances. We expect still greater success under my successor, S. A. STEEL and Rev. R. M. STANDIFER, who will make such improvements as time and experience may suggest. I shall remain in the college as business manager until December, and will take great pleasure in giving to the patrons of the college any information they may desire.

I call special attention to our very reasonable terms.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. F. W. Boudoton's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with much ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endureth affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Baudoin, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 465 Poplar street, Memphis, Tenn., and to narrate going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

Piney Grove Church.

A HISTORY OF SIXTY-EIGHT YEARS.

Much interesting history is locked up in the records of many of our churches and in the memory of the older members. This history might be saved from oblivion and brought to light, as a valuable contribution to the general history of Southern Methodism, by a little effort on the part of pastors and presiding elders.

The records of Piney Grove Church preserve the names of its preachers and presiding elders through a long period, extending back to and including the year 1829. It is a long, but interesting roster, containing names long known and honored in Mississippi and Alabama Methodism.

First on the roll is "Nathaniel Hopkins," known to the writer when a boy as Nathan Hopkins, probably his correct name, and remembered for a certain peculiarity of response during prayer, using in quick succession several amens, beginning with a low voice and increasing in emphasis and volume to the last, "Amen, AMEN, AMEN." His body sleeps at Salem Church, near Macon, Miss. Then follow the names: Preston Cooper—was he the discoverer of the celebrated Cooper's Wells?—Benjamin B. Smith, Anthony Dickenson, — Hopkins, Robert H. Herbert, W. F. Fleming, W. W. Bell, George Shaoffer, — Price, — Moore, J. K. Hawkins, B. F. Thompson, Zachous Dowling, Thos. Gilmore, J. W. Lanoy, W. Vaughn, Thomas Armstrong, Wm. Lovolady, L. B. McDonald, — Hare, Ira W. Powers, Charles Strider, — Capers, Charles Hurt, — Manning, Edward McMeans, B. F. Williams, Robert Spence, J. W. Shores, J. M. Gann, W. Toland, John Baldwin, W. E. Mitchell, J. W. Peavy, V. O. Hawkins, Nat. Thomas, J. A. Peebles, graduate of old Louisiana Grange College; Leroy Massengale, mighty in prayer; J. N. Reaves, H. E. Smith, R. F. Beasley, J. E. Thomas, Ed. Eggleston, B. F. Morris, H. L. Vaughn, E. G. Kilgore, H. R. Tucker, B. F. Phillips, 4 years; F. P. Spencer; K. M. Harrison, 3 years, including the year these items were given; A. P. Sage, 1895, and G. W. Gordon, pastor for the current year 1896. Some of these served longer than one year, besides those whose terms of service are given, and some were doubtless junior preachers, as they often went together, "two and two," in the early days.

The names of the presiding elders are as follows: 1829, Ebenezer Hearn; 1830, Robert L. Kennon; 1831, E. V. Levert; William Wier, father of the writer, 4 years; William Murrah, father of W. B. and J. T. Murrah, 3 years; E. Callaway, 4 years; George Shaeffer, 4 years, three times presiding elder; Charles McLeod; T. J. Koger, 4 years, killed in battle in Kentucky; P. P. Neely, a most eloquent preacher; W. E. Mabry; T. Y. Ramsey, 4 years, twice presiding elder; T. C. Wier, 4 years, three times presiding elder; R. G. Porter, 4 years, twice presiding elder; T. W. Dye, 2 years; J. D. Cameron, 2 years; W. T. J. Sullivan, 4 years. R. A. Burroughs is presiding elder for the current year 1896.

What sacred memories center about old Piney Grove Church, and linger along the course of her sixty-eight years of history! Who can tell the gracious work accomplished through her agency? The sermons from her pulpit, the blessed scenes about her hallowed altars, the strife for the mastery between the powers of light and darkness; the rejoicings of the saints, their songs of gladness and their shouts of victory; the souls converted and sheaves garnered for the Lord—these and more—who can recount them all?

Brethren of Piney Grove, the toil you have endured, the money you have expended, has not been labor in vain nor money spent for nought. The record is on high.

Why can we not have a history of Methodism in North Mississippi? Our indefatigable Conference book agent travels throughout our entire domain, and, with the aid of pastors and presiding elders, might gather up many items of interest and value. A 400-page volume of such history would make a readable and interesting book to our 40,000 members, and ought to pay the printer. And the title: "A History of North Mississippi Methodism. By Rev. G. W. Bachman," would sound well. Why not?

A Pleasant Way to Cure Catarrh.

Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a very pleasant and positive cure for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, etc. It is used by smoking in a pipe. The healing vapor goes directly to every affected spot, giving speedy relief and making a permanent cure. Any reader of the ADVOCATE who is afflicted with any of the above diseases, who will send his name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 12 and 13 Grant Building, Atlanta, Ga., will receive a free sample by mail for trial, which will convince him of its merits; after which he can, if he wishes, get a box containing a month's treatment for $1.

An incident of the Czar's visit to Paris attracted considerable attention. On passing the Gambetta statue he asked M. Faure whom it represented, and on being told that it was Gambetta he gave it the military salute.

Making Money—Butter Made in Two Minutes.

EVERYBODY KNOWS what a fortune there is for a man that can sell a churn that will make butter for him in two minutes instead of the long hour's work that the ordinary dasher churn compels. Now, any of our readers who want to make money should write the Queen Butter Maker Co., 21 East 3d st., Cincinnati, for circulars. Everyone who keeps cows must have a churn, and how easy it will be to sell such a churn as the above. Anyone can sell five a day, and make $ 3 a month easy. Take it into any farmer's house on churning day, and they will not let you take it away after you have churned their butter for them in two minutes. Will C. Izor, Bellevue, sold five machines the first day, and made $1210, and only worked in the morning. This will give him $75 a week. Any person can do this, as the Butter Maker sells itself.

CHILLIFUGE is a superb appetizer, and is highly valuable for weak and sickly children, as well as the aged and feeble.

The Turkish government, according to reliable information received, has notified the signatory powers of its intention to execute to the fullest extent the entire spirit of the reforms embraced in the treaty of Berlin. The measures to be adopted, it is learned, will carry the reforms not only into the six provinces of Turkey contemplated by the treaty and peopled by Armenians, but will embrace the entire empire.

CHILLIFUGE contains Iron that does not blacken the teeth, nor constipate the bowels. Makes rich blood.

CHILLIFUGE possesses all the virtues and none of the disagreeable features of Quinine used by Physicians.

DEATH'S FINAL CONQUEST.

BY JAMES SHIRLEY.

The glories of our birth and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate—
Death lays his icy hands on kings;
Sceptre and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill;
But their strong nerves at last must yield—
They tame but one another still;
Early or late
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath
When they, pale captives, creep to death.

The garlands wither on your brow -
Then boast no more your migh y deeds;
Upon death's purple altar, now,
See where the victor's victim bleeds!
All heads must come
To the cold tomb—
Only the actions of the just
Smell sweet, and blossom in the dust.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

The financial system of our church provides that all ministers who are supported by the church shall have their salaries fixed by those who are to pay them, or by an agent appointed to act for them. The salary and traveling expenses of our Bishops are fixed by the Committee on Episcopacy, and this sum, or sums, is paid by the church on plans adopted by the several Annual Conferences. The salary and traveling expenses of presiding elders are estimated by the Board of District Stewards, and the same is apportioned by them to the several pastoral charges in the district. This is added to the salary of the pastor, and its collection is provided for in the same way. A pro rata division of the money collected is to be made between the pastor and presiding elder.

The salary and traveling expenses of the preacher in charge is estimated by the Board of Stewards, and apportioned to the churches of the charge. The Church Conference has the reserved right to say how this, and all other moneys the church is expected to pay, shall be raised. In case the Church Conference fails, or refuses, to exercise this reserved right, then the stewards shall adopt the assessment plan, and they may say how the money shall be paid—in weekly, monthly, or quarterly installments. All members of the church are under solemn obligation to pay their proportionate part of everything, unless relieved from a part, or all, of it by vote of the Church Conference, and for cause shown. This is a fine plan, and as nearly a perfect system as we know how to make. The object of it is to impress upon every member his, or her, personal obligation in all these matters. This sense of personal obligation is indispensable in the great work the church has to do. It pays to develop and cultivate this in every possible way. A lack of this sense of personal obligation is one of the greatest hindrances in our way today. The few are left to do what everyone is under solemn obligation to do.

This indifference to personal obligation is specially manifest in regard to certain great and important connectional enterprises the church has in hand, such as missions, church extension, Conference collections, education, publishing interests, and the circulation of religious literature. All these matters ought to be carefully considered, and their support provided for in our Church and Quarterly Conferences; but, as a general rule, they are partially and timidly considered, or wholly ignored. This is the reason why preachers and pastors are taxed with the collections. They have it to do because the members of the church will not attend to it, as provided for in the Discipline of the church. The blame and the shame of all this is not on the pastor, but on the church. It has left him to do alone what the Church and Quarterly Conferences ought to have planned and provided for in the beginning of the year. The members of the church ought to call on the pastor to help them to do this work—this service for God—and not leave him to do it all by himself.

This is the system—the financial plan—of our Methodism, as provided for in the Discipline of the church. If this system could be put into practical operation in all our charges and churches; if members realized the solemn obligations resting on them, our treasuries would be full, and the Lord's work greatly advanced. As it is, comparatively few feel any personal interest in the connectional enterprises we have on hand. If they live and prosper, all well and good; if they languish and die, it is no concern of theirs. A pastor never feels more lonesome, more nearly alone, than when presenting these high and holy claims to some members of the church. The blank stare, the curl of the lip, the pooh! pooh! of indifference is chilling in the extreme. They do not, can not, will not see that the call of God and the claims of humanity are upon them. Some souls—a few—are alive to all these interests in every church. They are the few.

In all these matters I believe our people suffer more from lack of information and cultivation than from lack of love. It is for this reason that I urge that our rules and regulations in regard to these things be carried out in all our Quarterly and Church Conferences. It will help to inform our people, to educate them, to beget in them an interest in matters they rarely ever think of. It will lay a solid foundation for future and larger good. It will lead the church to do for itself a vast work now done for it by the pastor. It will leave the pastor more time and strength for the special work to which he has been called by the Holy Ghost. It will put into practical and efficient operation the splendid and nearly perfect financial system provided by the concentrated wisdom and long experience of our church. It will develop business methods in all the business work of the church. It will save us from the accidents and miscarriages of doubtful, and often uncertain, expedients in raising money to carry on the Lord's work.

The prevailing custom in regard to the collections for connectional enterprises has well-nigh obscured from view in many places our law and our financial system for doing these things. The law, the system, is better and wiser than the custom.

GILDEROY.

Christian Perfection - What It Is.

The apparent differences of opinion on the subject have originated largely, we think, from the effort to shape all men's attainments in grace by some men's experience. It is by no means safe to lay down any line of experience as applicable in every case. In the early days of Methodism, when revivals prevailed among people who had enjoyed few religious advantages, conversions were mostly of the Pauline type. Time, place, and circumstances of conversion were preminently remembered. Naturally, that came to be a test of conversion, and many were grieved because they had no such experience. After a time some of our best men and women began to testify that they had no recollection of time or place of their conversion. This becomes more so as our children are trained in Christian homes and in Sunday-schools, and taught from infancy to love God and be Christians.

Now, recently the same mistake has been made in regard to this fuller attainment in spiritual life. Many sincere people—preachers and laymen—have enjoyed a "second blessing"—a fuller, richer, deeper experience in grace. We do not doubt that experience, do not object to it, but rejoice in it. But we insist that this shall not be made a rule by which to measure all Christian experience. Many of our very best people, of whose sanctity there can be no doubt, have no such experience. They remember no time either when they were regenerated, or had any special "second blessing." They have received the fullness of grace, but not according to that formula.

The above is a cut of "Minnie's Seaside Rest," an interesting description of which appeared in our columns a short time since from the facile pen of Miss Belle Kearney.

Undoubtedly the highest authority in regard to this or any Christian doctrine is Christ himself. When Jesus announced the great law of love, on which hang all the law and the prophets, he reached the high-water mark of his teaching, and all teaching on the subject of fidelity to God. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Any person, old or young, wise or ignorant, who keeps these two great commandments, is sanctified, is holy, enjoys Christian perfection. Perhaps he is only a babe in Christ; then he is a healthy, vigorous, growing babe. That is perfection for him. It may not be for another. It will not do for the same person some years hence, but he has the perfection suitable to him. He has normal Christian growth, and that is Christian perfection. Perpetual growth is the law, the nature, of Christian life.

All analogies illustrative of this life hold good only so long as there is growth or increase. Christians are babes in Christ, young men, fathers. This last suggests increasing wisdom. The decadence of age is not illustrative of normal Christian life. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day," but not beyond that. The waning of the day is not in the comparison. In keeping these commandments we meet all the conditions of the highest, fullest Christian life. We keep in the best growing condition, and this is sanctification.

Now, it seems to me here is ground upon which all can unite. All recognize the obligation to keep the highest law of the New Testament. To keep that law is the supreme duty. There is no requirement more sacred. How we reach this state of grace is immaterial. No formula is given. If one reaches it by a powerful conversion and an overwhelming "second blessing," all right. If others reach it by steady growth, or grasp it at once in childhood by faith in a mother's teaching, give these also the right hand of fellowship. To insist on any line of experience by which all are to be measured is formalism—the very thing whose absence is so conspicuous in the teachings of Christ.

This presents the doctrine in beautiful simplicity. Let each be satisfied that he is keeping the law to the very best of his ability. There is, and can be, no better life, no safer rule. This is the law of perpetual growth. There is no state of perfection beyond which we should not grow; none from which we may not fall. Our safety, our life, our perfection, is in keeping these two great commandments.

W. S. HARRISON.

More about Districts.

The size of districts in our Conferences seems to be a question now up for discussion. The policy of our church has been to restrict the number of appointments in a district, the law now limiting it to twenty. The policy of the Methodist Episcopal Church is the opposite of ours, some of their districts containing as many as eighty appointments. Some among us are advocating larger districts and fewer presiding elders; others would restrict the districts to twelve appointments, and have the presiding elders give more time to each charge. The one party advocate the extensive, and the other the intensive method of cultivating church territory. One brother actually calculated the cost to the church of each sermon of a presiding elder, and by a huge blunder in his figures doubtless provoked a large part of this discussion.

The question is not one of spending or of saving money, but how we shall secure the best results from the labors of presiding elders. Presiding elders are among the most laborious and useful officers of our church, bearing heavy responsibilities, and are an indispensable part of Methodist economy. The church is both able and willing to support them. But it is neither self-evident, nor has it been proven beyond doubt, that our present method of employing them is the best. If larger districts would be better, let us have them. Let the General Conference allow the change in order to test the question. If the Northern Methodists have found larger districts conducive to the greater efficiency of their ministry, we might, or might not, find the same to be the case with us. This is a question which no amount of reasoning nor theorizing can settle. We can try the larger districts, and if they do not prove satisfactory, we can abandon the plan. It is not often wise to decide a practical question by theory when a decision can be readily reached by experiment, and that, too, without serious risk of harmful results.

The object above contemplated might be accomplished in large degree without any change in our law by adopting more generally a plan once much used among us—that of assigning two preachers to a single pastoral charge. Christ himself sent out his apostles two and two. Many of our stations and most of our circuits would be served better by two preachers than by one. The chief obstacle to this method of appointment is the lack of unmarried young preachers. It has somehow come to pass that most of our young preachers fail to heed the advice once given by one of our wisest Bishops—not to marry before graduation to elder's orders. The people would then have a greater variety of preaching and of pastoral service, and the younger ministers would have the incalculable advantage of being associated with men of experience in their early training. Two preachers, aiding each other in their work, may be safely estimated to be four times as efficient in bringing men to Christ as one would be working alone.

A fair experiment will, I think, demonstrate the wisdom of this plan.

Correspondence.

The Mississippi Orphans' Home.

The committee on beds, plans and specifications of the Mississippi Orphans' Heme met in Jackson on Oct. 9, 1896, every member being present. After carefully examining several plans, the committee decided upon one that will give, we think, very general satisfaction. The building, which consists of a basement and two stories, is modern in design, handsome in appearance, convenient in its arrangement, and ample in size.

Their selection was approved by the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors, and a Building Committee, composed of W. A. Gunning, J. A. Bowen, M. L. Burton, I. T. Blount, and John M. Taylor, was appointed, who were instructed to proceed at once in the work of the erection of the building.

The treasurers reported nearly $2,500 cash in hand, and $1,000 additional easily available by December first.

The secretary was instructed to report these facts in the ADVOCATE, and to call the attention of subscribers to this cause to the imperative need for prompt payment of the subscriptions.

In view of the fact that the Board of Directors were not in a position to use this money earlier in the year, the payment of the subscriptions has not been pressed by the treasurers; but now, with the adoption of plans and an immediate move in the matter of building, it has become important to the success of the enterprise that our friends should at once pay their subscriptions. Building material is to be purchased, and laborers are to be paid, and the demands upon our treasury will be such that promptness upon the part of subscribers will be necessary to continue the work.

Already the eyes of helpless children are turned toward the Home, and, with the blessings of God, it will not be long before the Methodists of Mississippi will be known among those who are caring for the motherless and homeless little ones. Let those who have promised to contribute be prompt to pay, and let others who will help us do so at once.

Those living in the Mississippi Conference will remit to Rev. M. L. Burton, Crystal Springs, Miss., and those in the North Mississippi Conference to Rev. J. A. Bowen, Water Valley, Miss.

A. F. WATKINS, Secretary.

Selections

The Western Christian Advocate is persuaded that the great political conventions teach Christians some valuable lesson:

Politicians are industrious. The amount of work men do, the amount of privation of sleep and other regular habits they will endure, to obtain political ends, is amazing. To many of them the work means no personal advantage. They spend and are spent for a cause. It is hardly necessary to enforce the obvious lesson.

Politicians are not afraid of enthusiasm, of uproar and confusion, and the full flowing tides of feeling. They have ends to reach, and they know that feeling is the great driving force of the world. They stir up stormy emotions, they set great tides of feeling rolling over the land. They rejoice in the mighty roar of voices, drums, and cannon, because the roar stirs men's hearts and moves them to action.

Christians need not imitate the methods of politicians in creating enthusiasm. But enthusiasm is a necessary element in evangelism. Feeling is a specialized Christian force. It is not merely the bond of brotherhood; it is the fighting force of religious progress. To try to do without it is to try to dispense with Christianity itself. And revival tides are tides of human feeling glowing Godward, and bearing multitudes on their floods. What do we lack most? Is it not the pentecostal flood of divine emotion?

Politicians think out their plans. Routine will not serve them. They combine, adjust means to ends, by careful study of how this or that will work out their coveted results. Is not too much of Christian work done in the ruts of routine? The adaptation of means to ends is not once for all in a century or in centuries. It is an every-day business; and to devote thought to Christian ends ought to be one of our high devotions.

Never whip your brain. All high pressure is dangerous. Study to think as quietly and as easily as you breathe. Never force yourself to learn what you have no talent for. Knowledge without love will remain a lifeless manufacture, not a living growth. Be content to be ignorant of many things that you may know one thing well, and that the thing which God especially endowed you to know. It requires fire to fuse the material of thinking, no less than to melt the iron in the foundry. But remember this, however strong you may be, physically, to strike a blow, and however sharp, intellectually, to recognize a fact and discern a difference, your success in the game of life depends on the serious culture which you give to the third formative force in human character, your moral nature; and of the rightful supremacy of this element a comprehensive expression is found in the right simple word "love." On this all prophets, poets and philosophers are agreed.—Prof. Blackie.

We all like to shine on great occasions. None of us but think that as major-general we should do our work well, but picket duty as a private is not to our taste. We rebel because we are only a servant girl. We slight our work as carpenter, thinking of fame and business if we were the architect. Indifferent to duty as clerk, envying the merchant. If our home were only less kitchen and more parlor. If we were not just what we are, but only some one else, then we'd glorify God by being faithful.—Mrs. C. F. Wilder.

Japan is becoming an extensive buyer and dealer in Pacific coast fleur. This trade is rapidly increasing, not only in Japan, but in Shanghai, Siberia, and Korea. Last year Japan imported from the United States five thousand tons of cotton; this year there will be a large increase. The trade in timber, railroad iron and steel, wire nails, electrical machines—in fact, all kinds of machinery—and in horses and cattle, and in all commodities, is increasing, and will increase as the civilization advances.—The Far East.

Let those who crave the outward show of success turn to the example of the Great Teacher. During his own life how small were the apparent results of his ministry! Who can estimate now the stupendous results which have followed directly from those three years?....Here surely is encouragement for men to work on, nothing doubting, sure that the same God rules now as then.—S. A. Smith.

THE MODERN PHARISEE'S PRAYER.

BY FANNY L. FANCHER.

The drudgery I could not do,
O Lord, assign to others!
There's much to do of dirty work
It will not hurt my brothers!
For they have not such soul refined,
Nor slender milk-white hand
I'd use my brilliant brain—not brawn,
And thus possess the land!

A "railroad king," or "merchant prince,"
I'm fitted for, I trow;
Then let my brothers serve me well
With sweat upon their brow.
'Tis healthful for them, Lord, to dig
And delve in grimy soil
The sweetest rest they sure will win
With unremitting toil!

And when at last "thy kingdom" comes,
For which, devout, we've prayed,
Appoint me to some upper place,
In royal robes arrayed;
For my hard-working brain, dear Lord,
Will earn sweet, promised rest
Above my brothers (whom I love,
In mansions of the blest!

Some Things Expected of the Presiding Elder.

I have been much interested in the recent discussion in our ADVOCATE of this official, his relations, his qualifications, his territory, etc. I suppose the ideal presiding elder is dead. He lived so long ago that his virtues alone are remembered and his defects forgotten. If one lives nowadays and measures up to the various standards laid down for him, he would be a marvel indeed. I think such a paragon of perfection or imperfection would excite anew the curiosity of angels, for they would desire to look into it.

The model presiding elder should be wealthy. There are so many expenses connected with the office. His family generally is large, and must be provided for, educated, and trained in virtue and righteousness. Then his traveling expenses must be met, and he should have means to contribute to all worthy and benevolent enterprises, to assist brethren on hard circuits, and occasionally relieve the wants of the indigent wayfarer and resident poor. Official position does not relieve him of this duty. A man can preach Christian liberality so much better when he gives largely and freely. For reasons too numerous to mention, by all the arguments and means, put rich men in this office.

He must be a man of fine physique. No valetudinarian or pigmy can begin to measure up to the dignity of this office. The wear and tear of travel, exposure to Winter's cold and Summer's heat, the strain incident upon waiting to catch trains in the wee sma' hours of the night, and the large long hours of the very early morning, and the jolt, lump, swing, in all kinds of vehicles over long clearings through pine forests, so-called roads, tax his strength. He by all means should be a strong man. No dyspeptic could begin to eat what the average presiding elder eats and have dyspepsia long. He would either die or get well.

The model presiding elder should be a man of extensive learning, broad culture and fine preaching ability. The averge Methodist congregation and its numerous relations expect eloquent sermons when this august personage appears on the scene. There is a hush of expectation in the very atmosphere. No matter if the way has been long, and with spirits worn and weary our hero reaches a motley crowd assembled in a log hut on an eminence, barren of all natural beauty, except saw-grass, scrub oaks, and whispering pines, he must preach like Moses and exhort like John the Baptist. Nothing else will do. The preacher in charge has announced the quarterly meeting all around the circuit, and now he has a hungry, expectant look on his countenance, as he sits by watching for a convenient hiatus where he may rush in his hearty Amen!

A knowledge, broad, deep, and equal to every emergency, legal, social, ecclesiastical, particular and general, must be his joy and his crown, his chief possession. Questions, knarled, knotty and profound, will be evolved for his delectation and decision. If finite limitations did not debar it, omniscience should be his.

Ubiquity would follow as a matter of course. Paragraph 120 would then be settled forever, and no congregation and hopeful, confiding preacher in charge would ever be disappointed by a week-day Quarterly Conference. This a piercing thorn in side of many a patient, long-waiting people. There are never Sabbaths enough for every charge to have one each quarter. By no kind of mathematical juggling can thirteen be made twenty. Oh, for an ubiquitous presiding elder! What peace and harmony would reign in Zion's. There is one hymn this man appreciates above all others. It reads:

"Where congregations ne'er break up
And Sabbaths have no end."

A profound insight into the wants of the church, a nice, discriminating judgment, an indomitable will, a never-failing hope, a quenchless faith, a burning zeal, an indefatigable industry, and if there is any other virtue, it must be his. He must know human nature and inhuman nature, especially the latter.

But here let me pause. I hinted at the beginning of this article that our ideal had died in the early, heroic times. Pass on, gentle spirit. If your mantle fell on any, it is so shred and torn, so patched and mended with strange new devices, you would not recognize it again.

Your like we will never see again, unless by some wonderful metamorphosis your prototype is evolved from the luxuriant, fruitful, fertile field whence is harvested such an abundant harvest of advice.

Paul's Analysis of Love.

1. COR. XIII, 4, 5, 6.

Henry Drummond, in his famous tract entitled, "The Greatest Thing in the World," gives what he calls the spectrum of love, which is very unique and striking, but not quite true to Paul's presentation. Paul's analysis is better than Drummond's. It was not constructed after the strictly scientific method, but is rather a popular statement, plain and simple, of what love will and will not do. Thus, in an indirect, but surer way we learn what love is and is not. It runs thus:

1. "Love suffereth long"—i. e., love is patient.

2. Love "is kind." What a beautiful characteristic!

3. "Love envieth not." That means love is genereus.

4. "Love vaunteth not itself." Love is modest.

5. Love "is not puffed up." Love is humble.

6. Love "doth not behave itself unseemly." Love is polite.

7. Love "seeketh not its own." Love is thoroughly unselfish.

8. Love "is not provoked." The Authorized Version says, "Not easily provoked;" but the Revised Version follows the Greek by leaving "easily" out. It should not be there. Paul's ideal was higher than that of the translaters.

9. Love "taketh not account of evil." Love is not suspicious, not expecting to be slighted, not looking for some one else to do wrong.

10. Love "rejoiceth not in unrighteousness." Love hates sin—not the sinner, but the sin.

11. Love "rejoiceth in the truth." Love is sincere—loves the truth.

12. Love "beareth all things." Love forbears—is not revengeful at all.

13. Love "believeth all things." Trusts that all will be well, and that all men will do right.

14. Love "hopeth all things." Love is no pessimist.

15. Love "endureth all things." Love is cheerful—let come what will in beautiful fortitude, always cheerful.

What a magnificent array of virtues are these, all involved in love! Let us name them over: (1) Patience, (2) Kindness, (3) Generosity, (4) Modesty, (5) Humility, (6) Courtesy, (7) Unselfishness, (8) Self-Control, (9) Guilelessness, (10) Hatred of Sin, (11) Sincerity, (12) Forbearance, (13) Trustfulness, (14) Hopefulness, (15) Cheerfulness.

Every ray of sunlight is made up of seven color rays, the seven tints of the rainbow; and if anyone of these color rays should be absent, the sun ray would be incomplete, and would fail of its beautiful and beneficent mission; so, if anyone of these fifteen virtues be wanting, love is incomplete, and fails of its glorious work.

Presiding Elders.

I want to give my endorsement of the articles written by Bros. Lagrone, Poe, Sullivan and Cameron on presiding elders, and against the reduction of districts in our Conference. No one who has traveled circuits fifteen years, and observed the failure of quarterly meetings in midweek, can reasonably advocate enlargement of districts. Out of twenty-two years as a traveling preacher, I have never known but one successful quarterly meeting held in mid-week, and that was this year. By all means we ought to have another district in this Conference. The territory is large enough, the number of appointments justify it, and the interests of the church demand it. I am another one who believes in intensive work and a Sabbath connected with each quarterly meeting, Saturday preceding being the day to look after the business after morning services, and the Sabbath devoted entirely to the worship of God. Our presiding elders ever here are no cheap-sermon men in point of value of sermons, and their other work and influence, both in the house of God and out, are not to be lightly esteemed and low rated. The presiding elder is a necessity to the successful running of the machinery of our church, and it is painful to hear these men of God disparagingly spoken of and their office minified.

Brethren, let us be loyal to our church and her polity. God bless the Methodist Church! Long may her doctrines be perpetuated, and her polity exist! D. W. BABB.

From Sister C.

"Responses" seem to be the order of the day, and Bro. Mc. tells us we can not stop them, so we may as well join them. "Gilderoy" has stirred up a "hornet's nest" by his "Presiding Elder" article, and while they are humming, "Choir Leader" joins in the chorus. Bro. "Rex," I don't want you to do like the man who, after his wife had killed the bear, crept down out of the left, whence he had gone for safety, and exclaimed, "Sallie, ain't we brave?" I do not propose, by a few strokes of this pen, to silence the choir, but I must claim that I have a right to an opinion, whether Bro. Mc. thinks so or not. He says he likes a choir "to lead the congregation," and then goes on to say that, for reasons best known to themselves, the congregation refuses to be led. As Josiah Allen's wife would say, "Curious, hain't it?" We are not quite willing to believe that the members of the choir are the only ones who "feel the Spirit," yet he tells us plainly that the people will not sing. "Consistency, thou art a jewel." Just here I'd like to tell the brother that the M. E. Church, South, has a standard hymn book, with which nearly all are supplied; yet some choirs do have the temerity to not only suggest, but force a change. If the "scant supply" forced them to carry their books, why do they not adopt our standard, that the supply might some day equal the demand? I may never try writing a "modern hymn book," especially since Bro. Mc. intimates that they would not buy or use it if I did; hence, my criticism may still seem unjust, but I must continue. He also likes the new songs, "because they go and carry the people with them." I, for one, can not see merit in all popular songs. Even the parrots in New Orleans and other cities, too, I presume, were singing "Over the Garden Wall" pretty soon after it began to "go and carry the people." "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon," and "After the Ball," have also become quite popular; yet we would not like to use them as camp meeting solos. I have sometimes been one of a congregation who were urged to join the choir in singing. Bro. McIntosh even went so far as to say he wanted "everybody except that ugly old man and woman back there to sing." Of course, that made all the women mere anxious to sing. The chorus he told us was, "O Lord, send the power just now;" but he failed to tell us that the last line was, "And baptize everyone;" therefore, when we had sung the first line three times, we were at our row's end, for, try as hard as we might, we could not catch the words from the choir. I did not say the song "was half murdered." The rendering was perfect, I suppose, if we had only known what words they were using, we would, perhaps, have had no cause for complaint.

Not long since Bro. C, our pastor, asked me to assist the organist in selecting tunes adapted to the hymns he had carefully and prayerfully selected to be used, thinking them appropriate to his sermon. One hymn was in the 7s; so we selected a tune used with "Children of the Heavenly King." The young lady could not keep up with the words in one book and the music in another; so, what did she do but start the first line for us; then she sang, "Children of the Heavenly King" while we sang the other hymn. The other two hymns were similarly treated. I was in the choir that time by special request, and know whereof I speak; and if that does not go to prove that they regard the words of a song as of little consequence, "straws" do not "show which way the wind blows."

Now, Bro. Mc., this is a free-will offering. I do not charge you a cent for it, and if "the cap doesn't fit," you need not "wear it." I hope you will not accuse me of comparing you to a dog, for I must use this illustration. I once heard a boy say he could whip his dog as long as he would howl; but when he laid down, as if pleading for mercy, he could not hit him another lick. Brother, I wouldn't have hit you another lick if you hadn't howled.

Mansfield College.

Mansfield Female College continues to prosper, despite the financial depression and political disturbances. New pupils are constantly coming in and enrolling their names, and the great work of Christian education is being prosecuted by President Sligh and his efficient corps of teachers with zeal. Both the teachers and pupils are enthusiastic in their work.

Miss Mary Frances Williams, principal of the art department, has recently returned from New York, where she has been studying under the skillful tutorship of Prof. Wm. Chase, one of the most distinguished artists on the American continent. Miss Williams, with her natural talent, comes to our college ripe in artistic culture, and ranks among the first teachers in our State.

The departments of vocal and instrumental music are rapidly being filled, attesting in a substantial way the superior merit of the teachers, over which department the accomplished Miss Lizzie May Sligh presides.

Interesting work is being done by classes in the departments of Latin and modern languages, with a promise of results that will meet the expectation of the most sanguine of the college friends.

Our Committee on Improvements and Repairs, with Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard as its chairman and President T. S. Sligh as co-worker, deserve favorable mention at our hands. Since my last communication substantial and much-needed repairs and improvements have been made, to the convenience and comfort of teachers and pupils, prominent among which, and nearing completion, is an elevator which will supply a long-felt want. Many other improvements are in contemplation, and the good work will be continued, unabated we hope, until every available dollar has been judiciously invested and every demand met commensurate with the necessity of this modern age; and in this connection we would most earnestly and respectfully ask all who subscribed to the college fund through agency of Bro. J. L. P. Sheppard, to remit the respective sums to me as early as is convenient. The repairs and improvements now being done will soon be finished, and the obligations must be met. We hope that every contributor to this fund will promptly respond to this call, and we promise you for your investment an institution that will live in years to come to bless and exalt a grateful posterity. Mansfield, La., Oct. 23, 1896.

Wesley Chapel, Natchez.

During September we held a two weeks' meeting, which resulted in ten or more conversions, several reclamations, two accessions to the church on profession of faith, and general reviving of the membership. The visible results were not as great as we had hoped for, but the protracted services rallied the church, and prepared us all for more efficient work. Bro. D. P. Bradford helped us the first week, and won all hearts by his earnestness and cordiality. His sermons were strong and searching, and had a fine effect. The second week Bros. Linfield and Griffin came to our assistance, for which we owe them many thanks. Their preaching was pointed, spiritual, and persuasive. Our church has suffered heavy losses this year by the removal of members to other places, twenty-two certificates having already been given. Eleven persons have been received on profession and by letter. Four of our flock have left us to range in "Free Methodist" pastures. The stoppage of the cotton mills during part of the Summer caused much distress and a considerable falling off in our collections. We are doing our best, however, to raise our assessments in full. Our Epworth League is one of the most flourishing in the Conference. The devotional and literary meetings are well attended, and highly profitable.

Americus Circuit.

Assisted by Bro. J. C. Ellis, of Leaksville, and J. F. Havers and R. G. Williams, local preachers, I closed a good meeting at Ward's Chapel on the last day of September, resulting in four accessions, and the church moved upwards to a higher plane.

Then came our Salem Camp Meeting, which was quite a success, though we had but one accession, and but eight or fifteen professions of conversion. Yet I think much improvement was made upon the membership. Bros. T. W. Adams, L. K. Roberts, R. G. Williams, J. W. Browne and Russell Jones did the preaching here, and did it well, as did the brethren at Ward's Chapel, much endearing themselves to my people.

I then went to Cross Roads, where I was met by Bro. Trevilion, of Augusta, who gave us five days' faithful and effective work, winning all hearts to himself, and I trust many to the Lord; and though we had but one accession at this meeting, yet we feel sure that much good was done.

Many thanks to all these good brethren and much praise to the good Lord. It was my misfortune to be in feeble health through all these meetings, and part of the time quite sick. Am scarcely able now to be up. Pray for me and my work.

Mrs. Jno. S. Young, Editor for Missionary Column, Louisiana Conference—

DEAR SISTER: Mrs. Hayes and I went down to Bro. Whatley's appointment for October, and organized a missionary society. It was pleasing to see how willingly they entered the work so new to them. Outside of the pastor's family, none of them had ever attended a missionary meeting before. Others will join as soon as they learn more about it. Why is it that our Louisiana sisters do not tell us of their meetings? I always turn to our column as soon as the ADVOCATE comes, and would like so much to see every week how the different societies are working. Through you, Mrs. Editor, I beg them to let us hear from them. We need inspiration as well as information. Our Mississippi sisters are setting us good examples to follow.

"Just a word for Jesus,
'Twill help us on our way."

Our own society in Opelousas is far from being the model I would like to have it, though we have some interesting spiritual meetings. The "faithful few" are always present, and no discouragement will ever cause them to disband. I long for a baptism of fire to fill every heart, so that each one would feel the burden for souls out of Christ. Our time for work is so short, and the "sheaves" are so many. Will He say of each one of us, "She hath done what she could"? Yours in the work,

MRS. EMMA FOSTER.

Selections

Night as Well as Day.

There are some of us old-fashioned Christians who still believe that a loving God creates dark nights as well as bright noondays; that he not only permits trouble, but sometimes sends troubles on his own children for their spiritual profit. As many as he loves, he sometimes corrects and chastens. And a truly filial faith recognizes that all his dealings are perfectly right. "Happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore, despise not thou the chastenings of the Almighty." I have seen a farmer drive his plowshare through a velvet greensward, and it looked like a harsh, cruel process; but the farmer's eye foresaw the springing blades of wheat, and that within a few months that torn sell would laugh with a golden harvest. Deep soul-plowings bring rich fruits of the Spirit.... The day is God's, and the night also. This is as true in the realm of grace as in the realm of nature. God orders the withdrawal of the sun at evening time, yet that very withdrawal reveals new glories in the midnight sky. Then, how the creation widens to our view! The stars that lay concealed behind the noontide rays rush out and fill the spangled canopy. So in the night seasons which often descend upon the Christian, fresh glories of the divine love are revealed, fresh power is given to our faith, fresh victories are won, and a new development is made of godly character.... Bethany had to become a dark town to two poor women before Jesus could flood it with joy. Before Gethsemane's midnight struggle Christ himself chanted a hymn; and happy is the man or woman who can go into life's hard battle singing! The ear of God hears no sublimer music than a Christian's "songs in the night."—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

A Cheerful Spirit.

There is nothing so infectious as that of spirit; nothing so much helps or hinders. Many a pastor has brought order out of confusion, form out of chaos, and victory out of defeat by taking hold of his work with a firm hand, manifesting the while a hopeful and cheerful spirit; while, upon the other hand, many pastors fail where resources are abundant, simply because they are lacking in hope and cheerfulness. Nothing inspires confidence and provokes endeavor so much as a bright and hopeful spirit in the leader. Accepting the situation as it is, and looking only on the bright side, removes everything but the real difficulties, and makes the situation bloom with promise. Looking on the dark side discover nothing but shadows and defeat. The paster should abide in the secret place till he is assured of the presence of Him who said, "Lo, I am with you alway;" then he can carry light and hope into the homes and lives of his people. There is nothing so bad but that it may be made worse, and there is nothing so good but that it may be made better, and, as a rule, things are just about what we make them. It is said that all the world loves a lover, and it is none the less true that a cheerful spirit and a glad countenance is a balm to the sorrow-stricken, and an elixir to those who tire of the burdens of life and faint by the way. Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice evermore.—Pacific Advocate.

Anchored to Our Sins.

Many people who are anxious to advance in the spiritual life are surprised at the slow progress they make. It is related that two sailors, who had been drinking, took their boat to pull off to their ship. They rowed away, but they made no progress, and presently each began to accuse the other of not working hard enough. Again they went at it, and after another hour's work they still found themselves no further advanced. By this time they had become tolerably sober, and one of them, looking over the side, says to the other, "Why, Tom, we haven't pulled the anchor up." And thus it is with those who are anchored to something which they are not conscious of, perhaps, but which impedes all their efforts, even though they do their very best. Love of the world, a besetting sin, and all quite out of sight, like the anchor, may be keeping us fast fixed, and we must find out what it is, and get rid of it, before we can get on.—Exchange.

Complaints are not a remedy for supposed mistakes. The man who is suspected of being a "sore head" has already lost the influence necessary to secure a satisfactory adjustment of his grievance; and the more publicity is given it, the less it is likely to be remedied. The remedy for a real grievance lies in the opposite direction. It may require some grace to be patient and to wait, but when a man is faithful to duty, wherever he may be, and accepts his situation submissively, doing his work with all the zeal that should characterize a man upon whom the solemn vows of the ministry rest, and leave nothing reasonable undone to advance the cause of religion, will not have long to wait for vindication.—Methodist Protestant.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. T. Nicholson, Hickory, Miss., Oct. 16: "Our meeting commenced here last Sunday. Dr. Murrah was with us that day, and preached three times. His sermons were of a high order. Few men could have produced the profound impression upon this community that he did in such a short time. Rev. I. L. Peebles has been with us since Monday, preaching twice each day in his own most excellent, forceful and spiritual style. The meeting is now at high tide. Congregations very large. Fifteen accessions last night, and a tremendous display of divine power. Thirty-four accessions from all sources since Sunday. Thirty-three professed conversion at the service this morning. The meeting will continue. No doubt the final results will be still more glorious."

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, P. C, Dry Creek circuit, Louisiana Conference, Oct. 25: "Since my last report I have held two meetings. Bro. R. M. Blocker assisted me three days at Dry Creek in July, which resulted in nine accessions to the church. I closed a five days' meeting at Spring Hill last Monday night, which resulted in seven accessions and a good work done in the church. We were disappointed in getting help in this meeting—i. e., ministerial help. I feel under many obligations to Prof. Offie Singletary for valuable help in song service. There have been thirty-two accessions to the church this year, and one more meeting to hold yet. I am taking up my Conference collections, but with little success. The cry is hard times and no money. But I hope to be up with the average."

Rev. J. P. Drake, P. C.: "Drouth and insupportable heat deferred our protracted meeting at 'Rives' Chapel' from August to October. We began on the eleventh, under a slow rain. On Monday Bro. George A. Guice, of 'Oak Ridge,' came to our aid and continued preaching twice daily till Thursday P. M. His is a full and vigorous gospel, proclaimed in love and deep earnestness, with flashes of sanctified humor that are irresistible. The church was greatly warmed and quickened. Several were blessed with new fire from above, and many stalwart resolutions recorded, and one accession to the church. The people were very busy housing their potatoes, etc., and watching the 'second growth' on their drouth-smitten cotton. Moreover, the 'adversary' and 'accuser' was more than usually active. Yet interest deepened. Each service was 'better.' At the close all hearts were glowing. Many prayers follow Bro. Guice, and we believe his work will stand the test of that 'great day.'"

Rev. J. A. Braswell, P. C., Taylor, Miss., Oct. 16: "God has been with us and abundantly blessed our labors. I am sure that, at the least calculation, we have witnessed 150 conversions. Have received during the year 120 accessions, baptized 24 children, built 1 new church, raised money to paint and ceil another, and have the material about all on ground to build another. Will have it ready for use by Conference. We are indebted to Bros. Bowen, Clifford, Morehead, Wilson and Bruner for valuable help. Our last meeting was held at Taylor's, where a committee known as a Parsonage Committee bought a neat house and lot for the preacher next year. Methodism has been at a low ebb at Taylor's; but, thank God! through the powerful preaching of Bros. Clifford and Morehead, the revival wave went out over the neighborhood until the membership of the church has swollen from 4 to 20 members, and still they come. This has promise of being one of the best circuits in the Grenada district, if not in the Conference. We have seven appointments, with a prospect of having a comfortable country church at every appointment by Conference. Our finances are a little behind, but hope to pay every dollar assessed us for all purposes. In some communities our people are in need of education in the way of supporting the church. Conference will soon be in session, and I want to say for the encouragement of the preacher read out for Water Valley circuit, you need not fear or tremble. You will fall into the hands of as faithful a board of officials as you will find anywhere. God bless the dear people of the circuit for their loyalty to the cause of God and their interest in their unworthy pastor for the year 1896! It is a great privilege to be pastor of any people, and especially this circuit. To God be all the praise for what I am, have done, or ever expect to do!"

WALNUT GROVE, MISS.

We began our protracted meetings the first Sunday in August.

The first was held at Waldo, where Bro. McBride, Cumberland Presbyterian, and I held a union meeting. We had no ministerial help save Bro. Hudleston for one service. We had 14 accessions—8 to the Presbyterian and 6 to the Methodist. Both churches were graciously revived.

The next meeting was held at Walnut Grove, beginning on Friday night before the second Sunday in August. Bro. T. B. Holloman was with me until Monday, 11 o'clock A. M., and then I took up the work in the name of the Lord and continued until Thursday night following. We had a good meeting. Six accessions.

The next meeting we held at Pine Grove. Only local help by Bro. J. R. Hays. It was a fine meeting; church very much revived, and two accessions.

The next meeting we held at Beach Springs. There I had the preaching all to do, except 3 sermons which were preached by Bros. J. R. Hays and M. J. McDonald. Bro. J. A. Vance aided in altar work. We had eight accessions, and the church greatly built up.

Our next meeting was held at Scotland Chapel. Bro. W. M. Sullivan did the preaching, and did it acceptably. It was a good, warm Methodist meeting, held principally with Presbyterian people.

Our next meeting was held at Walnut Grove, which has just closed with fine results. Eight accessions, and the church wonderfully blessed. Bro. Geo. D. Anders was with me and did all the preaching, except one sermon by Bro. C. McDonald. Bro. Anders is a plain, fearless, forceful preacher. He never sugar-coats any truth. He has the happy faculty of swaying his congregation at will. They laugh, they cry, they wince, they think.

Well, we are getting on very well over here. Our presiding elder is a good, affable officer, and is giving satisfaction all over the district so far as I am able to learn. He has done some fine preaching for us on this circuit this year, and although a cripple, he does not stop for high water or disagreeable weather. We are anticipating better things on the Brandon district.

May God be with you, Mr. Editor.

P. H. HOWSE.

MATHERVILLE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By invitation of Rev. W. W. Moore, after the Frost Bridge Camp Meeting, I came to what was formerly the Andrew Chapel Camp—but neglected for the past seven or eight years. The tents stand in utter dilapidation, mute, though eloquent, witnesses of the faith and love of their founders. The large shed had suffered no injury, only it was unused, except as a shelter which stock might occupy at will.

The time had come for better things. The spirit of awakening was abroad. The echoes of the great meeting at Frost Bridge had reached the ears of some, and there was a longing on the part of others for "the life more abundant." It was a faith meeting with pastor and the workers. The Holy Spirit clearly led, and by special effort on the part of a few the large shed was thoroughly cleansed and an abundant supply of saw dust answered for a kneeling carpet. Seats and lights were also provided. Some prophesied failure, and that the small church would be sufficient for all that would come. The meeting opened at 10 A. M., Oct. 10, with a prayer meeting followed by preaching at 11. The company was small, but some two or three came forward for prayer and were blessed. The congregation increased, and by the close of the second day the large shed was full and running over. The altar was crowded, and from twenty to twenty-five saved and sanctified. Sunday, 11 A. M., the Holy Spirit came in great power. Conversions and sanctifications were clear and testified to by the Spirit. The meeting continued to the eighteenth, with three services a day, beginning with a prayer and song service at 11 A. M., except the two last days. All the services were largely attended, and none without the saving and sanctifying of from two up to eighteen or twenty. At the last service, Sunday afternoon, many were at the altar and several found the Lord in either pardon or entire sanctification. It is estimated that at least one hundred and twenty-five professed either conversion or sanctification. Some very hard cases were reached. The work reached the men, old and young. Some old people were saved who had spent their lives in sin.

It was predicted that the people would not have sanctification, as taught in the Bible and the standards of Methodism; but God put his seal on the truth, and prejudice and opposition gave way. The meeting had representatives from many adjoining churches who were blessed and will witness to the perfect cleansing in the precious blood. Glory to God!

Saturday, the seventeenth, at 11 A. M., the Holy Spirit fell on the preacher, as he began his discourse, so that he found himself unable to proceed. Soon shouts of glory ascended, and many were on their feet, praising the Lord. Some seeking souls stepped out into deliverance and shouted, "Victory." This continued for some time, everyone busy praying, praising or talking to sinners or instructing penitents. Many were converted. The meeting continued for three hours or more.

Saturday night a lady convicted of sin fell, as if shot, at the altar. She was soon happy. Sunday, at eleven, the same lady was convicted for sanctification and fell the same way on the same place at the altar. Again she rose with conscious purity by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Bro. Moore never did better work in timely talks, prayer and altar work. Sisters Brown, of York, Ala., and Moody, of Frost Bridge, added greatly to the interest of the meeting. A rising vote expressing a wish to have the old time camp meeting restored was taken on Sunday. It ought to be realized.

Some eight or ten were received into the Methodist Church, and we know of some who will join other churches. The preaching of the Bible standard of salvation produced conviction of the need of regeneration and entire sanctification, and members not saved sought and found the Lord. One excellent man, at least seventy-five years old, and for fifty years in the church, sought and obtained pardon and the clear witness of the Spirit to his adoption at the Frost Bridge Meeting. The duty of membership in some church was urged, and all not in the church, I am sure, will not fail to join at an early day.

An old-time revival in the church is the imperative need of the times. All lovers of God should unite in bringing it about.

Once in a while a man surprises the watchers by sitting up in his coffin, and asking why in the world they put him in there. Such things, when they happen, are published far and wide. They are considered well nigh miraculous. Is it any less wonderful when a man is cured of a disease presumed to be fatal? When physicians say to a man that he cannot live, he considers himself just about as good as dead. He can almost feel the coffin closing upon him. And yet, frequently these men who are sentenced to death by their doctors, are raised up out of their sickness to perfect, hearty health.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has lifted thousands of men and women right out of the grave. After doctors had given them up, they have in desperation turned to this great remedy, and to their great astonishment have found themselves getting well.

Skepticism in regard to this wonderful medicine has cheated many a man out of his health. If people could only be made to believe the truth about the "Discovery," half the sickness could be avoided and cured. The "Golden Medical Discovery" will cure ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of consumption. This great "Discovery" will also cure all of the things that lead to consumption—lingering coughs, throat and bronchial troubles, general debility, loss of flesh, loss of sleep, loss of appetite, loss of nerve force. Its effect is immediately seen. As the patient begins to feel better, he begins to look better, and the hollows and wrinkles are filled out with sound, firm, healthy flesh. Druggists sell it.

Too many people are repenting of the sins of other people instead of their own.

God is not dead; neither has he abdicated in favor of the devil: a comfortable thought.

Pray as if everything depended upon God; work as if everything depended upon yourself.

What harm will be done you if fools do laugh when you sacrifice pleasure to duty? You have all eternity to rejoice in.

You may not have great talents, but you will accomplish vastly more by using what you have than by growling because you have not more.

It is inevitable that a man's professions will be compared with his life. When the life is very far below the profession, "hypocrisy" will be the verdict.

Past sins, mistakes and follies ought to be used not as a weight about our necks, but as a ladder upon which to mount to a sublimer destiny in the future.

What is the trend of your thoughts and feelings when you are alone and unemployed? The answer to this question will enable you to see yourself as you are.

The worst injury you can inflict upon a man is to destroy his faith in things unseen. The next worst is to weaken it. The best help you can give him is to strengthen it.

It is a mistaken idea that a man will make the better Christian for having sounded the profoundest depths of sin. None realize this so thoroughly as those who have tried it.

Quaint old Samuel Johnson says that it is wise for a man to take pains to "keep his friendships in repair." Perhaps this ought not to be true; but that it is true, who will deny?

Strive to know what your duty is by a careful, prayerful study of God's Word; then be true to your convictions of duty, and your life will not be a failure, no matter how the world may esteem it.

Greek and Latin and the higher mathematics are of very great value; but there is something else, apparently a very simple thing, which is worth a great deal more, and that is to learn how to say NO in capital letters at the right time.

Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, daughter of Nathaniel Hawthorne, would be canonized if Protestants recognized saints. Having trained herself as a nurse in a cancer hospital, she has opened a home in New York City for cancer patients, who are too poor to pay for proper care. Set this over against instances of cruelty and selfishness, when you are tempted to think that all men forget the example of the Nazarene.—Western Advocate.

Report of Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE held its annual meeting in the ADVOCATE office on Wednesday, Oct. 28, at 10 A. M., with a full attendance of the Committee. A comparatively short session sufficed for the business requiring attention. This indicates the satisfactory condition of the affairs of the paper. Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., made his report as editor and publisher. The report indicates general improvement. The business affairs of the paper are well in hand and its financial condition on a firmer basis. There is an improvement in the number of paid-up subscriptions. During the year new type has been added to the equipment of the paper, thus improving its general appearance. The Committee also desires to express its gratification upon the improvement in the editorial department. As an indication of the general satisfaction of the Committee, I transcribe the resolution adopted by them:

"Resolved, That the Publishing Committee are much gratified by the report of the editor and publisher of the ADVOCATE. We are pleased with the improved appearance and editorial conduct of the paper, and have never known it to appear on a safer financial basis."

Dr. Black was re-elected as editor and publisher. We have every reason to expect a better year before us than the one just closed. But while we have cause for gratification in the present favorable condition of our official organ, we feel that the importance of this efficient arm of the church justifies a call upon the patronizing Conferences for a more systematic and enthusiastic canvass for subscriptions. The ministry can find no more efficient aid and co-operation than is furnished by our religious newspapers. Everyone knows the power of the press in the present day; and if the church is to develop a well-informed and active membership, it must be done largely through the press. One of the great needs of the church to-day is a loyal, conservative and yet strong official paper in every home. If this thing is to be done, it must be done through the regular ministry. We urge the brethren to press the claims of the ADVOCATE upon the people, and thus co-operate with the management of the paper in making it many times more efficient in building up the cause of Christ and in enlarging the influence of our beloved church.

F. N. PARKER,
For Committee.

Faithfulness.

Nobility of character is a composite product, being due to the possession and cultivation of many graces and excellencies. Honesty is a commendable and eminently desirable virtue, but not every honest man is of thoroughly good character. Unselfishness is a noble trait, yet it alone does not constitute true greatness. Not seldom is its lustre dimmed by the ugly forms of vice and indolence. Gentleness is a jewel of rare beauty, but if unaccompanied by strength of purpose and patient perseverance, its possession will be of doubtful value. The absence of humility, too, is a sad defect in any life. Lowliness of heart, the proper estimate of ourselves, however, will not atone for the lack of industry, or purity, or faithfulness. The last-named quality is the chief cornerstone of a good moral character and the prime condition of success in any calling. Neither genius, nor cleverness, nor affability, nor learning, nor capital can take the place of fidelity to duty. Failure will inevitably overtake the business man who constantly vacillates between diligent attention and carelessness. The clerk who does his utmost every day to sell goods and to please his employer is sure to be in demand as well as in favor.

Not merely good men, but faithful men are in demand everywhere. Though an engineer, for instance, be free from vicious habits, yet if he is reckless and sometimes fails to be at his post, he can not hope to remain long in the employ of any railroad company. Some one has happily defined genius as the art of taking infinite pains. Steady, persistent toilers are the ones who in the long run accomplish most. As the poet sings:

"The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

However brilliant and upright a public officer may be, without faithfulness in the discharge of his trust, the people will be sure to suffer. In short, there can never be true success where this quality is lacking. It is like a balance wheel that keeps things moving smoothly. Famous men are not always great men, but no man can be truly great who is destitute of the principle of fidelity to what he conceives to be his duty. No higher encomium can be bestowed upon any man than to say that he is true to his convictions and faithful in service. This is a kingly quality which the humblest and the most ignorant may exhibit. Its brightness indeed is oftener seen in the lowly walks of life than among the rich and titled of earth.

Not less beautiful or essential is faithfulness in the religious life. Many church people are good in the negative sense, but are sadly wanting in fidelity. They keep the commandments, it may be, yet fail to work righteousness. Their efforts and zeal are spasmodic, and so they make little headway. They endeavor to run, but do not "run with patience the race set before them." To start right is good, but to keep on is better. Just as technical skill without diligent effort is of little value, so likewise knowledge of the truth without the devoted and constant practice of it is inefficacious.

Fidelity to God, as we know, involves far more than renouncing the unfruitful works of darkness. Nevertheless, many Christians do not advance beyond this point, and, failing to do so, soon drop back into evil ways. Faithfulness must not be limited to the forsaking of evil; it must extend also to the performance of good. A limited faithfulness has no countenance in the Word of God. Unfortunately, however, we find policy men in the church as well as in the world. Such men are faithful to God so far as their religion does not conflict with self-interest and the favor of outsiders; but when it comes to unwavering fidelity to principle and to duty in the face of difficulty and criticism, their colors trail in the dust. Not much is to be expected of the churchman who will work and pray only when it suits his convenience. The religion of such a man is vain.

There have always been men in the world who have had the idea that we are not to do good unless we feel the inclination. Some such are among us to-day. We might as well say, however, that a man ought not to toil for his daily bread unless he feels like it. Prayer and service are duties never to be relaxed. Faithfulness to-day and faithlessness to-morrow is about the way in which many are striving to gain heaven.

A faithful soldier is worth a dozen who are unreliable, however brave they may be. So likewise it is in the Christian army. There is something grand about the man who walks unswervingly in the path of duty, however dark and lonely it may be.

Though we are justified by faith, we are to be rewarded in proportion to our faithfulness. "A faithful man," says the writer of Proverbs, "shall abound with blessings." In the parable of the pounds he that had gained ten pounds was given authority over ten cities. God declares that he will reward every man according to his works, and in the last great day it will be said to each who has been patient in well doing: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things."

The bane of the church is that so large a percentage of her members are unstable and unreliable. Assuming that one church is about as good as another, not a few do almost nothing to build up their own denomination, and in consequence are no help to the cause of Christ. A soldier must fight under some banner, or he will be counted a guerilla. An unreliable, balky church official affects a pastor like a thorn in the flesh; but the man or the woman who will work anywhere and always is his delight and supporting staff. Alas! that the latter class should be so few! One might as well lean on a sack of mud as to depend on some churchmen. It is just as reasonable to look for strength in a mushroom as to expect stability of a half-consecrated man or woman.

Faithfulness is impossible where the soul is not singly fixed upon God. The Psalmist understood the secret of stability when he said: "I have set the Lord always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved." A faithful Christian is nothing short of an all-the-time and everywhere Christian. He is faithful in prayer, in service, in giving, in the use of the means of grace, in avoiding all evil, and in promoting the cause of truth. To such shall be a sure reward. Our enjoyment, too, will be just in proportion to our fidelity to the Master.

About the Advocate.

As shown by the address of the Publishing Committee in another column, we have been re-elected editor and publisher for another year. It is highly gratifying to us to receive such an expression of approval of our administration, especially when it comes from men of the high character of those who have been selected by the patronizing Conferences to represent them in this matter. We shall endeavor to merit this expression of confidence by a faithful discharge of the duties incumbent upon us. We ask the hearty co-operation of all the preachers of the patronizing Conferences. We are almost wholly dependent upon the preachers for an increase of circulation. Methodist people who are not subscribers are not likely to become so otherwise than through pastoral influence. We know by experience what a pastor's life is. We know that he has his hands full of work of a very varied sort. But we are sure that there is no pastoral work that yields a larger dividend in the way of permanent good than does this of putting wholesome religious literature into the homes of our people. By a united and vigorous effort on the part of all our preachers we believe it is possible to double our present circulation. Will the effort be made? The time is propitious. Finances are easier than they have been. In several of the Conferences of Southern Methodism there has been recently an awakening on this subject. Pastors are working for their Conference organs as never before. Why should not our three Conferences catch the spirit? If our brethren will give us a large increase of circulation, we promise to make the paper better and better.

The Holy Spirit.

(A FRAGMENT.)

Sad that so many in designating the Holy Spirit employ the neuter pronoun "it." Have repeatedly heard in prayer petitions like: "We crave the illumination of the Holy Spirit. May we receive 'it' in 'its' fullness!" The Holy Spirit being co-existent and co-equal with God the Father and with God the Son, it is almost unpardonable to speak of him other than in the masculine gender.

At conversion the Holy Spirit takes possession of the heart. Dwells in it. His character gives character to his abode. Where the Holy One is there is holiness. The apostle assures that the hearts of the converted are temples of God. His residence.

Temples. Not a place for occasional rendezvous. Not a hotel. Temples. Places for sacrificial offerings and adoration. Were duly dedicated. Set apart for the service of God. It took place when Jesus was found precious to the soul. The pearl of great price was bestowed while the dedication was in progress.

Temples. The Holy Spirit disdains to live in a tenement-house. Various residences beneath the same roof. A dancing master occupies one; a wine bibber another; an actor at home in a third. The Holy Spirit scorns such neighbors. When he occupies the heart he fills it entirely. No room for others. Should they be tolerated near him, he departs.

Beware of defiling the temple—the heart made new in Christ. Sin is dirt, offal, debris. Sin is moral poison. When hell boiled over, its living lava filled the earth. All men are sinners. But after repentence divine forgiveness and renewal of heart were secured. What? continue in sin, crucify the Lord Jesus anew? Nay. The temple of the Holy Spirit must not be defiled.

The Holy Spirit is the individual witness of our adoption into God's family. No room for superstition. Neither mysterious voices nor visions. He bears witness with our spirits. Our own intellects are supernaturally assured that we are now God's children. They can not fail to perceive that passage from darkness to light has taken place. We see it for ourselves. Formerly we were without God in this world; now we can call him "Abba, Father." Formerly we lived in sin and loved the world and the things of the world; now we abhor sin and are not worldly. When we enjoy the witness of the Holy Spirit, it is not difficult to be witnesses for Christ.

In life's labyrinthine mazes, opinons varying, even opposite, views conflicting, man needs a supernatural guide. Human teachers differ. Moral color-blindness, prejudice, frequent. Erudition does frequently not abolish, but confirm it. Goodness ensures not true views. Hence not man, but the Holy Spirit our guide. He leads God's children into all truth. All truth as to divine doctrine and our obligations to God and man. Even as to the true inwardness of our fellow-men we are not long left in the dark. His revelations more astonishing than Roentgen rays. It is thus that children of God, though perhaps intellectually circumscribed, act more wisely than the wise men of the world.

Our Savior has denominated the Holy Spirit Comforter. Expressive name! Man needs a comforter in life's afflictions and tribulations, in sickness and poverty. The Holy Spirit enables fully to appreciate the poet's paraphrase of scriptural truth:

"..... Afflictions
Ne'er from the ground arise;
But oftimes Heaven's celestial benedictions
Assume such dark disguise."

They work together—manufacture our chief good. Our tears have brought us more good than our laughter, our sorrow more than our joy. When our loved ones sink into the grave, the divine Comforter points us to the home of the soul, where parting is not known. When death lays its bony hand on our shoulder, assuring that our earthly career is o'er, the blessed Comforter volunteers to act as our ferryman in transporting us across death's cold flood. He goes with us. In his company the transit to paradise is incipient heaven.

Grieve not the Holy Spirit.

JEAN PAUL.

In the Living Present.

In the number of students of theology in the United States Methodists range fifth; have only 924. Presbyterians come first. Roman Catholics next. Even the Lutherans excel us in this respect. This has led some to prophesy retrogression of our church. But they were not aware of the excellency of the itinerancy as a theological school.

At the recent session of the Wesleyan Conference it was ordered to insert among the questions to be propounded at the fourth Quarterly Conference: "Does our authorized literature find proper circulation?" Good! There are preachers in our country who parade the number of subscribers to papers inimical to our ecclesiastical interest secured by them. Their Conference organs are neglected. Is not such course nefarious and disloyal?

John Wanamaker, the merchant prince, started his career as office boy, receiving a weekly salary of $1.25. Recently he purchased the large establishment on Broadway, New York, known as "Steward's," and paid for same two million dollars. When industry joins talent success is assured. Wonder if our sluggards know what Pollock says in his Course of Time:

"Enjoyment stops where indolence begins."

The Raines law (high license) of New York has netted to the State ten million dollars. We should have preferred prohibition; but the idea that thus tipplers and topers must contribute to the support of the orphans and infirm and furnish the means for public improvement is not bad. All the same, we hold that prohibition would, in the end, be of greater benefit.

In Brazil ninety-nine per cent. of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. But of that number eighty-four per cent. are analphabetes. Where Roman Catholicism had and has exclusive sway extreme ignorance has been and is usually very dense.

The Catholic University in Washington, D. C., received a donation of fifty thousand dollars from the president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of Savannah, Ga., Mr. P. J. O'Conner. ICH DIEN.

Bro. Faunt LeRoy has had a very successful year at Morgan City.

We take great pleasure in recording the fact that Dr. J. B. Walker is much improved in health. He has been able of late to attend church several times. He hopes soon to be able to entertain the people of his section with "the gospel's charming sound." He reads the ADVOCATE with great interest, and is delighted to learn of the revival showers that are falling in all parts of our patronizing territory.

Mrs. S. C. Trueheart and Mrs. F. A. Butler spent last Friday in the Crescent City on their way home from Mexico. During their stay they were guests in the hospitable home of Bro. and Sister F. A. Dicks, where we had the pleasure of meeting them. They were in good health and spirits, and report their trip as a most delightful one. They had many pleasant experiences, which they will doubtless give to the readers of the Woman's Missionary Advocate. At Chihauhau, Sister Trueheart was invited to make a missionary address in the Congregational Church, which she did. At the close of the service a collection amounting to several dollars was taken and turned over to her. When she spoke of using it for the benefit of mission work in Mexico, the reply was, "Oh! no; this is for foreign missions." And so it will go to China.

On Forgiveness.

BY REV. J. U. WALKER, D. D.

I think some have mistaken apprehensions as to the import of "forgiveness." The Book says we are to ask to be forgiven our debts "as we forgive our debtors," or "sins," as St. Luke writes it. I have heard some express themselves as though we were commanded to forgive those who have wronged us without regard to any conditions; forgive the wrong-doer, anyhow, whether he repents or not. I knew a rather cranky brother who said, it was his rule if one wronged him, to wait on him six months to say "I repent," and undo the wrong he had done; but if he did not, he forgave him anyhow. I don't think his "rule" was in harmony with the teaching of the Book. If the man who has maliciously and falsely defamed my character refuses to say, "I repent," and undo the wrong he has done me, I can not truthfully say, "What he has done is all right; it makes no difference." It is not all right; it does make a difference. I can not conscientiously say, "He has done no wrong; I approve of his conduct." I can not help continuing to think of him as I did when he first perpetrated the wrong. Of course, as a Christian I must cherish no revenge, nor seek revenge; I must pray for him, and do him good if in my power, and leave him in the hands of him who has said, "Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will repay, saith the Lord."

This view of this important ethical question does not by any means rest merely on my opinion or reasoning, but is set forth by the highest authority in the Old and New Testament Scriptures. Isaiah lv, 7: "Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." God is angry with the wicked every day, but he pities the sinner, and waits to be gracious, but pardon is conditioned on the sinner's "return" to God. Col. iii, 13: "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so do ye." How did Christ forgive me? Freely and fully; so I was required to forgive. When did Christ forgive me, and on what condition? When I repented, and brought fruits meet for repentance—sorrow, confession, forsaking sin, and making restitution, or sincerely desiring to do so. All this, or he never would have forgiven me. He, as a just God, would have seen me damned first; for "without repentance we must all perish." If a man wrong me, and say, "I repent," I must forgive him seventy times seven. Of course, I must have reason to believe he is sincere, is in earnest, and means what he says. But if he does not say, "I repent," and bring forth repentant fruits, I am not called by God's Word to forgive him, I am not to go beyond God's teaching and God's example. On condition the evil-doer repents even seventy times seven, I am to forgive him, but I am not called upon to have as much confidence in his stability as I have in those who have not shown themselves so impulsive, weak and easy to be tempted. If we are prudent, we will not only forgive such a man, but we will be careful in our relations with him, seeing he is so unreliable.

North Mississippi Conference Minutes.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of this date, speaking of the proposed North Mississippi Conference edition, you say: "Thus the people will have an opportunity of reading the proceedings of Conference at once, instead of waiting three months for the Minutes in pamphlet form."

I beg to say that our people do not wait three months for the Minutes in pamphlet form. Last year the Conference adjoined Dec. 2, and the Minutes were mailed Jan. 21.

J. S. OAKLEY,
Secretary of the Conference.

Holly Springs, Miss., Oct. 29, 1896

[We humbly apologize, Mr. Secretary, for our mistake. We had not taken the trouble to find out how far behind the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference were last year. We were writing on general principles, without reference to any particular Conference. We think it is very generally the case that between two and three months intervene between the session of the Conference and the distribution of the Minutes. If the North Mississippi Conference has never had any such delays, then she is peculiarly fortunate.—EDITOR.]

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: I call your attention to the following resolution adopted by our Conference at last session:

Resolved, That to insure uniform and correct Sunday-school statistics, each pastor be required to report to the Annual Conference the total enrollment of Sunday-school scholars for the year, and to report to the Board the number of Methodist children belonging to Union Sunday schools, and also report the number of Methodist children who belong to no Sunday-school.

The first requirement in the resolution is to report to the Conference the "total enrollment of Sunday-school scholars for the entire year." The second requirement is to "report to the Sunday-school Board the number of Methodist children belonging to Union Sunday-schools, and the number of Methodist children who belong to no Sunday-school."

You will appreciate the fact that we are trying to give full credit to the faithful efforts of our pastors and Sunday-school workers by securing correct statistics. The desire of your Board is to obtain information in regard to Methodist children who do not attend our Sunday-schools, so that we may make plans by which to reach them. We are satisfied that the great work you are doing in bringing souls to Christ through the Sunday-school is only partially reported to the Annual Conference by the former plans.

In conclusion, please permit me to call your prompt attention to a resolution passed by your Sunday-school Board at Water Valley last year.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that all Children's Day money be sent to the treasurer, and only paid out by him on order of the president.

We believe that you will attend to this important matter at once, if you have not already done so.

A Protest.

In his communication to the ADVOCATE, of Oct. 29, "Ich Dien" makes some startling assertions. First, he advocates the cause of the Sultan, and advises that the statu quo with its atrocities to Christians be continued, while we "keep the Turks in good humor." In the face of the fact that these atrocities have been so terrible as to arouse the sympathies of semi-barbaric Russia, a writer in a Christian paper, the official organ of a great and advanced branch of the Christian Church, declares that these outrages are to go on lest we disturb the "good humor of the Turks." May God defend us from such "good humor." And the Sultan, who is a murderer, is to go unpunished, while our brothers' blood cries from the ground! The shrieks of women, the tears of children, the groans of the wounded, the prayers of starving, homeless human beings are to go unheeded until we can make a "conquest by love." ....Until this is done let the Turk be dealt with as other criminals, and let Christians remember who has said, "Thine eye shall pity him." Law and order are the fruits of love, and when these are absent no love is present.

But the writer is not content with advocating the cause of bloody Islamism; he takes up that of the cruel vivisector—a cause condemned alike by God and man; a cause so brutal that it is marvelous it should find an excuse anywhere in this century of gospel day. In the name of God, in the name of humanity, in the name of all that is good, let men and women everywhere with heavenly compassion in their hearts protest against such teaching as this! "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy," said our glorious Head, and he will in no wise forget his word, "for with what measure ye mete it out, shall it be meted out to you."

CHRIST'S TESTIMONIES.

SUNDAY, NOV. 8—TO HIS FATHER.

(John v, 30. 37 43; John iii, 35.)

Christ's healing the man at the pool of Bethesda on the Sabbath day, and the hostility to himself that was thereby aroused, were the occasion of that most remarkable discourse that is recorded in the fifth chapter of John. It was delivered by Christ to the Jews in defense of his action, and contains a lofty expression of his divine authority, together with the testimony of God the Father to himself, through John the Baptist, through the Scriptures, and through his own works. His testimony in reference to the Father is really, therefore, a testimony to himself, and the justification of his own action.

He declares that all his authority and power is derived from God the Father, that he makes no pretension to superhuman knowledge, or skill, independently of his relation to the Father, and that the will of the Father is supreme in his life. (Verses 19, 30.)

He says further, that God the Father has borne testimony to himself, which is distinct in character, though "ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape." (Verse 37.) He had borne witness "by giving him a miraculous incarnation, rendering him a living miracle; by an audible voice at his baptism; by dwelling in him with all the Godhead bodily, and speaking to the world through him; and by accompanying him with signs and wonders." (Whedon.)

Notwithstanding the fact that the Father had so manifestly testified concerning the Son, and that the Son made no claim, except in the Father's name, Christ tells the Jews that they will not accept him, and that the very reason why they ought to receive him is the ground of their rejection. "If another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." (Verse 43.)

In John iii, 25–36, we have the last testimony of John the Baptist to Christ, and in verse 35 he declares that the supremacy of the Son is a gift of the Father, who loves the Son.

The New Bread Kneader, a Money Maker in Hard Times.

I have read how one of your readers made so much money selling Self-Heating Flat Irons, but I think I have beat that. I am not very old yet, and I have not had very much experience in selling goods, but I made over $900 in the last few weeks selling Bread Kneaders and Hook Spoons. The spoon sells itself at sight. All you have to do with the Bread Kneader is to show the people how easily and quickly you can make the bread, and how fine the grain is after it is kneaded. They can't help but buy one, as they are so cheap. It is a big labor-saving to women. You can knead the bread in half the time you can with the hand. You can get full particulars of this new invention from Baird & Co., Sta. A, Pittsburg, Pa. I am perfectly delighted with my success and feel sure that I am going to make lots of money in the business. It is a wonderful seller, and any one can make money selling it, I know.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change of adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

A Teacher's Experience.

While teaching a country school twelve years ago, I took Catarrh in its worst form, which almost made a physical wreck of me. In '92 I had LaGrippe, was followed by a very bad cough, free expectoration, loss of weight and strength. My physician advised change of climate. This I was not able to do, but used Aerial Medication; to the surprise of friends, it cured me, and for three years have had the good health that belonged to me twelve years ago.

RICHARD OSBORN, Brazil, Ind.

I took Catarrh in 1862. Grew worse for over thirty years, suffered untold misery with headaches, attacks would come on every two or three weeks and last about three days, then the gathering would break and run bloody matter; green scabs would form; hearing and memory became very much impaired. Since using Aerial Medication four months in 1892, am entirely free from all Catarrhal affection; hearing and memory restored, throat and intense headaches entirely cured.

THE LIFE SCHOOL.

BY WILLIAM WYTHEMAN.

My little boy came from his school to-day
With his heart in a flurry of glee.
"Oh, papa! they've taken our pencils away,
And I'm writing with ink!" said he.
And his breast is filled with a manly pride,
For it joys him much to think
He has laid his pencil and slate aside,
And is writing his words in ink.

Oh, innocent child! Could you guess the truth
You would ask of the years to stay
Mid the slate-and-pencil cares of youth
That a tear will wash away;
For out in the great big world of men
The wrongs we may do or think
Can never be blotted out again,
For we write them all in ink.

You Can't Catch the Wind in a Net.

Some people get windmills in their heads and go in for all sorts of silly things. They talk of ruling the nation as if men were to be driven like sheep, and they prate of reforms and systems as if they could cut out a world in a brown paper, with a pair of scissors. Such a body thinks himself very deep, but he is as shallow as a milk-pan. You can soon know him as well as if you had gone through him with a lighted candle, and yet you will not know a great deal after all. He has a great head, and very little in it. He can talk by the dozen, or the gross, and say nothing. When he is fussing and boasting of his fine doings, you soon discover that he makes a long harvest of very little corn. His tongue is like a pig's tail, going all day long and nothing done.

This is the man who can pay off the national debt, and yet in his little shop he sells two apples in three days; he has the secret of high farming, and loses more at it than any man in the country. The more he studies the more he misses the mark; he reminds me of a blind man on a blind horse, who rode out in the middle of a dark night, and the more he tried to keep out of ditches the more he fell in.

When they catch live red herrings on Newmarket heath he will bring out a good thing, and line his pockets with gold; up till now, he says, he has been unlucky, and he believes that if he were to make a man a coffin he would be sure not to die. He is going to be rich next year, and you will then see what you shall see; just now he would be glad of half-a-crown on account, for which he will give you a share in his invention for growing wheat without ploughing or sowing.

It is odd to see this wise man at times when his wits are all up in the moon; he is just like Chang the Chinaman, who said, "Here's my umbrella, and here's my bundle, but where am I?" He can not find his spectacles though he is looking through them; and when he is out riding on his own ass, he pulls up and says, "Wherever is that donkey?"

I have heard of one learned man who boiled his watch and stood looking at the egg, and another who forgot that he was to be married that day, and would have lost his lady if his friend had not fetched him out of his study. Think of that, my boy, and don't fret yourself because you are not so overdone with learning as to have forgotten your common sense.

The regular wind-catcher is soft as silk and as green as grass, and yet he thinks himself very long-headed; and so indeed he would be if his ears were taken into the measurement. He is going to do—well—there's no telling what. He is full of wishes, but short of will, and so his buds never come to flowers or fruit. He is like a hen that lays eggs, and never sits on them long enough to hatch a single chick.

Moonshine is the article our friend deals in, and it is wonderful what he can see by it. He cries up his schemes, and it is said that he draws on his imagination for his facts. When he is in full swing with one of his notions, he does not stick at a trifle. Will Shepherd heard one of these gentry the other day telling how his new company would lead all the shareholders on to Tom Tiddler's ground to pick up gold and silver; and when all the talk was over, Will said to me, "That's a lie with a lid on, and a brass handle to take hold of it." Rattlesharp this of Will, for I do believe the man was caught on his own hook and believed in his own dreams; yet I did not like him, for he wanted us poor fellows to put our little savings into his hands, as if we could afford to fly kites with laborer's wages. What a many good people there are who have religious crazes! They do nothing, but they have wonderful plans for doing everything in a jiffy. So many thousand people are to give half-a-crown each, and so many more a sovereign, and the meeting-house is to be built just so, and no how else. The mischief is that the thousands of people do not rush forward with their money, and the minister and a few hard-working friends have to get it together little by little in the old-fashioned style, while your wonderful schemer slinks out of the way and gives nothing. I have long ago found out that pretty things on paper had better be kept there. Our master's eldest son had a plan for growing plum trees in our hedges as they do in Kent, but he never looked to see whether the soil would suit, and so he lost the trees which he put in, and there was an end of his damsons.

"Circumstances alter cases;
Different ways suit different places."

New brooms sweep clean, but they mostly sweep up dirt. Plough with what you please, I stick to the old horses which have served me so well. Fine schemes come to nothing; it is hard work that does it, whether it be in the world or in the church.

"In the laborious husbandman you see What all true Christians are or ought to be."
—Spurgeon.

Contented Mother.

I am a peculiar woman. I am looked upon with surprise and wonder, not only where I am known, but all over the world. Why? Because I love children and motherhood and do not complain at my fast increasing family. How sad to think that, the world over, my fellow sisters look on me as a wonder simply because I love children! Why did I marry? Because I loved the home, and I wanted the pleasure of making a happy one for a family of my own; because I wanted to be called mother; to hold to my breast an innocent babe and call it mine; because the words "wife" and "mother" sounded sweet in my ears.

To love a man is not enough. We must have a sacrificing love, be willing to endure hardships untold, to forego, at times, the pleasure of society for the sake of our loved ones. To-day there came to me a letter full of pathos and sadness, full of desire on the part of the writer to feel as I do on the subject, and asking me to answer through the Housekeeper, as most other women thought and felt as she did. She says: "Write and tell me how you came to look with resignation on motherhood."

Resignation! I have no need to look with resignation on child-bearing, but if God had seen fit to give me no husband, no children, no home in which to reign as queen and mother, then, indeed, would I have great use for that word. There is the secret of happy child-bearing. Live in the open air all you can, tend to your flower garden, weed the onions if you wish, spend a portion of each day out doors, live on fruit and vegetable diet, avoid rich pastry and meats, avoid idleness, spend your midnight hours in bed, not in the ball-room. Above all things do not worry, but be happy in doing for your loved ones, thus forgetting yourself. With a kind, loving husband, and contentment in the heart and home, even that terrible bugbear, child-bearing, may become a pleasure.

I thank God my mother loved children, else I might not have been born into this world to raise a family. Since the dear twins came, a dear little girl has been added to our family circle, so our family now numbers eight. We are poor in this world's goods, but rich in our children. God bless them and bring them to womanhood with the same mother-love that is my great peculiarity! May our only son make some woman as happy as my own married life has been.—Mabel H. Money.

Courtesy.

I want to talk once more on this same text. I think it very important! One of the best ways to be courteous is to be polite. Did you ever see a well-dressed boy or girl compel a woman carrying a big basket or bundle to step off the sidewalk? I have; and I have said to myself at such a sight, "You haven't a particle of politeness in you. If you had, you would pity that burdened woman and get out of her way." If I have such an impolite boy or girl among my readers, I wish they would learn a lesson from the following incident: Two boys, the one a gentleman's son and the other the son of a poor widow, applied to a merchant for a situation, but the latter was chosen. Why? I will tell you. Just as the two boys came in, a poor ragged girl fell on the icy sidewalk, and lost her pennies, and cried bitterly. The first boy laughed rudely; but the other helped her up, and, fishing in the gutter for the pennies, found one, and replaced the other from his own purse. The merchant observed all; and, although the first had strong letters of recommendation, and the other none, the poor boy's politeness secured him the place. It always pays to be polite. A little girl said she had found a new key to unlock people's hearts. It was the little word "Please." It is a key that fits the lock of everybody's heart.

Talk to Your Boys.

To-day my little boy, though he is mine only by the right of our mutual love, entered the school-room and a new world. I look back through the fifteen years which have passed since I first entered the school-room, and I remember well my feeling of eagerness and yet reluctance to enter the unknown world, and I wonder how it was with my boy to-day. Will he at close of day nestle in mother's arms and tell her of all that has passed? God grant he may, for in that lies his safeguard, and may she have wisdom given her by which she may answer the questions which will be asked, for we have in our schools boys and girls who delight in telling their young playmates that which would fill a mother's heart with fear; and how is she to know?

A mother said to me the other day: "I thank God that he has at least given me courage to talk to my boy," and I am sure that he has, not only the courage, but the wisdom; but how are we all to learn the way? Is it a gift that comes with motherhood?

Perhaps, I am not right, but it seems to me that there is a little too much false modesty shown on such questions. None of us care to discuss them for the sake of the discussion, but do you not all feel that the next generation would be benefited.—Lela Moore.

The Way to Conquer

"I'll master it," said the axe; and his blows fell heavily on the iron, but every blow made his edge more blunt, till he ceased to strike.

"Leave it to me," said the saw; and with his relentless teeth he worked backward and forward on its surface, till they were all worn down or broken; then he fell aside.

"Ha! ha!" laughed the hammer; "I knew you wouldn't do it; I'll show you the way." But at the first stroke off flew his head, and the iron remained as before.

"Shall I try?" said the soft small flame, but he curved gently round the iron, and embraced it, and never left it until it melted under his irresistible influence.

There are hearts hard enough to resist the force of wrath, the malice of persecution, and the fury of pride, so as to make their acts recoil on their adversaries; but there is a power stronger than any of these, and hard indeed is that which can resist love.—Selected.

No more vague and senseless notion ever possessed an honest but ignorant mind than the notion that the machinery of things will do the world's noblest work. All excellence, all renovating powers, are finally vested in persons.—Horatio Stebbins.

All along the pathway of life are tombstones, by the side of which we have promised to strive for heaven.—Moody.

Table Talk.

BY DR. DIO LEWIS.

Should we or should we not talk at the table? This question ought not to be a difficult one to answer. We should talk when we eat. I believe the table of a well ordered, intelligent family might be made one of the best schools, not only for children, but adults, that can be devised. I will give some of my reasons. The table is a place where we all meet to perform a pleasing act thrice daily. No matter how often eating is repeated, we hear the call to our meals with gladness. This state of mind causes us to lay aside for the most part those feelings of animosity, hate, sourness, ill-naturedness, into which we may have fallen during the hours of toil and contest. We are in a fit mood for enjoyment. Throughout every department of life, when health prevails, eating is a pleasure. It may not be the highest pleasure, and it may be abused, but it is a necessary pleasure. When it is not so, indigestion prevails. But a part, and with many a large part of the pleasure at the table, arises from the companionship which accompanies it. To sit down at the table and eat alone and in silence may give some delight if the food is good, but we are apt to hurry through it as a task that must be done. This very hurrying causes it to be less perfectly digested, and so our bodily vigor will be in like measure lessened.

To prevent this, conversation is most desirable, and in many families it is a school for all its members, and a most valuable one. But to make conversation as useful as it ought to be some pains must be taken. The most important thing is that it should be entertaining. Everything that leads to controversy should be avoided. Where different views of politics or religion are held, then never bring these subjects up unless you wish to embitter the members against one another. If the food is good, it may be spoken of and praised, but if it is bad, nothing need be said. If intelligent guests are at the table, they should be drawn on for such information as they can give, and should be listened to with respect. Every intelligent family should take pains to have at times some guest who has seen much and who knows much, and he will always gladly talk to an eager audience. If none but the family are present, its head should lead off in something in which all may find interest, the news of the day or whatever is most in mind, as talk about animals, birds, flowers, or about travel, or any interesting phenomena in nature.

Perhaps one of the best things at the table is story-telling. The art is no doubt dying out, and few have the gift. But it may be cultivated and developed. Sometimes a short story may be read. One story generally suggests another, and this still another, and so on. I remember one case where the father developed in his children the gift of story-telling by asking them in turn to bring each a story as a contribution to the good of all. No matter how short it was acceptable. If too long, it was criticised in a friendly way.

To preside at the table and bring out all the possible gifts of each member, is something to be proud of. It fits one for presiding at other meetings gracefully and with dignity.

If I could give a faithful report of all that I have heard said by parents and children of some of the families of my friends during the times I have been with them, and the tone and spirit of the conversations, I should write one of the most interesting chapters ever published. Of all schools for children, this is the best.

Men see their families but little except at table. That seems to be about the only family gathering. What a spectacle is far too often the common management of this family meeting? The father sits in glum silence, and shovels in as fast as he can swallow. The children follow the parental example. The food is passed only when asked for, and then in silence. There is nothing human about it. I can't understand why this home school which costs nothing and pays so well is thus left to bring forth little or no fruit or furnish such a poor quality.—The Journal of Hygiene.

From U. S. Journal of Medicine. Prof. W. H. Peeke, who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any living Physician; his success is astonishing. We have heard of cases of 20 years' standing cured by him. He publishes a valuable work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his absolute cure, free to any sufferer who may send their P. O. and Express address. We advise anyone wishing a cure to address Prof. W. H. PEEKE, 4 Cedar St., New York.

OBITUARIES.

SMITH—Bro W. D. SMITH was, born (and reared) near Vernon, Jackson parish, La., May 1, 1856; married Miss Paulina Griffin, of Pineville, La., Sept. 9, 1880. Here they resided in happy wedlock for a number of years. It was here that he joined the Methodist Church under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. J. M. Beard, in October, 1886, and lived a staunch friend of the church and a liberal supporter of her institutions until God translated him to his eternal reward. He was residing at Woodworth, where he was engaged in business, when he was taken down with typhoid fever, and died Oct. 2, 1896, after a protracted illness of one hundred and eighteen days. The writer visited him several times during his sickness, deeply impressed at his unwearying patience throughout all his sufferings, never murmuring, and expressed himself as perfectly resigned to the will of his God, and ready to die if this was the disposition of Providence.

During his illness he spoke frequently to his beloved companion of his salvation, and gave strong assurance that he was all right for the bright kingdom beyond the skies. The day before his death he turned to his dear wife and said, "I'm going to heaven, and I wish you could accompany me." On another occasion he exclaimed, "I'll soon be walking into the shining portals!"

He was interred in the Pineville Cemetery. Bro. L. F. Jackson preached his funeral.

In the death of Bro. Smith the church loses a useful soldier, the community a noble citizen and friend, and his family a most affectionate and devoted husband and father. Those of us who know him will miss him sorely here, and our hearts are withered to give him up; but we are consoled to know that while he can not come to us, we may go to him. J. W. LEE.

TURNIPSEED—MARY HUFFMAN, daughter of the late John Huffman and Mrs. Mary Glass Huffman, was born in Pike county, Miss., March 26, 1843; was married to Berkly S. Turnipseed, Dec. 20, 1861. Mr. Turnipseed died April 25, 1890. In early life she was converted and joined the Methodist Church. After her marriage she united with the Baptist Church.

In an eminent degree her home was her kingdom, where, as wife and mother, though her only child died in infancy, she reared an adopted daughter up to womanhood. She was a mother to her, and she a loving daughter, and their affection for each other was beautiful.

As a friend, she was as true as the needle to the pole. Loving in person and mind, having a kind heart and cheerful disposition, she drew around her a circle of friends who sorely feel her loss. She was fondly attached to her sisters. To her only brother she cherished the sweetest, tenderest love. She loved the church and its services. Religion was her support and consolation during the years of her affliction, which she endured with patience. For weeks she had been a ministering angel to the sick among her relatives, and had gone in great haste to see her sister-in-law, Mrs. Brylle, and died suddenly, after a brief illness, Feb. 19, 1896. Her bereft friend,

MRS. M. L. J. HOOVER.

Summit, Miss.

PYBURN—Bro. JACKSON PYBURN was born at Indian Village, La., April 8, 1822, near which place his whole life was spent. He was married to Miss Mary Stone, Dec. 1, 1842. He was married the second time to Mrs. Ann Harloog, Sept. 17, 1885, having been bereft of his first wife Nov. 14, 1879. He professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Siloam Camp Meeting, in Jackson parish, of which he ever lived a faithful member until he was summoned to his reward after a very short illness, Oct. 3, 1896.

As a citizen, Bro Pyburn was esteemed and honored; as a husband and father, he was kind, gentle, and tender; as a Christian, he was not demonstrative, but exemplary. So much is he missed, nor can his place be easily filled. "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep."

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. L. Phillips, P. C., Middleton, Miss., Oct. 16: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held at old Oak Grove, Oct. 3; Rev. L. Carley presiding. The closing reports for this, the first, year of Energy mission finds us with a new parsonage, one new church, another in process of construction, and $1,050 expended on buildings to date. It is only just to say that our presiding elder has won the love and confidence of our people. Six of our stewards—Bros. R. R. Redden, Wm. H. McRae, W. J. Norsworthy, M. Carmichael, and M. M. C. Carmichael—all rode twenty-five miles horseback to attend this Conference. Stewards that will do this will do more. Brethren, pray for this work."

Rev. J. S. Sanders, Rayne, La., Oct. 26: "We are now in one of the greatest revivals of old-time religion that I have seen in a long time. We moved in our new church at Plaquemine Bruiee, and began our meeting on the tenth, and it has been a Pentecost all the time. Souls are converted and sanctified at nearly every service. We received a class of twenty-five into the church at eleven o'clock yesterday, and three more joined last night. We took a collection last night, and raised enough to pay off the indebtedness on the church, being about eighty dollars. We are in the third week of the meeting, and people are attending from fifteen and twenty miles distance. We have probably had not less than thirty conversions, and twenty sanctified. We have been assisted by Bros. Fenat LeRoy, W. W. Drake, W. J. Porter, S. H. Whetley, M. C. Manly, N. L. Sayers, and Bro. Vult, of New Orleans. We are still expecting greater things yet."

"H," Baton Rouge, La., Oct. 24: "'Render praise to whom praise is due.' Allow me, through your valuable columns, to tell how nicely we are getting along with our new church at Black Water, although we have had to labor under great disadvantages; but, by the help of God, we are on the eve of completing our work, and, when finished, it will be free from debt. Many thanks to our local pastor, Bro. Wiley Brown, who, as a faithful steward, was always at his post rendering every assistance possible. We have elected our Board of Trustees, which are as follows: S. L. Hooper, president; J. W. Brown, secretary; A. F. Gilmore, D. L. White, J. George, C. D. Regen, L. F. Deer. We will have it incorporated shortly. It is rumored that Bro. Rawls claims the honor of starting the move to build a new church, but that is a mistake. It was started when Bro. Will Linfield was in charge of this work. Although it may not have been as fine as some others, it was God's house of worship; and that we do not appreciate slang, and most especially when it comes from the pulpit. Mr. F. L. White, our worthy president of the Building Committee, has rendered valuable assistance in both purse and person, who, though not a member of any church, yet I hope, through the prayers of God's people and the influence of a Christian wife, he will soon be numbered as one in our ranks, for he has been a faithful servant of the Lord. Our Building Committee are: F. L. White, president; Jno. P. Skolfield, Jr., secretary; C. D. Regen, treasurer; W. Brown, L. F. Deer, J. George, W. Simmons, S. L. Hooper, Rev. Wiley Brown. Our building is 35x50, with 11-foot walls and square ceiling; has two aisles and one large double front door. The Ladies' Aid Society of our church have raised funds to the amount of sixty-eight dollars, which we duly appreciated. All praise and glory be to God!"

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures such affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 463 Poplar street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, watch even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

Frederick B. Esler, counsel for the company which proposes to build the railroad tunnel under the East river, New York, says that it can be built inside of a year. The cost of construction would be $2,500,000, but rights of way, terminals, etc., would increase the expense to $6,000,000.

Our Conference is near at hand. The year's work will soon be closed up. We have held five meetings, in which 28 or 30 were converted, a number reclaimed and many encouraged. We were assisted in one of our meetings by Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of Senatobia. He preached a straight gospel regardless of the crooked ways of the people. The people acknowledged the truth as it was preached, and twenty or more were converted. Thirty have been added to the church during the year. While we feel grateful for what has been done, we feel that much more might and ought to have been done. We think our finances will be in advance of last year, especially our collections ordered by the Conference. To God be all the glory for what has been done!

Hebron, Miss.

How time flies? Just one month from to-day, and we, preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, meet at Greenville, Miss., to give an account of our stewardship for this Conference year. What shall our reports be? Will they be such as we will wish they had been when we come to give an account to the Judge of all men? Much of the success of this year's work depends on the proper and faithful discharge of duty from now till Conference on the part of preachers, stewards and members of the church. Since our reports at Conference are to make a chapter in the history of our Methodism, let us strive to make the chapter more interesting than any of the past—one which shall merit the consideration of future generations.

Some things will be noticeable in my own report which I deplore—evidences of failure and lack of effort; and were it possible for me to go back and begin again, I am sure the record would be better. But the past is now eternity, and can never be recalled. Bro. Burroughs held my fourth Quarterly Conference last Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 24 and 25. Everything conspired to make it an occasion of great joy and profit. In company with the presiding elder and his wife was Miss Carrie Thomas, the district secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Columbus district. And in addition to the regular exercises of the Quarterly Conference, so well conducted by the presiding elder, she enlisted the interest of our women in the work of "women for women," and organized a society of twenty-five members. The women of the Conference society made a wise selection when they put Miss Thomas in charge of this very important work. May the Lord prosper his work in her hands!

We have at Hebron a Parsonage and Home Mission Society also, which is doing a good work, and which is being represented at this time, at Oxford, by its efficient president, Sister J. R. Windham.

We feel that by the efforts of these consecrated women God will save this great country, and then bring to light many a benighted heathen.

The claims ordered by the Conference will be reported paid in full and liberal support for the ministry. We owe a large share of our success in raising the collections ordered by the Conference to the earnest, persistent efforts of our little girls and young ladies in the use of "Tithe Gleaners." Twenty-five of them brought in more than sixty dollars from the various churches on my work.

We begin very soon to put the parsonage in better repair for the new preacher—hope to have it ready for him. We have had good meetings, resulting in the addition of twenty-nine members to our church.

We are indebted for most efficient help in our meetings to Bros. J. A. Leech, Perry E. Duncan and Angus T. Buck. J. E. BUCK, P. C.,

Hebron circuit, North Miss. Conf.

P. S.—I am heartily in favor reducing the presiding elders' districts to twelve appointments each. The very same facts which make it necessary to reduce the pastoral charges from twenty-nine appointments to, at most, four or six, are facts which make it necessary that the districts be made smaller. We need an additional district in the North Mississippi Conference. J. E. B.

South Mississippi Holiness Camp Meeting.

The first session of South Mississippi Holiness Camp Meeting was held Oct. 9–12, 1896. On the night of the eighth Dr. J. W. Harmon, of Paulding, Miss., preached from the eighty-fourth Psalm, and dedicated the grounds to Almighty God. On the evening of the ninth Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, Revs. W. W. Hopper, R. A. and E. T. Breland arrived, and the meeting started off with a high tide every service; was good, but grew better and better. Perfect harmony and peace prevailed. From two to three thousand people visited the meeting during the ten days. More than 150 persons was sanctified. Fifteen preachers attended and took part in the service, viz.: Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, Columbus, Miss.; Rev. J. W. Pugh, Handsboro, Miss.; Rev. J. W. Harmon, Paulding, Miss.; Rev. W. W. Hopper, Meridian, Miss.; Rev. R. A. Breland, Camden, Miss.; Rev. D. C. Rawls, Covington, La.; Rev. E. T. Breland, Washington, Miss.; Rev. James King, Daisy, Miss.; Rev. N. B. Harmon, Bay St. Louis, Miss.; Rev. A. C. Burt, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Rev. Michael Cox, Ocean Springs, Miss.; Rev. H. C. Brown, Heidelberg, Miss.; Rev. R. N. Davis (Baptist), Pearlington, Miss.; Rev. A. P. Cox, Wisdom, Miss.

The last day was the greatest day ever witnessed in South Mississippi at a Sunday camp meeting. Rev. W. W. Hopper preached at 8:30. Mrs. Snell at 11, and Rev. D. C. Rawls at 3 P. M.; Mrs. Snell following with a wonderful exhortation. Men stood on their feet for three hours, forgetting to look at their watches and seemed to be unconscious of the lateness of the day, until the long beautiful tabernacle and the five large hanging lamps was lit up and the twilight driven away. Thus closed the greatest meeting ever held in South Mississippi. Praise the Lord!

Money for Invalids.

Mr Editor: I feel it my duty to inform others of my success. Was an invalid many years, but cured myself with the $5 Vapor Bath Cabinet. I then took an agency. First day I sold 4 at a profit of $10. In four weeks 72, profit $180. Everybody, sick or well buys. They furnish Turkish or Medicated Vapor Bathe right at home, renovate the system, beautify the skin, and absolutely cure Colds, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Malaria, Catarrh and all Blood, Nerve and Kidney Diseases. Anyone can do as I have, by writing E. World Mfg. Co., Columbus, O. Why be sick or poor with such chances open?

A. INVALID.

Columbus, Miss.

Our meeting closed last night, which resulted in two hundred or more conversions. The preaching from the first day was of a very high order. George Stuart does not rely upon the tricks as some evangelists do for the success of his meeting. He preaches the gospel as one who believes it and has experienced the truth that is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. It is the verdict of this community, of all who have heard him, that he conducted the most successful meeting ever held in this city.

Some of his sermons are among the most splendid efforts I have heard from anyone. These sermons indicate that he does not rely upon pathetic illustration or incident for moving his audience, but that he has studied to make his sermons logical and forceful, relying upon the Holy Ghost to carry his message with convincing power to the hearts and consciences of the people. And let me say that I regard him as the most useful man I know now engaged in evangelistic work. No Methodist preacher need hesitate to ask George Stuart to assist him in revival work; for he only does the pastor good wherever he goes. There is never an utterance that could be tortured into a thrust at the church. He loves the Methodist Church and preaches her doctrines and strives to strengthen her influence in the community where he holds revivals.

Mr. Tilman, his singer, is a most excellent Christian gentleman of deep piety, and is a great help in the service. He sings the songs of Zion with wonderful power, the audience being often moved to tears.

THE PAUPER'S DEATH-BED.

BY CAROLINE B. SOUTHEY.

Tread softly, bow the head—
In reverent silence bow!
No passing bell doth toll;
Yet an immortal soul
Is passing now.

Stranger, however great,
With lowly reverence bow!
There's one in that poor shed—
One by that paltry bed—
Greater than thou.

Beneath that beggar's roof,
Lo! Death doth keep his state!
Enter!—no crowds attend—
Enter!—no guards defend
This palace gate.

That pavement damp and cold
No smiling courtiers tread;
One silent woman stands,
Lifting with meagre hands
A dying head.

No mingling voices sound—
An infant wail alone;
A sob suppressed—again
That short deep gasp—and then
The parting groan!

Oh! change!—oh, wondrous change!
Burst are the prison bars!
This moment there, so low,
So agonized—and now
Beyond the stars!

Oh! change!—stupendous change!
There lies the soulless clod!
The sun eternal breaks,
The new immortal wakes—
Wakes with his God.

Presiding Elders' Districts in the North Mississippi Conference.

I have been deeply interested in the discussion of this subject in the columns of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. It is a question of great importance from the standpoints of administration, of economy, of ministerial efficiency. It not only concerns us deeply in the North Mississippi Conference; but it is of great concern to our broad connection, and indeed to œcumenical Methodism. I enter the discussion in no controversial spirit, but with the desire to throw some light on the question. I hope I shall be pardoned for one personal allusion: Bro. Streater deserves to be held in the highest esteem by both ministers and laymen. He has been faithful in duty and in love of the church. Nothing he has written justifies the insinuation that he has in the least degree forfeited the high opinion of his brethren. He is seeking to serve the best interests of his church.

1. Ought the number of districts in the North Mississippi Conference to be reduced? Some say no; but they would be increased, and the reason assigned is that the work is now too heavy on the presiding olders. They think the work would be better done and the interests of the church more effectually conserved and advanced by small districts, so that each pastoral charge should receive a larger share of the service of the elder; so that the presiding elder could look more into the details of the work of pastors and help them more.

2. Now, I wish to say that the presiding elders with whom I have come into official relations are earnest, industrious, laborious men, worthy successors of John Tunnell, Thomas Ware, Ezekiel Cooper. I do not depreciate either the office of presiding elder, or the men serving in it. But the question is, Are not these presiding elders doing a large amount of work which is not properly devolved upon them? Are they not loaded by reason of lack of efficiency elsewhere? What are the duties of a presiding elder? (See Discipline, ¶ 109, 110, 111. Also see ¶ 107.)

3. Of course, it is the duty of a presiding elder to preach, so it is of a bishop; but a Bishop and presiding elder were preachers before they were set apart to their respective offices. Preaching is the highest of all work. There are men in our noble college of Bishops to-day who as preachers magnify the office of bishop; and so among our presiding elders there are gifted, consecrated men whose preaching raises them higher than any mere office. Preaching then, is not a special characteristic of presiding elders; preaching does not differentiate presiding elders from others. The characteristic and differentiating functions of Bishops and presiding elders are to "oversee," and administer "the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church." Methodism from an important standpoint presents to us in her economy a system of superintendencies. The Bishops are the first in order, as general superintendents, and the presiding elders come next. In many respects their duties are similar and supplementary.

4. In order to get at a clear idea of the duties of the office of presiding elder and the purpose for which it was instituted by the fathers of American Methodism, let us turn to history. In the September-October number of the Methodist Review (pages 87–97) and the November-December number (pages 233–238), Dr. Tigert gives the "genesis of the presiding eldership." The necessity for it arose from the fact that there were so many preachers who were not authorized to administer the sacraments, and who were otherwise immature and unprepared to perform efficiently some of the duties of pastors. The elders, afterwards called presiding elders, were appointed to supply the lack, to meet the deficiency of preparation and qualification on the part of pastors, and to generally "oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church." These facts become plainer as we trace in history the progress and development of American Episcopal Methodism.

5. But since the institution of this "eldership" more than a century has passed. Surely we will not claim that there is now the same lack of qualification and maturity on the part of the pastors. There has been marvelous progress in general education. Our church has established colleges for general and classical education, and biblical schools for the special instruction of ministers of the gospel, that they may be thoroughly furnished. Allow me to kindly enquire of the brethren if we, as a Conference, have held up the proper standard for the admission and advancement of our young preachers? Have we, as a Conference, made proper use of Millsaps College and the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University?

If we are placing in charge of circuits, missions and stations young men who are not well trained, who are inadequately equipped for the work, we are making necessary a large number of presiding elders, and imposing upon them duties that ought in this age of progress and educational facilities to be discharged by pastors. There are too many fields that are white unto the harvest to allow us to waste time, energy and money in appointing one man to do a certain work, and then in appointing another to do it for him. I plead for an advance in the education and training of our young ministers. The Discipline allows twenty charges to a district. I believe we ought to put the maximum number in our districts, and let the presiding older do only his appropriate work. Give any of our efficient presiding elders twenty efficient pastors, and he can superintend them and look after all the general interests of the district. The Methodist Episcopal Church (North) has removed the limit altogether, thus leaving the Bishop entirely untrammeled. In this church the size of districts varies very greatly. Sometimes districts are quite small, while in other cases they include as many as sixty or eighty charges.

The Wesleyan Conference of England appoints one experienced elder to the pastoral care of a circuit, and at the same time commits to him the superintendency of a district; and he does both. Are our men incapable of doing an amount of work equal to that of ministers in these two other branches of Methodism? We will not admit it. A wide-awake, zealous, wise presiding elder can secure a large amount of information through written reports from pastors, and his own tact and ingenuity will suggest many other means of saving time, labor and expense, and thus secure large results.

Taking all the facts into consideration, I think we ought to put about twenty charges in a district, and that the next General Conference would do wisely by increasing the present maximum number named in a district. Let us hear the call of the foreign fields for men and money. To do this, we must use in the most efficient and economical way the men and means we have for home work.

R. W. JONES.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

The discussion about enlarging the districts in the North Mississippi Conference has taken a wide range. In this, as in most controversies, the tendency is to run off after all the side issues. It may be granted that all of the presiding elders preach the best they can, and that they do not get one cent too much money for it. It is agreed that this office is wonderfully useful, and in our economy it is absolutely indispensable. We all believe this.

We use more men and pay more money for supervision than any church on the face of the globe. Can we not get along with fewer men and a smaller outlay of money? This is a very important question. The more necessary, the essential work of presiding elder can be done on a large district as well as on a small one. He is not a pastor, however useful he might be in pastoral work. He is not a preacher in charge, with the care of the individual churches on his hands. He is not sent to do the work of an evangelist, in the latter-day sense of that term. It is not necessary to discuss these things in this connection.

The work he is to do is laid down in the Discipline. It is all special work. If practicable, he is to attend all of the quarterly meetings. It is his duty to travel through his appointed district in order to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church. Small as the charges are, well organized as the church is, and competent and efficient as are our pastors, all this work the presiding elder can do for a large territory. The absorption of one district in North Mississippi will give eighteen charges to four districts and seventeen to four. The limit now is twenty. Those who advocate this change have a good margin inside of the law.

It is high time we were getting accustomed to larger districts, for I think it pretty certain that the next General Conference will either greatly extend the number or remove the limit. I thought for some days it would be done at the last General Conference. This matter was deeply pondered by one important committee, and there was perfect agreement as to the need for this change. Even now, if the Bishop saw proper to do so, he could put twenty pastoral charges in all the districts. The law wisely provides for this limit. There are many things to be considered in forming the districts—the territory, the lines of travel, the streams to be crossed, the size of the pastoral charges, the number of members, the shape of the district, the conservation of men and money, and the intelligence and efficiency of the pastors and laymen. As things now are in North Mississippi, we may safely enlarge our districts.

For several good reasons the presiding elder needs more money than the average pastor. His traveling expenses are four or five times as great as those of the preacher in charge. He is away from home so much and so fatigued when at home he has to have many things done that the pastor does for himself. The presiding elder fails to receive the one hundred and one perquisites that come to most pastors. He is everybody's man and nobody's man in particular. He needs and ought to have more money than the preacher in charge. I have been in both places, and I know. For comfort and real pleasure a good circuit of four churches is far ahead of anything in our Methodism.

It may be granted that a presiding elder ought to do everything in his power to advance the cause of Christ in his appointed field; but he is not required by any law, human or divine, to overtax his strength and kill himself in his work. He knows, or ought to know, just how much he can do with safely to himself and with regard to his greatest efficiency in his work. I think all the important and special work of presiding elder can be done in North Mississippi on districts of seventeen and eighteen charges without oppressing the presiding elder or injuring the work. For this reason I advocate this change.

A Critical Hour in Missions.

Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., speaking of a very critical hour in missionary history, says that, first of all, it must not be disguised that this is a very critical hour in missionary history. It is about a full century since Wm. Carey's arrival in India marked the starting-point in organized missionary effort. There is no question in any candid, intelligent mind that the century has shown advance which is not by steps, but strides. What an increase of general intelligence as to mission fields, religious systems, foreign peoples and biography of the heroes of mission history! What a new era of sanctified womanhood, now organized so widely for promoting acquaintance and co-operation with the work of a world's evangelization! What a marvelous crusade on the part of our young men and women in Christian Associations, Endeavor Societies, and last, but not least, the Students' Volunteer movement, now, like all others, belting the globe and undertaking the occupation of all untilled fields! What a new epoch in medical missions, reviving the apostolic method of uniting physical healing with gospel teachings, and winning a way to the soul by ministry to the body! What a handmaid to the voice of the herald is the pen of the ready writer made vocal in so many ways by the art of the translator and the power of the press!

Among the missionary agencies as enumerated above, the Cross-Bearer's Missionary Reading Circle is also a growing factor. Its literature is of the very best, and many of its students are preparing for missionary service at home and abroad. The reader may send six cents in stamps to Rev. Marcus L. Gray, president C. M. R. C., St. Louis, Mo., for further information in regard to this course of systematic reading and study on missions in all lands.

The Tramp Nuisance.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching." That may be sung of a great army of social vagrants who live upon the charity of the public. There are 100,000 persons in the United States too lazy to work. Their home is where night overtakes them. Many of them were originally from good homes, and most of them are artisans with trades. Some are college graduates, physicians, lawyers, newspaper men, and even preachers. They constitute a dangerous class. Carlyle spoke wisely when he affirmed that there is one monster in the world—a lazy man. The individual who refuses to work forfeits his right to live. He has no just claim upon charity, and it is not charity to feed him. Indeed, it is encouraging vice and breeding crime. It is a hard thing to turn from your door one who claims to be hungry. But unless you do so you are, in nine cases out of ten, helping to perpetuate a class which has renounced its social obligations and which constitutes a most dangerous social element. As laziness breeds crime, there is scarcely any of these men who can be trusted. Indeed, a large per cent. of the misdeeds that occur are due to them. It is the duty of each member of society to help weed them out. One of the best ways to do this is to refuse to give anything to a person who has not worked for and earned it.

At present our laws are not sufficiently stringent. Vagrancy should itself be regarded as a crime, and a sentence to hard work should always be a consequence. Any man who can not give an account of himself should not be merely lodged in the public jail for a few days to be well-fed and sheltered from the storm. He should be sent for sixty days to the workhouse, and compelled to atone for past laziness. If the police forces of the country were active, the large majority of these men could be known to them as accurately as the worst criminals are, and be discovered in whatever section of the country they are tramping. Sentiment will not solve the tramp question. The foolish idea that the vagrant is a product of social and industrial conditions, more sinned against than sinning, will not do. The fact is, he is usually a man at war with society, whose first law is that each man shall share his part in the social and economical burden.—Epworth Herald.

The "Convent" School.

It was our privilege, a week or two ago, to spend some days in the same house with a young lady who has recently been in attendance at a convent school in France. Of course, we compared notes as to its leading characteristics.

The personnel of the school was almost entirely Catholic. There were but two Protestant girls in its classes, and these were admitted only upon promise not to give expression, within the school, of their views as to the Bible and its teachings. The condition of their admission was silence—an obvious acknowledgment on the part of the faculty of their fear to have Bible teachings made known among the pupils.

The discipline of the school was that of constant supervision, not to say espionage. Every hour of the day was mapped out for the pupils, from six in the morning till half-past eight at night, which was bed-time. They were all required to be present at morning prayers and at "mass;" at their meals they were to eat in silence; in the half hour or the hour of recess after meals a "sister" was always present among the pupils. Two pupils were never allowed, either in recess or at any time or place, to converse together. If the girls wanted to talk, there must always be three or four in a group. And when they retired at night, each had a curtained alcove on the side of a very large room, containing a bed, a bureau, and one chair, but all under the eye of the "sister" who spent the night in the dormitory. Only three or four of the girls had each a room to herself. Each was allowed just one hour a week to write to her home circle.

The instructions of the school were represented by our informant as good in some branches. She told us that the history (of course, from Catholic writers) and the geography of France were especially well taught, but that mathematics was neglected. The ornamental side of education received much attention.

The Bible was an unknown book in the school. The pupils were not allowed to have it. One bright Catholic girl was full of curiosity about it, but her teachers and her confessor carefully and persistently refused to give her any information about such things. The two Protestant girls brought the Bibles with them, and at first read in them; but when the Mother Superior heard of it, she sent for the girls and demanded the Bibles, that she might burn them. This is not a record of the past, but the experience of a school girl who is still young. The girls positively refused to allow them to be burned, but at last sent them off to their relatives. The one was without a Bible the rest of her school days; the other, an American girl, was permitted to retain a French Catholic translation of the Bible.

Our informant did not experience any efforts to coerce her into the Catholic Church. But she felt all the time a pressure. She was made to feel the nuns all pitied her ignorance, and were so sorry for her condition of an alien from the Catholic Church—out of which is no salvation—and longed for her conversion to that faith. Their winning arts failed to move her.

The religious tone of the convent and of its inmates she described as formalistic and superstitious. While the name and the work of Christ is not rejected, it is gravely obscured. The attention of the pupils was concentrated on the Virgin Mary and on the saints. The observance of ceremonies overshadowed the exercise of penitence and faith, and the minds of the inmates were exercised mostly about confession to the priest and his absolution.

The Catholic Church, which controls these convent schools in America as well as in France, makes her boast that her principles and her teachings are always and everywhere the same.—Presbyterian Observer.

Bishop Keane.

Bishop Keane was very recently removed from the presidency of the Catholic University at Washington. This action was decided on by the Pope on the advice of Cardinal Satolli. The Western Watchman, a Catholic publication, explains its view of the reason for the action thus: "Rome did not want the young priests of America to be taught Pelagianism. Bishop Keane's Pelagianism is his having said that any form of Protestantism is better than no religion at all. He has said that several times, especially in an address before the Catholic societies of Providence; and it was for these utterances that Bishop Keane was removed from the University. The editor, the Rev. D. S. Phelan, says that Satolli himself told him that he disapproved of Bishop Keane's assertion; and he gives it as his view and that of Satolli that "it would be far better that people should be left to natural religion, and that traditional Christianity that has remained to them after the wreck and ruin of the sixteenth century, than that travesty on revelation known as Protestantism."

The Catholic papers of Boston and New York, The Pilot and The Catholic Review, speak very highly of Bishop Keane's work, while the Protestant papers look on his resignation and removal as a rebuke from the Vatican to a growing "Americanism," which appears in the Roman Catholic Church of the United States, and of which Bishop Keane and Archbishop Ireland are considered promoters.—Christian Guardian.

IF I COULD ONLY KNOW.

"Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."—1. Peter v, 7.

If I could only surely know
That all these things that tire me so
Were noticed by my Lord
The pang that cuts me like a knife,
The noise, the weariness the strife—
What peace it would afford!

I wonder if he really shares
In all these little human cares,
This mighty King of kings!
If he who guides through boundless space
Each blazing planet in its place,
Can have the condescending grace
To mind these petty things!

It seems to me, if sure of this,
Silent with each ill would come such bliss
That I might covet pain,
And deem whatever brought to me
The loving thought of Deity,
And sense of Christ's sweet sympathy,
Not loss, but richest gain.

Dear Lord, my heart shall no more doubt
That thou dost compass me about
With sympathy divine;
The love for me once crucified
Is not the love to leave my side,
But waileth ever to divide
Each smallest care of mine.

The Transforming Power of Love.

"Everyone that loveth is born of God."—1 John iv. 7

Paul describes the regenerate state by saying: "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost;" and prayed that the Ephesian Christians, "being rooted and grounded in love, might be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ." The regenerate life, as expressed in that first great law so early in the history of our race, repeated so often and enforced by our Lord, is thus told: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God." These Scriptures mean that the Holy Ghost, the regenerating agent, does this wonderful work by implanting in the soul love for God, which, thus "shed abroad in the heart," transforms it. Love is the great transforming power.

In German folk-lore there are stories of a species of water nymphs called Undines, who were supposed to be bright, sportive creatures utterly void of souls. Baron De La-Mott Fouque wrote a story, which has become a classic, in which an Undine is the heroine, who, being brought to love a handsome young knight, becomes invested with a soul, and hence, like human beings, immortal. The old myth has hidden behind it a grand truth: Love is a transforming power. One of the first English poets sang:

"Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all sordid baseness doth expel,
And the refined mind doth newly fashion
Unto a fairer form."

We have seen the truth exemplified; we have seen the hard, sin-seared man softened to gentleness of manner and delicacy of feeling by the love awakened in his heart by a lovely woman who had come into his life. We have seen a baby soften hearts to tenderness by kindling love in them. Many a childless pair have been wonderfully drawn to each other into a sweet and hitherto unknown alchemy of hearts by the coming of a babe to the home. It is the commonest fact of married life that husband and wife, at first totally unlike in life and utterly variant in thought and purpose, grow like each other as the years go on until both are completely transformed. Love transforms. Selfishness, the commonest ugliness of fallen humanity, fades before love like a moving mist before the risen sun.

"Love took up the harp of life, and smote on all its chords with might—Smote the chord of self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight."

In Greek mythology we find the myth of Psyche, which has in it a still higher meaning than the legend of Undine. Psyche was a beautiful girl who loved the god Cupid, and who by this love became a goddess. Her love of a god lifted her to the plane of deity. The old myth means that our love of God will make us God like. It is a glorious truth taught in the Word of God. It was God's original purpose that men should be like him—he made them so. Sin has obliterated much of the God-likeness, and Christ died that it might be restored. "God is love," says John; and when love is kindled in a soul, it is the burning of the God-likeness there: and as love increases more and more, the soul grows more and more into the divine image. Thus the lost image is restored.

To more thoroughly understand how it is that love can so transform a human soul, let it be remembered that in all ages and everywhere love has stood for all that is sweet and beautiful and high and holy. It is a fact that needs no proving that men and women whose thoughts and hearts take in that which is true and beautiful, sweet and holy, will be lifted in life, and ennobled in thought, and purified in soul. It must be so, then, that love is the great transforming power, and God uses it to transform human souls to the lordly regenerate life.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

The District Question.

As a preacher of the North Mississippi Conference, who favors larger districts, I have been meditating an article giving the arguments in favor of that policy, apart from any personalities. But Bro. Q. A. Oats has saved me that work, and given the argument more clearly and strongly than I could have done, and has also given his observation of the working of the two systems. I am sure that those who favor larger districts will be satisfied to rest the case on Bro. Oats' argument. As to the personal element of the discussion, I desire to say I have watched the articles in reply to Bro. J. B. Streater, and am surprised at both the tone and arguments of most of them. Not one has touched the main argument of Bro. Streater's letter. Some of his statements were a little unguarded and extreme, but that does not justify the censure which has been heaped upon him. In statecraft a man is entitled to have the mildest construction placed on his utterances, and surely in the church brethren should be guided by the same law.

Bro. Streator's life for thirty years has been one of constant and unswerving loyalty to the church as an organization, and to the preachers individually. The presiding elders and pastors all have always found a good, true friend in Bro. Streater, and he is, and always has been, at the command of the church.

I am surprised at my good Bro. Bachman, who has known Bro. Streater for years. He puts in his article, of Oct. 22, statements from letters of private correspondents which should not have gone into print. One statement like this: "One brother, in eminent position, writes me thus: 'Bro. Streater presents himself in a light never before seen by some of us. We thought him to be a kind, careful, conservative man, but not so now.'"

This does Bro. Streater an injustice, as Bro. Bachman knows, and every other preacher who is acquainted with him. If Bro. Streater is not kind, he is unkind; if he is not conservative, he is an extremist; and if he is not careful, he is careless. I don't think that any preacher who knows Bro. Streater would accuse him of casting an adverse reflection on any preacher intentionally. Any one reading the articles against him would think him guilty of a "monstrous" crime of disloyalty, simply because he is in favor of reducing the number of districts in the Conference. And why all this adverse and, in some instances, severe criticism? Simply because some of Bro. Streater's expressions have had the worst possible construction placed on them. Instead of construing his article in the light of his past life, and his devotion to the church and her ministry, knowing he is writing as a friend, they have been construed as though written by a relentless enemy.

Let's try this method on Bro. Bachman. In his article, of Oct. 22, after defining with some particularity the work of a presiding elder, he says, "In all of which most of our presiding elders are faithful and diligent." Then, by the method of construction used on Bro. Streater, some of them are unfaithful and indolent. Who are the derelict ones? If he does not care to call names, let him say how many. But, no; Bro. Bachman does not mean to make any such charge, and we do not so construe his letter, but simply desire to call attention to what can be done by putting an extreme, though logical, construction on words as they appear in cold type.

It is a fact the M. E. Church, South, is paying more money for supervision than any other church under the sun, and the small-district idea is for increasing the expense of supervision. The increased facilities for travel every way make it possible for a presiding elder to reach all the appointments on larger districts. The hardness of the times, and the money needed in the foreign mission fields, make this a time to economize. The brethren on the poorer charges in this Conference who work hard to raise the collection, and then not get, many times, more than half the assessments, will not be caught by the small-district idea. If men in the M. E. Church are filling districts of 60 to 80 charges, and reaching the ends in view, it is not unreasonable or a "monstrous idea" to say that a man in this Conference can fill a district of 18 or 20 charges. If the money saved in having a less number of districts is not turned into other channels, it will be because the presiding elders and preachers in charge fail to do their duty. It is a fact that the M. E. Church pays three times as much money per capita to foreign missions, with larger districts, as we do with small districts.

The Presiding-Elder Question.

Like Bro. Streater, I have no desire to enter into a public discussion of any subject; but, like him, I have something to say on the number of presiding elders' districts in the North Mississippi Conference. But, unlike him, I would not have them reduced to eight, or seven, but increased to ten. This because it would bring the work of the presiding elders into lines of possibility of doing something. As they are now, they have too much to do. When a man's job is too big for him, if he gets it done at all, it will be poorly done. Our presiding elders' visits are flying visits; not much more than to ask how are you all getting on, take the collection for the Bishops' fund, and then, "Good-bye; I must go to my next Quarterly Conference." His visits to us are like that of a hawk to a barnyard (whether he gets a chicken or not); he don't stay long enough for you to get acquainted with him; he can't. We want him more like the congenial house cat when he pays our cats a visit, set up by the fire familiar-like, and purr and wash his face, making himself one of them. Better still, we would have him come like the April rain, free and refreshing, or like the May sunshine, warm and enlivening.

Most of the presiding elders have twenty charges in their districts. How can their visits be anything more than to merely pass by and go on. No, we want the districts reduced to twelve charges; then we can have a Saturday and Sunday to each Quarterly Conference, and besides have three or four good sermons by the presiding elder (They will be good, for then he will be able to make them good), as well as a good push on the collections. All this he could not do with a district of twenty charges. Thus he would be able to strengthen the work along all the lines. What we want is more preachers, more preaching and better preaching. No one but a circuit rider can have an adequate idea of the good of a visit from the presiding elder. These visits do the preacher good; they do the people good. Like a refreshing shower in time of a drouth, it starts new life in vegetation. So does the presiding elder's visit to his country charges put new life into the church of God. Then let us have not fewer of these visits, but more of them.

I am not afraid of the presiding elder. I would like to be with him often; more often than I get to under present arrangements.

Bro. Streater said something about breaking down the office of the presiding elder by multiplying its occupants beyond its present needs, or actual needs. Now, it is not a multiplicity of occupants breaking down the office of the presiding elder, but a lack of them. The complaint among the people is not that there are too many presiding elders, nor is it that he comes too often, but not enough. "I would not mind to pay the presiding elder, if I could hear him preach more," say they. And this has been the complaint in all the charges that I have ever served.

Now, how can he go among the people more and preach more unless you make it possible for him to do so? And how can you make it possible without making his district smaller? And how can you make the districts smaller without making more districts?

But if we must have twenty-charge districts, then make the presiding elder's salary that he can travel with his family; for if you do not, he will be as if he had no family, and they as if they had no husband and father, so far as his presence with them is concerned. A Methodist preacher loves his wife and children as much as any other man loves his, and loves as much to be in their society. Bro. Streater, I suppose, is with his family at least every night. How would he like to go on a presiding elder's district of twenty charges, and only see his family once or twice a month? I am sure he would not for any small amount of money. I know that preachers have higher things in view for their self-sacrifice than money; but they must have some money, enough to bear their expenses and support their families; and the more you put on them, the more it takes to sustain them. No one says now that the presiding elder is getting more than he ought to have unless it is Bro. Streater. Then if you put twenty charges on him, you must raise his salary from $1,028.65 to something like $2,000, for certainly you would not increase a man's work without raising wages, for that would be mean as the Egyptians. Then where would be your saving? More money paid out and less work done.

Now, what is the sensible thing to do? Why, decrease the size of the presiding elders' districts and give them a chance to do better work with more comfort to themselves and better satisfaction to the church and people.

Now, as to Bro. Streater's errors, they have been refuted and corrected by Dr. Sullivan and Bro. Poe and Bro. Cameron. E. H. ROOK.

"The Sickness of Ziunne."

Some, perhaps many, of your readers will remember an article under the above caption written by Dr. B. Carradine, then of New Orleans, a dozen or more years ago. The Doctor knew that "Ziunne" was sick, but seemed to be in some doubt as to her exact place of abode. He and others may think that she has either recovered or died. So I want to exclaim, "Eureka," for truly after all these years I have found her. Indeed, she is so very ill that save for an occasional pulsation of her feeble heart you would pronounce her already dead. With eyes closed and hands folded, she lies in a trance continually, and unless she can in some way be aroused death must be the inevitable result. So cold is she in every member that even the extreme heat of this passing year has failed to warm her, except perhaps a little on the surface.

She has never been without a physician. On the contrary, "she has suffered many things of many physicians;" and if we may judge by her symptoms, has "been nothing bettered," but rather "grows worse." Occasionally the physician in attendance will call in a brother physician, and together they will, as Mrs. L. Crary Sadler prescribed for her, "walk her about." They get her so warmed up that nearly every member will respond to every call and she gives promise of speedy recovery; but so weak is she that unless she has extra assistance and care, she can not walk or even stand alone, so after each warming she becomes colder than ever before. Some of her members have been babes ten, twenty and even thirty years perhaps. They have lived on the milk of the Word so long their digestion is so weak that only a very few of them can take a little meat minus salt. You may judge from the above that she is in a sad condition, and you will confer a great favor on her if you will insert in your valuable paper the following notice:

WANTED,

A PHYSICIAN FOR ZIUNNE.

Must come well recommended and dressed with due regard for style. Must be willing to prescribe regulary and promptly, whether his patient accepts his prescriptions or not; that must be left entirely to her discretion. Prescriptions must not be too long. No drug must be employed therein unpleasant to the taste. Only such "yarbs" as Ziunne thinks she ought to have, not such as the physician thinks she needs, will be allowed. He must be willing to prescribe at least three-fourths of the year before the first payment, which is always small, falls due; and in no case must he differ with his patient concerning the nature of her malady. Should she insist that she is burning up while he knows she is freezing, he must allow her to be the judge, for notwithstanding Ziunne is sick unto death, she is very particular as to the kind of physician she employs. She'd rather he had a help-meet from the angelic host. Applications should be sent in at once to the presiding elder of the —— district. Name furnished on application.

Consecration.

Submission is a strong word, consecration still stronger. Surrender is a cessation of resistance, consecration a transfer of all we have and are to Christ for active service. It covers person and property, talents and opportunities, and accepts of Christ as leader, manager, friend, and Savior, present, active, efficient in all the minutiæ of life. There are degrees of consecration, and even entire consecration is progressive, for new interests, cares, burdens, capacities, opportunities rise and wait disposal, and Christ is revealed in new relations, making new demands, offering new privileges, and these await trustful acceptance, so that ever and anon the proposition to devote all to Christ claims fresh attention. Many commit spiritual interests to his care, and worry on alone with temporal concerns; they trust him to save their souls, but hesitate to ask his aid in business; accept daily grace, but doubt respecting daily bread; rejoice in Christ as a Savior, but fail to apprehend him as a brother, companion, present, constant friend. Consecration is not absolutely perfect until the fullness of our Lord is perceived and received, and the fullness of life is devoted to him, for every relation of Christ calls for new devotion from us. The consecration must be as broad as the apprehension, covering the fullness of Christ and the fullness of man.—Times of Refreshing.

A Noble Discontent.

No superintendent has a right to be perfectly satisfied with the work done in his school. The moment he becomes satisfied, that moment he ceases to grow, and his school ceases to improve. He should be filled with a noble discontent. This does not imply lack of appreciation of the good, but simply a worthy desire to make it better. His aspirations for the school should be the very highest and best. "The good is the enemy of the best." Nothing is good enough that is not the best. Especially is this true of Christian work. There should not be any unholy ambition in the heart of any superintendent to have his school better than that of his neighbor simply, but he should strive to make it in every respect the very best possible in every department and feature of the work.—International Evangel.

God's call, then, is not to be simply a factor in the world, but to be a humble-minded, yet active, benefactor, remembering that, after all, he is the truest helper of his fellows who by any means puts into the world a bit more of spiritual life and power than it had before. The man who tears with his money the walls of an asylum which shelters the outcast does a good deed, as does he who founds a college or who makes a good book. And yet all those lines of activity have not that reach of influence or that solidity of result which attends the efforts of him who, though mayhap poor, imparts, as did Paul, a "spiritual gift" to the world, bringing into its sordid life a breath from the higher spheres and a fresher thought from the mind of God.—The Observer.

Koble has a hymn in which he intimates that the "trivial round" and the "common task" of life will furnish all one may reasonably desire in the way of opportunity for self-denial and advancing in nearness to the Father. This never seemed to me to be quite true. But it is true that the "trival round" and the "common task" may be illuminated, and ought to be, with the thought that God can be served in them, and that these small activities can be made a means of grace to the soul. Such a thought sanctifies the "round" and the "task," and they are no longer "trivial" and "common."—Rev. F. A. Noble, D. D.

Our influence as Christians will be in exact proportion to what we really are. Botanists tell us that there are some trees the spread of whose branches above ground is in exact proportion to the trend of their roots under ground. I do not know of what trees this may be true, but of this I am sure—that our influence with our fellow-men in public will always be in exact proportion to the depth of our hidden life with God in secret.

Mrs. J. S. Parker, president First Church Auxiliary, Jackson: "Thanks for your kindly repeated invitation to contribute something to our column. A lack of anything of special interest to your readers has heretofore kept me silent.

"I know you will be pleased to hear of the organization of another W. F. M. S. in Jackson. The 'North End Auxiliary' was organized a week or so since, with about fifteen members as a nucleus—others to follow, we believe. It has in it as fine material as can be found anywhere, including such names as Annie Linfield and Mrs. T. B. Holloman—the former president and the latter treasurer.

"No doubt you will hear good reports from this society in the future.

"Capitol Street Auxiliary held a public meeting Sunday evening last, which, I hear, was interesting and instructive. They are a wide-awake, earnest band of workers—one of the best to be found in the Conference. I do not think Mrs. T. S. West has a superior as a consecrated, conscientious, clear-headed president. You may depend on Capitol Street Auxiliary doing its duty.

"Our own auxiliary at the First Church has a membership of 60 or more, with a good average attendance at the monthly meetings. We are moving along well, I think.

"There are many 'elect ladies' in the society—ladies of long experience, and full of zeal and ardor. The membership includes the names of two of our Conference officers, Miss Addie Purnell and Mrs. A. F. Watkins, and that of our new district secretary, Mrs. R. R. Parker.

"In a few weeks the 'law of limitation' in our church will deprive us of the sweet presence and services of Mrs. A. F. Watkins. For three years she was the beloved president of the auxiliary, and the present incumbent feels how inadequately she supplies her place.

"We have recently sent a box of clothing to our bright Mexican girl, Miciala Lea Fuenta. She writes hopefully of her future work for the Master.

"We hope for a visit from Mrs. Truehart and Mrs. Butler on their return from Mexico, and that their visit will infuse new life into the work in our city.

"Here, as elsewhere, the great unsolved problem still stares us in the face, of how to get the rank and file of the membership to attend the monthly meetings, and, in a word, to measure up to their full duty and privilege.

"When that great question is answered, and every woman stands in her divinely appointed lot, then we may expect the millennial glory to begin to dawn."

Miss Mary Andrews, Conference treasurer: "We have now 314 subscribers, and in cash $60.10 on McNemar fund. The other collections are coming in as usual."

Mrs. S. G. Weems, secretary, Vicksburg district: "Let me know at once if your auxiliary would like to have a visit from Mrs. Campbell, missionary from China. You would have to pay her expenses to and from your village. She is now in North Mississippi. We want to arrange for her to travel through the district, and stir up our societies."

From reports of Mrs. Truehart, September and October, new adult auxiliaries: "Union Chapel, Martinsville, 21 members; Brandon, 17 members; Wellman Church, 7 members and 3 honorary members."

Training-school, June, July, August: Miss Addie Purnell, $10; Miss Mary Andrews, treasurer, $53.76.

Treasurers of auxiliaries should not fail to furnish pastors with reports in readiness for their Annual Conference report.

We trust that agents for Woman's Missionary Advocate and Little Worker will use all diligence in efforts for securing new subscribers and renewals. Oh, that everyone, especially the women, would read the October number of the Woman's Missionary Advocate! How could they resist the temptation to become subscribers! Much can be said in praise of the Little Worker. It is enjoyed by the old as well as the young. MRS. E. D. JONES.

Indian Mission.

SAVE IT, OR LOSE IT. WHICH?

Please publish the enclosed letter with thie, and very mnch oblige; and Bro. Cammack will please excnse me for having it published. Now, we mnst pay for the land or lose it. Which will we do? We can not blame Bro. Tinsley, for he has certainly waited lorg and patiently. Now he says he mnst have his money or the land back. We ought to have paid him long ago. I have written and begged nntil I am almost ashamed to say anything more. The mission has certainly been a grand snccess so far. Many sonls have been saved by the faithful missionary. We have them all right if we will only do onr duty.

Well, now to lose the land, our money already paid, and our work would be almost lost. Shall we lose it? No, snrely not. Well, but we will if we do not come to the rescue now. A right smart from a few, or a little from the many, and we can pay it off. A large part of the money I have raised has gone on salary of missionary. We have paid, as you will see in Bro. Cammack's letter, $225, and we yet owe about $150, or thereabout.

Now, brethren and sisters, please come to the rescne, and at once. Send it to me. Send postoffice order on Hermanville or registered letter to me at Hermanville, or hand it to your pastor to be handed to me at Conference, Dec. 2, at Port Gibson. Now, please do not forget this matter. Send all you can and let us pay the debt off.

Yonr brother in hope of the salvation of the Indians and all the people, A. D. MILLER.

Hermanville, Miss., Nov. 3, 1896.

Rev. A. D. Miller—

DEAR BROTHER: I met Bro. Tinsley a few days ago in Meridian, the man from whom we bought the land for the Indian Church and school, and he said that he would give us until Christmas to finish paying for the land, and if not paid for by that time he would have to take it back. This would be almost a death-blow to our mission among the Indians at Talichulok, for some of them have built houses on this land, others expect to build, and others still have cleared and fenced portions of the land, and then we wonld lose all that we have paid, which is about $225. This is too much money for the church to lose, and besides lose the property, which is now worth about $500. I know you have written much upon the subject, and worked hard to have this debt canceled, and you know I have done something in this direction, and now it seems that we must lose the land and, perhaps, lose onr hold on the Indians. I hope and pray that some way will be provided by which we may yet pay off this debt, hold the property, and save the Indians. Oh! that some generous heart would come to our relief in this hour of great peril. W. W. CAMMACK.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Ira B. Robertson, P. C., Gallman, Miss., Oct. 30: "We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Gallman. We had Bros. T. L. Mellen, of Wesson, and J. J. Smylie, of Terry, to assist ns in the meeting. They both did snccessful service for the Master. Gallman charge is advancing along all lines."

Rev. J. F. Evans, P. C, Vaiden, Miss., Nov. 4: "On last Sunday, Nov. 1, our beautiful little chnrch at Kilmichael, Miss., was set apart wholly to the service of the living God. The sermon was preached by Rev. Amos Kendall, of Aberdeen. He must have been at his best. The sermon was, in style, thonghtful, sympathetic, elevating and comforting. It was delivered in an easy, graceful manner and in fine spirit, giving universal satisfaction, setting forth the fact that our God is a living God, our religion only real and that more of our people wonld attend these institutes. Much good would be the result.

Bogue Chitto claims about six hundred inhabitants, and seems to be a prosperous little town. They threw open their doors and welcomed us in their homes. Our recollections of Bogue Chitto dnring onr stay there will always be pleasant. Such kindness shown by them to the servants of God will not lose its reward. May the blessings of onr heavenly Father continnally rest npon the good people of Bogue Chitto! W.

PLAQUEMINE BRULEE, LA.

Please allow me space in the ADVOCATE to tell its readers of a wonderful revival meeting held at this place. It commenced on Oct 11, and has been rnnning for nearly three weeks. The meeting was held in the new chnrch. I can assure you it is a perfect beauty and a monument to this part of the Lord's vineyard, this being the first revival meeting held in it. The meeting proved to be a success from the beginning. The meeting is conducted by Rev. J. S. Sanders, pastor in charge. Bro. Sanders is a Holy Ghost preacher. His style is plain, earnest and fearless. He preaches in the power of the Spirit, and the Lord honors the Word as it is preached by this godly man. Among the preachers that assisted in the meeting were Revs. T K. Faunt LeRoy, W. W. Drake, M. C. Manly, W. J. Porter, S. H. Whatley and N. Z. Sayers. Among the lay workers were F. Hoffpauir and wife, Sister Sanders, Sister Rasberry and Bro. Staples, and a few other consecrated workers. They did good service in the singing and aronnd the altar.

It was estimated that there were about 50 professions. Probably half of these were sanctifications. Up to date 28 have joined the church. The attendance was good, and the people came from all parts of the country and would fill up the chnrch to overflowing at times. We had a testimony meeting, and as many as 50 testified to the saving and sanctifying power of God. I can assure you there was a great shaking up at Plaquemine Brulee.

Last Sunday there were three collections taken up—two at the morning service, and one at the night service. In spite of the hard times the congregation responded cheerfully to each appeal that was made by their beloved pastor. The collection taken up at night was to clear off a debt on the new church, which was $80, and more than enough was raised to cover the debt.

I will say again that the church is a perfect beauty and a monument to Plaquemine Brulee. All it needs now is to be painted inside. Pewed, it will seat from 300 to 350 people. The old church was torn down and a great deal of the lumber was as sonnd as a nut, and some of it was used on the new church. They tell me that the old church was built more than 45 years ago. Its sills are 12x12, and they are cypress, and just as sound as the day they were put there. While laboring here five of us brethren went to work, with Bro. Sanders in the lead, and used some of the old chnrch sills to put under the old parsonage. The old house is pretty good yet; only the pillars that it sat on had almost rotted away. We got to work with a few bedscrews and raised it np, and in a short time we had the old parsonage resting on a solid fonndation.

The meeting is still going on, and much good is being accomplished. Rev. N. Z. Sayers and myself will leave here in a day or so to go and help Bro. Whatley in a meeting to be held at Prudhomme City (D. V). Pray for victory there.

E. A. VAIL.

Dr. Cuyler, writing on power in the pulpit, says: "The most effective achievements of the pulpit are reached when the preacher has received the fullest baptism of love, and when all thought of self is swallowed up in the glory that surrounds the cross of Calvary. A blood earnest preacher may atone for the lack of great talents or great scholarship, or the graces of elocution, by the momentum of his intense convictions of the truth, and his intense yearnings for the salvation of sonls. Great preaching has always been heart preaching."

PREACHERS' INSTITUTE AT BOGUE CHITTO.

It was our privilege to attend the Preachers' Institute of the Brookhaven district, which convened at Bogue Chitto, Oct. 27-29.

We found that Bro. Backns had made ample preparations for entertaining the institute. Conveyance was waiting at the depot upon our arrival to take the preachers to their homes.

At 7 P. M Bro. Rawls preached an excellent sermon, Bro Boone being absent. Promptly at 9 A. M, Wednesday morning, the institute began with devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Robert Havers, with E H. Mounger, our presiding elder, in the chair, conducting the institute with his usual ease and dignity.

Only about twelve of the twenty-three ministers in the district were in attendance. So many being absent caused the "leaving off" of several very important themes that were on the programme for discussion. This we regret very much, as we had hoped to get some light on two of them especially. However, two of the preachers, who were compelled to be absent sent in their papers, which were read before the institute by the secretary.

The pulpit was ably filled morning and evening by Bros. Cooper, Burton and Morse. Notwithstanding that so many were absent, we had a very pleasant and profitable session. Those who did not go do not know what they missed.

One feature was distinctly noticeable—that is, the good attendance not only upon the preaching, but through the morning and evening sessions of the institute. They were not only prompt in attendance; quite a number would gather in before all the preachers had assembled, but they also manifested a lively interest in the discussions of the institute. As these discussions are of vital importance to our Methodism, we

An umbrella of perfect digestion will keep off the shower of disease germs that is constantly falling. If digestion is rapid and thorough, the germs will not stay long enough in the body to make very much trouble. When the digestive action is sluggish, when the bowels do not act, and poisonous, effete matter is retained in the system, there is every chance for the development of all sorts of sickness. The blood becomes impure, and all the distressing symptoms of indigestion are apparent. Constipation causes biliousness, sour stomach, flatulency, heart-burn, dyspepsia, headache, foul taste in the mouth, sleep without rest, and many other distressing symptoms. It can be cured—simply, easily, quickly and permanently by using Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. One little "Pellet," is a gentle laxative, and two, a mild cathartic. They are sold by most druggists, and no honest druggist will attempt to sell you a substitute. There is nothing else in the world that has the same action as the "Pleasant Pellets." They are absolutely natural in their work, do not gripe, nor cause any other unpleasant symptoms.

Dr. Pierce's great book, "The Common Sense Medical Adviser," tells people how to keep well. It is a large, handsome, 1000 page, illustrated volume, and is a complete medical library in itself. It has had a greater sale, at its regular price of $1.50 per volume, than any other medical work that was ever published. It is now offered, paper-covered, absolutely free to any one who will send 21 one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only. Those who would like to have the book in French cloth covers, should send ten cents extra (thirty-one cents in all) to pay the extra cost of this more handsome and durable binding.
